WHAT really happened? Why did 36 states enact anti-union measures in five years? Why do we have a Taft-Hartley Act today?

The "case against labor" was built up skillfully during the war, when any union fight for simple justice was painted as an unpatriotic act.

The unions did a good job of erasing this false picture among the men who came home from the war and went to work in industrial plants.

But they didn't convince the farmers—especially in those states where the rural districts control the legislatures.

And union members remained away from the polls in droves in too many of the predominately industrial districts.

So the nation got a crop of lawmakers who either believed that unions needed curbing or were willing to vote for anti-labor measures simply because their principal support came from business.

THE time for kidding ourselves is long past. We can't kid ourselves out of the present situation.

Business and industry are in the same saddle and they're applying the spurs where it hurts.

Sure, they've already gone too far. The public is getting fed up with pretty speeches which bear almost no relation to the harsh economic facts of life.

Unionists, however, can't count entirely for success on the chance that what is now disapproval will become revulsion by the time the next elections roll around.

There's a simple, direct way for us to do the job. The only place it can be done is in the political field—and that means at the ballot box.

And at the ballot box a workman's vote counts for as much as a vote cast by an industrial tycoon.

AVC Sends Greetings To CIO Parley

CHAT PATTERSON, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee, has sent the following greeting to CIO Pres. Philip Murray:

"On behalf of the AVC I want to extend heartiest best wishes to the CIO as it prepares to hold its 1947 annual convention.

"During the past year, the AVC has had occasion to work closely with the CIO in campaigns to save the OPA, defeat the Taft-Hartley bill, and to secure veterans' housing. In the crucial years ahead I am sure that the AVC and the CIO can continue to work cooperatively towards the basic ideals of achieving a more democratic and prosperous America and a stable world.

"During the war there was much talk of a post-war antagonism between veterans and labor. I think it is to the credit of both labor and the veterans of World War II, not only that this antagonism has not developed, but that instead there is an increasing feeling of mutual interest and cooperation between these two great groups."

Hours Up; Injuries, Too

In one plant surveyed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics an increase in the work week from 40 to 48 hours increased the injury frequency rate by 50%.

What A Party! We Still Talk About It

IT was one of the darndest parties in history. It must have been, because it was staged 174 years ago and folks are still talking about it.

A group of white men dressed themselves up like Indians and slipped quietly toward the waterfront one night. They climbed aboard some British ships, seized their cargo of tea and heaved it into the harbor.

Historians, writing about the event in later years, used much more dignified language and they called the one-night demonstration the Boston Tea Party.

The party wasn't staged because the men wanted to celebrate a happy event, but because they were angry.

THOSE were hectic days—days of race and religious prejudice—days of oppression.

Things hadn't been going well for a long time, and they got worse along about 1765, when the Stamp Act was put into effect.

That's when folks started shouting, "No taxation without representation," and they meant what they said.

The going got really rough five years later. British soldiers were stoned by a group of men and boys. The soldiers fired into the crowd. Five were killed and several others wounded.

Historians call that skirmish the Boston Massacre.

THREE years after the shooting took place the famous tea party was staged.

By this time Boston was becoming accustomed to unusual things. It already was an "old" city because, after all, it had been founded in 1630.

And then in April, 1704, John Campbell published in Boston the first copy of the first newspaper printed in the United States.

Stormy days were ahead—days during which blood was spilled because men were willing to die for liberty and freedom.

They wanted independence and they were willing to pay a high price for it.

IT was as much by chance as by design that meeting in Boston today is another group of angry men—men who want to kick off shackles that limit their freedom.

They're the chosen representatives of more than 6,000,000 American workers—men and women who make up the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

They want to get rid of the Taft-Hartley Act because they believe it is unfair and unduly restrictive. They believe it is designed to weaken or destroy the democratic trade union movement.

And they know that democracy has had a habit of disappearing where unions were destroyed.

THE Bostonians decided to heave tea into their harbor, and they did.

The CIO wants to toss into political retirement those who put the Taft-Hartley Act on the statute books. Passage of time will reveal whether this is accomplished.

This parallel is not at all far-fetched. The tea party lads believed they were being pushed around. The CIO boys feel the same way.

The Stamp Act, against which the Bostonians were rebelling, was merely part of a pattern of oppression designed to limit freedom and impose harsh legal burdens.

The T-H Act is only part of a pattern drawn by men who favor the classes over the masses—men who want restrictions placed on nearly everything except themselves and their pet projects.

Advice to Radio:

THE following editorial, "Controversy on the Air," appeared in the Washington Post:

"From the point of view of a democracy's long-range welfare, the airing of controversy may be regarded as radio's most important function. For it is through ideological conflict and discussion that the democratic process operates. Radio has an immensely valuable job to do, of course, as an entertainment medium.

"It is capable, however, of such tremendous usefulness as an instrument of information and education—is so necessary, indeed, to the enlightenment of public opinion—that a goodly portion of its time ought to be devoted to controversial subjects as a matter of public service.

"There is some recognition of this responsibility in the new code of standards proposed for the radio industry at the recent Atlantic City convention of the National Association of Broadcasters.

"HAPPILY, this code makes no mention of what used to be an industry stipulation—that time for controversy should not be sold but merely given away in accordance with the discretion and generosity of the broadcasters.

"This resulted in minimizing controversy, it being manifestly more profitable and less troublesome to sell time for commercially sponsored entertainment programs than to donate it to discussion that might offend some listeners.

"It resulted also, of course, in enabling management to voice its point of view as a by-product of sales talk, while often keeping labor silent. Indeed, the NAB code manual went so far at one time as to declare that any program sponsored by a labor organization was to be considered controversial by the mere fact of its sponsorship.

"Labor has a legitimate complaint, we think, about a restriction in the proposed new code. The complaint has already been voiced by Allan L. Swim, publicity director of the CIO. 'No dramatizations of controversial issues should be permitted,' the proposed code declares.

"Swim argues, on the other hand, that labor should be allowed to tell its story over the radio with the same techniques that commercial advertisers use to sell their goods. These are techniques of proven effectiveness, and it seems to us that forbidding them in connection with controversy will necessarily result in making controversial programs less interesting.

"Dramatization, as the CIO demonstrated in its weekly program, 'Labor—USA' can give an idea impact and illumination. Radio ought not to rob disputants of this legitimate aid to influence or audiences of any extra enjoyment that it may give."

Weighty

It's the scales salesman. For, most of the existing scales compute prices from 1½ cents a pound to 75 cents. But, with prices soaring far above that, particularly in meat, scales outfits are plugging a new weigher that registers up to $1.70 a pound.

Enterprising

The Home Builders Association of Cincinnati invited leading citizens on a bus tour of the suburbs. It wanted to show them how private enterprise is solving the housing shortage.

Here is what happened:

1. The battery blew out.
2. A new bus was sent out to replace the crippled vehicle.
3. The new bus became mired in deep mud on one of the project sites.
4. A truck attached a chain and tried to pull the bus out of the mud. The chain broke four times.

Finally, a heavier chain did the job and the bus completed the tour. Newspapers reported that houses are going up all right. Prices are up too, up to $52,000.

Labor on 'Varsity'

The first university periodical devoted exclusively to labor-management relations comes off the press in a short time. Published by the N. Y. State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell U., the first issue of the new journal will include articles by Undersecretary of Labor David A. Morse, professors at Harvard and other eastern universities, as well as economists for several large international unions.

PUT PROFITS BEFORE HOUSING PROGRAM

NOT a single progressive measure was enacted by Congress during the past year to remedy one of the Nation's most acute problems — the housing shortage—states Pres. Murray's report to the CIO Convention.

After Wilson Wyatt resigned as Housing Expediter because his program was scrapped, the "Government began behaving as if the housing emergency was over," says the report of the Committee on Housing. CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas is chairman of the committee.

Wyatt's program which had the strong backing of the CIO, among other things, advocated industrialized housing, or the production of housing material in factories with mass-production techniques similar to those used in heavy industries.

By the end of 1947, the report points out, instead of the nearly three million housing units which Wyatt proved were needed just to provide emergency shelter for homeless veterans, only 1,700,000 at the most will be started.

Among the measures recommended by the CIO housing program are:

Support for cooperative housing programs.

Government aid to private builders where feasible, and direct government production of housing where necessary. ("We favor any enterprise, public, private, or mutual—that increases the supply of adequate housing at low cost," states the report).

An all-out attack by the government on the housing cost problem by the reinstitution of the program of aid to manufacturers of factory-built houses advocated by former Housing Expediter Wyatt.

Congress' Failure

the "best possible lobbyists" for their own cause, he pointed out.

" . . . Great number of working men and women came to understand more clearly the dangers that must be overcome in the 1948 elections," the CIO president told the convention.

THE legislative report included reviews of anti-labor legislation—the T-H law and the Wage-Hour Amendments; social welfare proposals, on which little action was accomplished; civil rights bills; fiscal policies; federal aid to education; and veterans' legislation.

Of the last item, Murray commented:

"For the first time in some 15 years, a Congress of the United States has enacted a legislative program which, in the balance, is clearly antagonistic to veterans' interests."

Despite "some pretense of concern" over veterans' rights, no proposed measure affecting the problems which most severely affect the vets was acted upon. On questions affecting income ceilings, for vets getting on-the-job or apprentice training, and on aid for GI Students no help was voted by Congress.

MURRAY flayed the alibi used by many Congressmen during the T-H campaign that the bill was "mild" and "desired by the public."

"Events have already begun to show the severity of the new Law, and recent public opinion polls have clearly demonstrated that a majority of the population considers the bill unwise and unwarranted," he said.

The CIO head asserted that the nation's press had obscured the dangers of the wage-hour amendments and had sought to pass them off merely as aimed at portal-portal pay suits.

Murray charged that the real estate lobby was largely to blame for failure to pass permanent housing legislation like the Taft-Wagner-Ellender bill and for weakening rent control extension. He described as "regrettable" the action of Congress in softening up the rent control law.

Failure to lift minimum wages from 40 cents to a more realistic 65-75 cent rate was a most scandalous chapter in the Congress's do-nothing record," Murray reported. Adoption of bills offered by Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.) and others would help the lowest-paid workers and serve "as protection against sweatshop practices and unfair competition in the event of a depression," he said.

Action on health insurance legislation is another "must," Pres. Murray indicated. Noting that CIO has supported S. 1320 introduced by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), the CIO president charged that a substitute proposal offered by Sen. Taft and favored by many conservative groups "is a charity measure lacking the broad coverage and range" of Sen. Murray's bill.

Only bright spot on the civil liberties scene, Murray noted, was passage by the House of the anti-polltax bill, aimed at ending the voting bar in federal elections in seven southern states. Anti-lynching and anti-discrimination bills made little progress during the session.

THE Rees bill, designed to devise new "loyalty" checks for government employes, came in for biting condemnation from Pres. Murray.

"This measure would set up a special super-agency vested with virtually arbitrary and complete powers to dismiss government employes without proof of any charges against them and without any opportunity to them for any kind of fair hearing of the charges," he said.

"Fortunately, up to the time of adjournment, wiser council prevailed in the Senate and no action was taken on this bill."

Murray described as "sinister" the various legislative efforts to amend the tax laws to aid the wealthy. At the same time he lashed out at the "dictatorial" chairman of the House Appropriations Committee — Rep. John Taber (R. N. Y.).

"Throughout the session, Taber attempted—with all too frequent success—to determine both legislative and executive policy through arrogant contol of appropriations," Murray declared.

ECONOMICS A MAJOR CIO ENDEAVOR; WORLD RECOVERY HIGH ON MUST LIST

THE CIO was active since the Atlantic City convention in many aspects of the national and international economy, Pres. Murray reveals.

The President's Report to the Convention divides these activities into six sections: "Our Economy," "Distribution of War Assets," "Taxation," "Guaranteed Minimum Annual Wage," "Dept. of Research and Education" and "Full Employment Committee."

The reports:

FULL EMPLOYMENT: Murray is chairman of this committee, with Vice Pres. Emil Rieve as administrative chairman. The committee has "worked in developing CIO economic policy and program. It has kept in close contact with the Council of Economic Advisers, set up by Pres. Truman under the watered-down Employment Act of 1946.

"The Full Employment Committee arranged to have representatives of CIO appear at hearings of the subcommittees of the Joint Congressional Committee in 22 cities."

RESEARCH AND EDUCATION: This department, under Kermit Eby, "has increased its services to CIO.

"Staff members testified before Congressional Committees on legislative matters and assisted in the preparation of testimonies. The 'Economic Outlook' has reported the gist of our research and studies.

"With the involving complications of our economy, more and more issues facing the CIO are economic in nature.

"We supported adequate appropriations for government research agencies, But, Congress slashed funds to levels that deliberately prevent the American people from having the information required for peaceful and just settlement of labor disputes and for effective formulation of public policy. To offset propaganda about falling labor effort, we have sought measurement of output per manhour and labor costs and have participated both in a conference on productivity and in a continuing committee to stimulate improved work in this difficult field."

The department's educational activities included the National Education Conference at Columbus, O., attended by 200 delegates. "A new departure," the report stated, "was the sponsoring of leadership to training schools in areas where international unions and regional councils have not run schools." The department also backed the Labor Extension Bill, "passage of which would greatly extend labor education services;" issued films, records and transcriptions and engaged in other educational activities.

GUARANTEED MINIMUM ANNUAL WAGE: "The need for security has been dramatically publicized by our demand for annual wages, and there has been growing recognition of our proposal. Unfortunately, employers have resisted our efforts.

"The Advisory Board to the Office or of War Mobilization and Reconversion, consisting of representatives of business, agriculture, labor and the public unanimously adopted strong approval of guaranteed wage plans."

The committee's report, prepared by Murray Latimer, "concludes that it would be desirable to amend state unemployment compensation laws to permit simultaneous receipt of unemployment benefits and payments by employers under guaranteed wage plans.

"Although guaranteed wage plans, even if negotiated successfully on a wide scale, cannot by themselves assure full employment, their establishment need not wait on permanent achievement of full employment.

"To achieve freedom from want, there must be provisions for steady and adequate incomes when workers are stricken by the hazards of unemployment, illness, accidents, premature death and old age."

OUR ECONOMY: "The economy has shown many encouraging signs during the year, particularly the realization of a peak of 60,000,000 gainfully employed and the achievement of the most productive peacetime economy in our history.

"Despite our best efforts, however, many weak spots have developed in the economy."

Murray listed those as the disappearance of wartime savings because of price rises, the soaring of prices ahead of wages, increased corporate profits, and the lack of an adequate housing program.

"Should there be a substantial decline in exports," the report went on, "it would mean some decline in production and employment, though the Bureau of Labor Statistics has estimated that it would not mean a corresponding decline. There is much talk of a dollar decline which eventually must result in a cut in exports.

"There is an even more serious threat that a hungry domestic market will divert needed exports for its own uses. Either we must continue a substantial imbalance or we will seriously jeopardize world recovery."

DISTRIBUTION OF WAR ASSETS: Ted F. Silvey was CIO member of the Labor Policy Committee of WAA. "Staff reductions made it extremely difficult to operate," says the report, but "in the past year, the Labor Committee has been concerned in 28 specific cases."

TAXATION: "The 80th Congress ran roughshod over the low income families of America in the attempted passage of a tax bill which gave almost all of the relief to the high income individuals who need it least." The Congress then sustained Pres. Truman's veto twice.

The CIO tax program includes: "increase in personal exemptions; drastic changes in excise taxes, which are hidden and indirect, with all excise taxes, others than regulatory ones on narcotics, firearms, etc., eliminated; tax relief for small corporations earning less than $50,000, with the present corporate rate of tax retained; reenactment of an excess profits tax on the same basis that existed during the war."

Rieve Accepts

EMIL RIEVE, vice president of the CIO, general president of the Textile Workers' Union and administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, has accepted appointment by President Truman to the Citizens' Advisory Council on Social Security:

Rieve's acceptance statement:

"I welcome this opportunity to serve on a committee the purpose of which is to suggest improvements in our social security program. The experience of the last ten years shows that there are wide gaps in the protections afforded by our Social Security Act, both in the extent and type of coverage.

"My hope is that the committee will spur action on such measures as health insurance.

"In accepting the appointment, I regret, however, that there are but two labor representatives of a committee of 17, as contrasted with six out of 24 on a similar committee in 1938."

More Social Security Will Make a Happier Nation

'Must Be Alert Against Efforts For Sham Social Security Plans'

PRES. MURRAY'S Report to the Convention blasts the 80th Congress for taking no steps "to improve our social security laws."

The CIO Committee on Social Security, headed by Van A. Bittner, has particularly emphasized the fact that the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill, covering health and disability, should be enacted.

Other recommendations listed by Murray:

"(1) A nation-wide system of unemployment insurance paying adequate benefits for a decent period of time. (The report criticized the 'conglomeration' of state laws on this subject).

"(2) A substantial rise in the present level of old age benefits and a reduction in retirement age. This level has been unchanged while the cost of living has moved upward."

"(3) The entire Social Security program must be made available to the many under-privileged groups now denied its protection."

In conclusion, the report said: "We must be particularly alert against efforts to thrust upon the Nation a set of sham revisions calculated to divert and confuse the rising demand for real progress in Social Security."

CIO Signed 280,000 Members 'Way Down South in Dixie

THE CIO has gained about 280,000 new members in the South in the past year as a result of the campaign under direction of Van A. Bittner.

"We feel that our gains in the future will be greater than those in the past, because we now have a smoothly functioning field staff and more than 1,000 volunteer organizers," CIO Pres. Philip Murray reported to the Convention. "We also have well-established CIO unions in regions in which CIO was virtually unknown before our arrival."

More than 550 NLRB elections were won in the South, and, in addition, a majority of the employes in 275 southern plants at which no election has yet been held have signed up. "Healthy pluralities" are held by the CIO in about 100 other plants in which organizing began only recently. Bargaining rights were won in about 12 plants without an NLRB election.

Both organized and unorganized Southern workers won economic benefits as a result of CIO inroads, the report pointed out. Employers attempting to discourage membership granted their workers "wage increases equal to those won by our workers."

Many employers, particularly in textile, used more violent methods of fighting the union, however. Twenty CIO organizers and local leaders were physically assaulted; 2 were shot at and their cars set afire; dynamite was set off at meeting places; members or sympathizers were fired and blacklisted. Unconstitutional city ordinances were adopted to impede the organizing drive, although acquittal was won for almost all CIO representatives arrested under the new laws.

Among the southern states making the largest membership gains were North Carolina, Texas and Tennessee.

All Affiliates Report Big Membership Gains

THE CIO has increased its membership by many thousands in the past year, according to CIO Pres. Philip Murray's report to the 9th annual CIO Convention.

Most outstanding victory of the year, the report stated, was won by the CIO Railroad Workers in a system-wide election among eight shop crafts on the Pennsylvania Railroad involving about 53,000 workers. The election brought the union's membership on the PRR up to 43,000.

CIO entered a new field during the year with the organization of the Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee at the request of several telephone groups. First big victory won by the Committee was the affiliation of the American Union of Telephone Workers with 22,000 members.

The number of international unions, national unions and organizing committees in the CIO now total 41, plus an additional 391, local industrial unions directly affiliated with the CIO.

Allan S. Haywood is Director of Organization.

Gains by unions were as follows:

STEELWORKERS: Negotiated approximately 1,600 wage agreements and formed 163 new locals.

AUTO WORKERS: New contracts were won with 190 companies. This includes 130 NLRB election victories.

ELECTRICAL, RADIO & MACHINE WORKERS: Successful organizing drives have resulted, Pres. Murray reported, in a record membership of 600,000 workers in 1,536 plants, plus an additional 60,000 office workers.

TEXTILE WORKERS: Despite "an increasing trend among textile employes, especially in the South, to disregard collective bargaining elections," the union's membership is now more than 500,000. Contracts covering 40,000 were signed in the past year.

Organization has been most successful in the mid-Atlantic and Southern regions.

AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS: New firms organized since January 1946 total 117, employing approximately 10,000.

MARITIME UNION: Largest seamen's union in the country, the NMU now has 130 companies under contract. Gains for membership included two general wage increases of 6 and 5%, 9 paid holidays at sea and an appropriation from Congress for payment of unemployment benefits to men who sailed on government-controlled ships during the war.

LONGSHOREMEN'S & WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION: Workers covered by the union's contracts approximated 88,500, according to a report given the union's convention in April. This represents a gain of 25,000 in the past 2 years. The ILWU won 250 out of 287 NLRB elections.

MARINE COOKS & STEWARDS: Among the union's gains over the past year is the addition of 1,000 new members in the Hawaiian Islands.

MARINE & SHIPBUILDING WORKERS: Winning 35 out of 49 NLRB elections, the union extended its contract coverage to 13,390 additional workers over the year.

OIL WORKERS: Won 60 out of 89 NLRB elections in the year between June 1946 and June 1947. Approximately 10,000 employes were involved.

RUBBER WORKERS: Membership increased 40,000 in the past year. The union was successful in gaining nationwide agreements with the "Big Four" rubber manufacturers.

Banquet Off; Money For Food Abroad

CIO Pres. Murray announced the annual convention banquet, scheduled for Friday, Oct. 17, has been called off because of the world food shortage.

The money which would have been spent on the banquet has been donated for food packages for the Labor Academy in Frankfurt, Germany, to provide food for German workers.

AMERICAN COMMUNICATIONS ASSOCIATION: The union won elections in 12 shipping lines, three airlines, covering communications ground personnel, 3 broadcast stations and secured affiliation of the independent Commercial Cables Staff Employes Association. Major victory was the telephone operators in the Northern California and Nevada area.

PACKINGHOUSE WORKERS: Despite "unsettled conditions in the industry created by the packers' sitdown strike" the union issued 46 charters and continued to make progress in Canada.

RETAIL, WHOLESALE & DEPT. STORE EMPLOYES: Established 46 new local unions, chalking up a membership increase of over 20,000 over the past year. First nationwide chain store agreement was signed with the Douglas Shoe Co.

MINE MILL & SMELTER WORKERS: Victory in 83 elections increased the union's membership by 21,639 workers.

FURNITURE WORKERS: AFL raiding attacks were halted by decisive CIO victories in NLRB elections in such furniture centers as Grand Rapids, Mich.; Ft. Smith, Ark.; Sumter, S. C.; Martinsville, Va.; and Knoxville, Tenn. Many of the union's 82 NLRB election victories were won in the South, increasing the membership by 11,000

WOODWORKERS: New members of the union number 17,500. Organization has extended to the South, while organizers in British Columbia, who have almost completed their task, will soon concentrate on Eastern Canada.

SHOE WORKERS: The union has made inroads in practically every major shoe manufacturing center in the country, the report states. Victories have been scored in many of the "run-away" shoe factories in the South, which had attempted to escape union organization and wages in the North.

BARBERS & BEAUTY CULTURISTS: New Local unions have been established in Chester, Pa.; Beaumont, Texas, and St. Paul, Minn., bringing the total of affiliated locals to 35.

BREWERY WORKERS: Principal victory of the year was scored in Pittsburgh where the AFL Teamsters' raiding attempt was defeated.

GLASS, CERAMIC & SILICA SAND WORKERS: The addition of eight new locals has increased the union's membership by 2,000.

FOOD, TOBACCO, AGRICULTURAL & ALLIED WORKERS: Contracts won in 111 elections have brought the union's coverage up to 102,000 workers.

OFFICE & PROFESSIONAL WORKERS: Membership has increased by over 10,000, Pres. Murray reports, while the renewal of over 300 major contracts and signing of 50 new ones brought annual pay increases of more than $10 million to the union's members.

TRANSPORT SERVICE EMPLOYES: Growing "steadily and consistently," the union has chalked up a number of important election victories.

TRANSPORT WORKERS: Eight new locals were chartered by the union in the past year. Gains to the membership included $18½ million in wage increases for New York City transit workers, a pension plan on two bus systems and highest wage rates in the air transport industry for maintenance employes of American Airlines.

STONE & ALLIED PRODUCTS WORKERS: The union won 25 NLRB elections and won increases running as high as 25c an hour during the year, according to Pres. Murray.

FUR & LEATHER WORKERS: Organizing gains were scored in Canada, and a new district was formed in the South. Wage increases totaled $16 million a year.

UTILITY WORKERS: The union's dues-paying membership has increased by 32% in the past year. Thirty-eight new locals have been chartered, and long-range campaigns are being conducted at Boston Edison, Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., Ohio Fuel Gas, Indianapolis Power & Light and Detroit Edison.

PAPERWORKERS: Bargaining rights, won in 31 plants brought the union's increase in membership to 5,000.

GAS, COKE & CHEMICAL WORKERS: The union has chartered 49 new locals, bringing into its ranks about 10,000 new members.

AMERICAN NEWSPAPER GUILD: Membership has increased by 1,500, the union having chartered 98 locals. Wage increases averaged $12 week.

FARM EQUIPMENT & METAL WORKERS: With the organization of 18 new plants and current expansion in plants already under contract, membership will have increased by 10,000 by the end of the year.

PUBLIC WORKERS: Since amalgamation of the Federal Workers with the State, County & Municipal Workers, membership has increased by 12,000, making the union the largest among civil service workers in the country.

FISHERMAN & ALLIED WORKERS: Local unions, now established in all major fishing areas, have resulted in a membership increase of 2,631.

PLAYTHINGS, JEWELRY & NOVELTY WORKERS: " . . . healthy gains."

MARINE ENGINEERS' BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION: Membership has grown by 758.

OPTICAL & INSTRUMENT ORGANIZING COMMITTEE: The committee has won 30 elections and has established 5 new local unions.

INLAND BOATMEN'S UNION: Progress has been steady.

Legal Problems:

WAR ON LABOR IS WAR ON PEOPLE

"THE period since the last convention has witnessed the sharpest change in labor law and in the legal problems affecting CIO unions since the very founding of the CIO itself."

And, since the Atlantic City convention, Pres. Philip Murray's convention report says, the CIO legal department's problems, as well as those of the legal counsel of the various unions, have multiplied.

The year was featured by these serious trends: (1) the Taft-Hartley Law; (2) the emasculation of the Labor Dept., and its functions; (3) attacks on the Wage-Hour Law by the Supreme Court; (4) anti-labor laws in the majority of state legislatures, and (5) court litigation in various cases involving fundamental rights. (Effect on Political Action is covered in another story.)

All these restricted the working man and gave more freedom to employers. But, most serious was:

TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

Even prior to passage of T-H, the National Labor Relations Board, "in administering the Wagner Act, was headlong in retreat from the policies originally established under that Act.

"Rights of strikers were made meaningless; the obligation to bargain collectively became an empty formula; the Board began the practice of refusing to disestablish labor organizations which it found to be company dominated; the board made a dead letter of provisions of the Act dealing with employer interference, coercion and restraint." All this ". . . constituted an open invitation to employers to destroy labor organizations. The passage of T-H intensified this danger."

KEY PROBLEMS for Legal, of which Lee Pressman is general counsel: "Some of the most important legal problems are created by provisions reintroducing into law the odious 'illegal purposes' doctrine under which a strike or picket line is legal only if its purpose is not prohibited. . . . The right to strike is further impaired by establishment of certain technical requirements which must be complied with even in connection with strikes . . . cooling off periods . . . notice requirements . . .

"Serious legal difficulties will arise in provisions dealing with union coercion and restraint . . . The inquisition into the political views of labor leaders and the sweeping outlawry of all forms of political activity.

"Perhaps the most dangerous is the legal problem arising from the invitation to sue labor for damages. Several CIO unions have obtained contracts which make it clear that in the event of a claimed breach of contract it is the agreement which determines the rights of the parties and not a harassing lawsuit. The Legal dept. has been particularly active in framing model provisions which will safeguard the rights of unions.

STATE LAWS: "The campaign against T-H served to obscure the wave of anti-labor legislation in states. . . . In at least 14 states, laws have been passed to prohibit or limit the closed shop or other types of union-security."

A number of states have limited the checkoff. "Equally alarming is the scope of legislation restricting the right to strike and picket. A number have passed laws limiting the place where picketing may be conducted . . . attempting to define manner in which picketing may be conducted.

"The 'secondary boycott' has furnished the pretext for a series of sweeping anti-labor laws, . . . extremely restrictive legislation was enacted in 10 states eliminating the right to strike in disputes between public utilities and their employes . . . The New Jersey law was used in an effort to break the telephone strike . . .

"The CIO will continue to test the validity of this legislation and to obtain court declarations of basic constitutional rights . . . These laws can be tested only when appropriate conditions present themselves."

COURT LITIGATION: "The CIO actively participated in the Mine Workers' case in the Supreme Court . . . the Harris case in which the court substantially weakened the protections of the 4th Amendment, prohibiting illegal searches and seizures . . .

"The portal-to-portal case . . . the Pittsburgh utility workers' case . . .

"An increasingly important and time-consuming aspect of CIO litigation is defense against legal attack. It has become a practice in certain lawsuits to attempt to make the CIO defendant along with a particular local or international union for the purpose of extracting a large money judgment . . .

"The Southern Drive has represented many legal problems, particularly in the field of civil rights . . ."

WAGE-HOUR LAW: "The Supreme Court has handed down a number of decisions substantially limiting rights under the act . . .

"The chief blow, however, was struck in the form of legislation . . . The Portal-to-Portal Pay Act severely limits workers' rights not only with respect to portal-to-portal but with respect to wage-hour claims of any kind."

DEPT. OF LABOR: "As part of the drive against unions, Congress seriously reduced the functions and funds of the department.

"These reductions are symptomatic of the inferior status which labor is permitted in the nation and in the government. We must continue to seek a department consistent in size and scope with the role of wage-earners in our country."

CONCLUSION: "The deprivation of our fundamental rights of freedom of speech, press, assembly and of association will ultimately bring about the deprivation of those such rights on the part of all who seek to enjoy the benefits of our democracy.

"It is because of this very forthright position that the CIO has been in the forefront, battling for the protection of the democratic rights and privileges for all . . ."

Safeway Peace

Ending a two-day lockout, Safeway Stores, Inc., agreed last week to open their 150 retail stores in New York City and arbitrate demands of the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes for a 20 per cent wage increase, a 40-hour week and other benefits.

1947 Glamor Girl in Action: Mrs. Tony Celebrese is pinning a PAC button on C. Chiese at a dance sponsored by Local 1111, CIO Electrical Workers, Milwaukee. She was one of the team of Glamor girls who sold the buttons at the dance. Chiese's pained expression is probably due to the fact he's thinking about the T-H Act.

AFL Rejected CIO's Program

UNITY of the labor movement is essential if unions are to be prepared to meet the devastating attacks now being directed against them, states Pres. Murray's report in reviewing steps taken in recent months to achieve a common understanding between the CIO and AFL on program and action.

A difference in approach prevented an agreement from being reached. The CIO proposed an immediate joint program of legislative and political action, but the AFL insisted "organic unity" must be achieved first.

Steps taken by the CIO to bring about unity as outlined in the report started with a proposal presented to the AFL in December by Murray that a joint meeting be held between committees of the CIO and AFL. On the CIO unity committee, in addition to Murray, were Walter P. Reuther, Albert Fitzgerald, Emil Rieve and Jacob Potofsky.

The committees met in May and the CIO presented this proposal:

1. The establishment of joint national, state and local community-wide committees to mobilize support of labor and all progressive groups.

2. Further exploration of organic unity looking toward elimination of jurisdictional disputes and cross-raiding.

3. Recognition of the principle of industrial unionism and certain specific democratic trade union principles as a basis for further discussion of organic unity.

4. Meetings between committees of the AFL and CIO unions operating in the same field to explore possibility of joint action in carrying out the program.

The AFL rejected this program, contending that organic unity within the framework of the AFL and under the existing policies of that organization was the only basis acceptable to the AFL.

WORKERS and their unions can expect nothing from the Taft-Hartley law "except hell," Heber Blankenhorn, veteran staff member, said in his letter of resignation to the National Labor Relations Board made public last week.

Blankenhorn

Terming the Act a "prohibition law, the country's second experiment in a generation," Blankenhorn said: "It contains for labor prohibitions major and minor, curbs, restraints, restrictions and prescriptions, outlawries and proscriptions, verbotens, legalistic pitfalls, deadfalls, bear traps, booby traps and mouse traps.

"Lawyers find it a reasonably complete job, too complete, for in some provisions the law entraps itself. It even prohibits labor from objecting, through its press, against the persons who made this law."

In his blistering attack, Blankenhorn charged that it is "so viciously destructive of labor organizations that its own backers want its enforcement soft-pedalled." To apologists for the law who maintain that "the language of the Wagner Act is embodied in the new law," Blankenhorn retorted that "embodied should read embalmed, buried, interred and entombed."

Predicting the inevitable repeal of the law, Blankenhorn said that meanwhile "an honest administrator cannot advise any discharged workman or his union to seek redress, with confidence, under this law.

"A red-herring, whether to sign non-communist compliance affidavits, now lies all across the trail of the law. The NLRB promulgator of the regulation recently exposed publicly his reasons—that generally speaking the Congressional intent was an all-inclusive forced labor purge whereby to instill in American unions a spirit of fidelity to America."

Blankenhorn observed that the real intent was not so much to instill in labor "the spirit of fidelity, as the spirit of Fido, who must learn to lie down, roll over and play dead, at the snap of a finger."

Describing the long involved procedure a Board case must now follow, Blankenhorn said: "I cannot honestly sit in my office and assure an aggrieved workman or his union that he can get something under this Act—except hell."

He advised the experienced staff members on the Board, however, "to stick it out," as they "will be needed to pick up the pieces," after "this prohibition law will evaporate also."

In conclusion, Blankenhorn noted that he had served under four previous Board chairmen and had helped write the Wagner Act. He also served on the staff of Chairman Robert La Follette's Senate Civil Liberties Committee. "To finish that damning record, somebody might charge that I'd served under Eisenhower and under Pershing," he said.

International Crisis Rising

WITH "tensions and strains in the international field increasing," the CIO Dept. of Int'l. Affairs and the Committee on Latin-American Affairs had a strenuous year, Pres. Philip Murray reveals in his convention report.

"The unity of purpose and action achieved by the Great Powers during the war has been vanishing and mutual suspicions and recriminations have increased," the report showed in an outline of the world scene.

"While continual quibbling and division have impaired the efficiency of the United Nations, CIO has continued its policy of working for peace and friendship with all the peoples of the world."

Most of that has been done through the World Federation of Trade Unions, the CIO head said.

"The Executive Bureau of WFTU, on which Vice Pres. Frank Rosenblum serves for CIO, has met twice; the WFTU Executive Committee met in Prague, with Rosenblum and Secy-Treas. James B. Carey representing CIO," the report said. "The first meeting of WFTU General Council also met in Prague with Michael Ross as the additional CIO delegate. In contrast with diplomatic and political conferences, the trade unionists in a spirit of reasonable compromise continued to reach agreement."

The CIO, the report continues, "has worked to strengthen WFTU and to advance within the organization the American tradition of democracy and freedom and for the extension of these ideas to all the peoples of the world."

Others who served CIO and WFTU in various capacities were Adolph Germer, assistant secretary-general; Elmer Cope, former CIO Steelworkers' staffer, who succeeded him; Willard Townsend, of the CIO Transport Service Employes, who went to Japan and Korea and received congratulations from Gen. MacArthur for his work and Al Hartung, CIO Woodworkers, at the Timber Conference.

The Latin-American group, under the chairmanship of Jacob S. Potofsky, "continues to issue bulletins in Spanish mailed to nearly every union from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn. It is widely quoted in the Latin-American press.

"Potofsky was host on several occasions to officers of the Latin-American Confederation of Labor."

In the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, "created for the purpose of promoting international understanding," Kermit Eby, CIO Research Director, represents CIO on the American UNESCO Executive Board.

Clinton S. Golden, former vice president of the Steelworkers, has been appointed chief labor adviser to the American Mission to Aid Greece.

WORKING TOGETHER TO WIN THE WAR
Anti-Discrimination Should Also Pay Peacetime Dividends

Racial Bias Even Hits Veterans

SERIOUS undermining of the wartime gains against racial or religious discrimination in unemployment gave the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination a heavy schedule of activity, Pres. Murray reports to the convention.

"The Nation's wartime experience demonstrated that government action can be effective in appreciably reducing discrimination in industry", the report says of the status of Negro, Mexican-American and Jewish workers.

But, the report continues, "war veterans of those minority groups are facing greater difficulties than other veterans in obtaining training and finding work according to their desires and skills".

"Discriminatory practices seldom disappeared spontaneously", the report said. "The intervention of government was required to start the process in motion".

"The need for fair employment practice legislation must concern all segments of American life—business, as well as labor, the northern as well as the southern sections, Negro and white, Protestant, Catholic and Jew", Murray asserted. "To this end, the National Committee for a Permanent FEPC was formed with the moral and financial support of CIO. The secretary-treasurer, two vice-presidents and three presidents of CIO international unions serve on the National Council."

"This goal ranks high among our legislative needs", the report says.

The report recalled appointment of Pres. Truman's Committee on Civil Rights, because "the constitutional guarantees of individual liberties and equal protection under the law clearly place upon the federal government the responsibility to act when state or local authorities abridge or fail to protect these rights."

The CIO "is planning to bring to our membership recommendations upon completion of the report of the President's Committee. This will be our main objective for 1948," the committee declares.

Much Activity In Publicity

THE CIO Publicity Department devoted the major portion of its time since the Atlantic City convention to the Taft-Hartley Law and CIO's membership campaign, particularly in the South, delegates are informed in Pres. Murray's report.

The department, in addition to editing the CIO News, issued more than 500 press releases during the past year, arranged many press conference and radio appearances, answered thousands of mail and phone queries about CIO activities, printed regularly a dozen special editions for international and local unions, issued pamphlets prepared by various other CIO departments, arranged for magazine articles and published a weekly clipsheet, Union News Service.

The department also sponsored two radio network programs: "Labor USA," on the ABC, and "America United," on NBC. In July, Allan L. Swim, former public relations director of the CIO Organizing Committee, succeeded Len De Caux, resigned, as CIO publicity director.

Federal Rolls Off

There are 1,680,000 less workers employed by the Federal Government today than two years ago.

Keep It Short!

A'hem. That's the issue.

"The new change—from short to long skirts, from padded shoulders to narrow 'feminine' shoulders—is not being launched for the sake of beauty; the cause is purely economic," says the CIO Economic Outlook.

Its advice: "Workers' wives cannot afford to throw out the excellent garments now hanging in their closets. It is up to them to refuse absolutely to buy the new styles."

'Watch Labels' On Packages

AMERICAN consumers seeking to stretch the buying power of their dollars were urged by the CIO Economic Outlook to "watch the label" of packaged products, press for better government food standards and join consumer cooperatives.

The Outlook is published by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

"We must use an eagle-eye and be sharp-shoppers if we are to protect ourselves from the pitfalls set for us," the Outlook said. "We cannot judge quantity by the appearance of the container. We must read the label to check on net weight. One of the first commandments for shoppers is 'Read the Label'."

The CIO publication said we need "more official standards for more products."

2 Union Co-ops Prosper In Alabama For Decade

THE current interest unions are showing in co-operatives has brought forth a story from Bob Christopherson of the CIO Textile Workers in Alabama about two co-op groceries run by members of that union in the small textile town of Huntsville.

These are not new stores. Both are more than ten years old.

The stores take their names from the mills near which they are located and in which their members work. The older of the two, the Dallas Union Store, which opened in October 1936, gets its name from the Dallas Mfg. Co., a textile plant employing 850 workers.

The Lincoln Supply Co., established in January 1937, is named after the Lincoln Mills which employes about 1,350.

Both the Dallas and Lincoln stores did well over $100,000 worth of business last year.

The two co-ops are unique not only in being owned by workers, but also in employing only union clerks, members of the CIO's Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes. Clerks' wages at the two stores are said to be the highest in Alabama for grocery store help.

The Dallas store was incorporated for $10,000 (2,000 shares at $5 a share), and Lincoln for $5,000 (1,000 shares at $5 each). Both stores were opened on about $2,200 capital. Latest figures show that the Dallas store has a value of nearly six times, and the Lincoln store, nearly five times, the original investment.

Canada: Convention Backs CCF

By JACK WILLIAMS

THE Canadian Congress of Labor, central Dominion body for CIO, has taken a strong stand for political action, reaffirming its endorsement of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation.

The CCL convention, held at Toronto, was attended by a record number of delegates—800. They demanded a special session of Parliament to check soaring prices and warned the government that grave results might accrue if rent controls are wiped out. The CCL has 360,000 members.

Another demand was one for an adequate national labor code.

Decision to re-endorse CCF came after spirited debate, in which reference was made to a speech, made before the convention by A. R. Mosher, CCL president. That speech was made at the conference of Canadian members of the CIO Textile Workers. Mosher had declared that the most dangerous enemies of the labor movement were those within its ranks who subscribed to Communist doctrines.

The political division at the CCL convention came first on a foreign policy resolution, which condemned both "Communist and capitalist imperialisms." The resolutions passed by a 546 to 165 vote.

Similar roll call votes were registered on the CCF motion and a resolution opposing "any totalitarian philosophy, whether it be Communist, Fascist, or a reflection of either one."

Speakers supporting the demand for an overall national labor code pointed to the current strike of 14,000 Canadian members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers as evidence of the urgency for action in the legislative field.

Under existing Canadian laws, eight provincial governments are involved in settlement discussions. Demands for the return of price controls and subsidies were expressed in the resolution on prices which received unanimous support.

Oregon: Political Action Within Present Parties

By MANLEY J. WILSON

DIRECTING most of its attention to the nation's political problems and to the CIO-PAC program, delegates attending the 10th annual convention of the Oregon State CIO Council adopted a broad policy of political action.

The resolution adopted by the convention, which met Oct. 4-5, in Portland, called for a program of action within the framework of the present political parties.

Sen. Glen Taylor (D.-Ida.) principal speaker, warned that all effective political action must start in the precincts. "The way to stop such things as the Taft-Hartley Act," he said, "is to get the right kind of people into party precinct officers."

Characterizing Republican Sen. Wayne Morse (Oregon) as a "90% liberal," Taylor declared that Morse has no influence in the workings of the Republican Party.

Council Pres. John McKenna, Newspaper Guild, was nominated for reelection and will be opposed on the ballot by Tommy George, of the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. Stanley Earl, secretary of the Council and a member of the Woodworkers, was nominated for reelection without opposition.

The Council adopted resolutions opposing the state sales and cigarette taxes. The levies were subsequently defeated by voters in a special statewide election October 7.

Other resolutions drew up plans for a statewide safety and accident prevention program, supported the CIO Fishermen in their fight against an anti-trust suit, backed the three-months old CIO Woodworkers' strike in Eastern Washington and Idaho and pledged support to the campaign of Oregon telephone workers to affiliate with the CIO.

West Va.: 'Don't Rest 'Til T-H Is Wiped From Books'

SEN. HARLEY M. KILGORE (D.-W. Va.) last week urged labor not to rest until the Taft - Hartley Law is "wiped from the law books" and "until progressive leaders replace reactionaries in the halls of Congress."

Addressing the 210 delegates attending the West Virginia State CIO convention in Clarksburg, the Senator expressed confidence that once the American people know "the remarkable story of what labor has done to build a better America," they will silence the forces of reaction.

The convention, described by State CIO Council Pres. John B. Easton as "the most harmonious yet held," was also addressed by W. Va. Governor W. Meadows; Clarksburg City Manager Roy F. Ash; Harrison County Sheriff Harry E. Carder; Commissioner Charles Sattler of the State Dept. of Labor; Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee; Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization; John Moran, PAC representative; and Ruth Wiencek, member of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee.

Following a plea by Miss Wiencek for a strong industrial union of telephone workers within the CIO, the delegates unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the organizing efforts of the TWOC.

The delegates devoted a full morning session to discussion of political action and adopted a resolution in support of PAC and its dollar contribution and registration drives.

Other resolutions denounced the Taft-Hartley Act, promised support of the Southern campaign, called for a permanent CIO veteran's committee, federal housing, aid to disabled veterans and worker education.

Easton, who has held the presidency of the State Council since its inception, was reelected by acclamation, as was Albert D. Viller, Secy-treas.

The Food Crisis:

Murray Pledges Cooperation; Prices Up In Rails And Food

AMERICANS in general were moving slowly last week towards cooperation with Pres. Truman's food conservation program.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, while declaring that a voluntary food saving plan alone would not solve the problem, called on all CIO international unions, industrial union councils and CIO regional directors to "solicit the whole-hearted cooperation of every CIO family" back of Truman's policy.

But, the rest of the country was not as prompt as labor to swing into line. Restaurants pleaded that they had ordered supplies a week in advance and indicated they might get going next week. The people who took delight in violating OPA, were still just as unpatriotic and oblivious of the rights of others. They flaunted their money and openly ate meat on Tuesday and poultry and eggs on Thursday.

Housewives mostly welcomed the program, particularly on meat and eggs, since they have risen so high. Fish markets were having a heyday.

MURRAY in his letter to CIO, declared:

"We in America have ample food supplies if we use and share them wisely. Elsewhere, millions of human beings are hungry. We must do all we can to alleviate hunger and sustain the courage of hungry people who are seeking to re-establish their productive facilities and to preserve their freedom.

"The CIO has said that prices must be brought under control and rolled back. We demand this not alone for the protection of our own families. We demand it as well because profiteering is the greatest source of food waste. Profit, not human need, governs the distribution of our food supply, serving the luxury market while it commands highest prices, not where it is most needed.

"We must insist that Congress immediately be called into special session so that, as a free people, we may decide upon and impose the necessary restraints and self controls through suitable regulations."

Murray, who is a member of the Truman Citizens' Food Committee, inclosed with his appeal to CIO leaders an analysis of the international food situation.

Thoughts for food:

LIQUOR: Many distillers agreed to a plan from Citizens' Food Committee Chairman Charles Luckman to shut down for 60 days and hand their grain over to the government to relieve the world food shortage. Two bad effects of this: 30,000 persons would be laid off for the period; the market might be flooded with liquor of extremely high grain neutral spirits content. Breweries in general agreed to cut out use of rice and wheat.

WHEAT: Price up.

RAILS: The Nation's railroads, putting on a sad face, were handed an ICC platter which allowed a 10% "emergency" increase in freight rates pending completion of hearings on a plea for an increase which would average 27%. The "emergency" and potential increases would certainly increase the HCL. The South was hit hard when ICC allowed many Southern railways an increase in passenger and sleeping parlor car rates.

BEEF: Price up.

PERTINENT: Rev. George C. Higgins, asst. Director of the Social Action Dept. of the Natl. Catholic Welfare Conf., posed this question: "Are we ready to admit it, at long last, that labor and management and the government all have an interest in prices and in the balance between incomes and prices, and that all of them therefore ought to have a voice in affecting this balance?

"More specifically, are we ready to experiment with a system of Industrial Councils in which the 'man who writes the price tag' will actually be three men (or three sets of men) representing labor, management and the public?"

Father Higgins suggests some supplementary reading. (a) "any standard treatise on Original Sin—a basis Christian dogma which tells us, by indirection, at least, that no single individual or single group of individuals can long be trusted to do the right thing in economic life without the presence of effective social and economic sanctions, and (b) the cost-of-living index of the BLS, which will help to convince us that perhaps we are closer to forfeiting freedom than we think we are."

MILK: Price up.

KEEN OBSERVER: Rep. John Taber (R., N. Y.) came back from a junket to Europe and floored reporters by saying he had seen no evidence of hunger in Europe. When everybody had recovered from the shock, his colleagues on the junket hastened to disagree politely but emphatically with him.

POTATOES: Price up.

PROFITS: The New York Times' C. M. Reckert seemed surprised. "With industrial production in the first half of this year far exceeding the pre-war rate," he wrote, "earnings recorded a remarkable increase over the corresponding six months of 1946 dispute higher costs of labor and materials."

He continued: "Our compilation of 296 companies for the (1947) six-month period showed a combined net income of $1,503,385,365, a rise of 127% over the $662,792,288 profit recorded in the first half of last year."

HOGS: Price up.

CHICAGO: Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, said he was appearing" in the hope that Congress will get the pulse of this community on the terrible conditions under which it is forced to live." He condemned the "manipulations of the meat packers and their responsibility in the exorbitant price of meats."

SCRANTON, Pa.: Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh told the committee: "When you entered Scranton you came to a region (Northeastern Pennsylvania) that already has felt the pinch of depression and yet has felt the pinch of high prices." He warned the legislators that "the time is here now for action, starting in Congress at once."

TRENTON, N. J.: Philip Cosimano, skilled worker at Westinghouse, Newark: "I earn $60.80 a week. My budget for my wife and three children—and it's cut to the bone—is $59.06. Out of this $6.25 goes for milk, $25 for food, and so on. I even had to drop my insurance." The payoff came, he said, when he got notice from his Federal housing project that he had to move. "I'm making too much money."

CONCLUSION: Let's let David Lawrence's U. S. Week, a business magazine, say it:

"Food price will stay high, maybe go higher. Living costs will rise. Food is rising. "Rent is rising. Clothing is being marked up . . . More inflation is almost guaranteed. When that time will come is anybody's guess. It could come in spring, 1948."—A. R.

Sculptor Picked For FDR Plaque

Harry Lewis Raul, sculptor, has been commissioned to design the CIO's Memorial plaque to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, convention delegates are told in the report of Pres. Philip Murray.

The plaque will be installed in the FDR Children's Ward, occupying the entire fifth floor of the new Georgetown Hospital, Washington, D. C. The CIO Executive Board in 1945 voted to equip the wing.

Hosiery Union Out of Textile

Emil Rieve, general president of the CIO Textile Workers, has announced that the TWUA executive council has authorized the suspension of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers and all local unions affiliated with the federation because of a refusal to pay the per capita tax required by the TWUA constitution.

Rieve said that the action was forced by the refusal of the hoisery federation to comply with an amendment to the constitution which has raised the per capita tax from 50 to 75c a month per member.

"I greatly regret that the hosiery federation has forced its own suspension" Rieve said, particularly at a time when the greatest solidarity of all textile workers is essential if we are to meet the present threats against the workers standards of living, and go forward to organize the hundreds of thousands of textile workers still without the benefits of unionism.

"The federation has benefited greatly from tremendous expansion of unionism in the textile industry under TWUA leadership during the past 10 years. Large numbers of hosiery workers still remain to be organized and there is no reason why the federation membership should not assume equal responsibilities with other TWUA members in the present critical period."

NMU ENDS 3rd WEEK

THE CIO National Martime Union's convention was completing its third week as the CIO News went to press.

1. NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, who has been at odds with several other union officers, suggested that the convention declare all offices vacant, with present officers to resign as soon as new ones were elected or chosen by a special election referendum. NMU Atty. William L. Standard ruled that such a procedure was against the union constitution and that vacated offices must be filled by the NMU national council. Curran then announced "I cannot go on as president when I am told the membership is not to be allowed to have weapons to fight against outside interference," which he defined as the Communist Party.

2. Curran won a fight for a constitutional change under which the definition of NMU policies, programs and procedures henceforth would be decided by the membership. Hitherto, policy-making in general had been the business of the national council.

3. The convention, in a harmonious session, adopted a motion assessing each member $10 to raise the NMU strike fund to $2,000,000 from the present status of less than $600,000 The motion, adopted after it was explained that the Taft-Hartley Law might bring serious strikes, was backed by Curran and Vice-Pres. Howard McKenzie, of the anti-Curran group. Previously, the convention had voted unanimously a motion denouncing T-H and declaring NMU would boycott the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

4. A report on a contract program was adopted unanimously. It includes establishment of a 40-hour week and a four-hour watch, guaranteed annual wage, two to three months' annual leave with pay, increased manning scales for all departments, wage increases to compensate for rising prices and a health and welfare fund.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, advises that down in Florida a three-day strike was necessary to win recognition for the CIO Transport Workers at Orange State Oil Co.

The same union only had to maintain a picket line for two and a half hours before winning recognition at the Borden Dairies Co.

He further advises that wage increases up to 12% were won for employes of the Textile Mills by a contract between the firm and the CIO Textile Workers Union, just signed in Dallas, Texas. The new one-year contract by-passes the Taft-Hartley law's liability clauses on unauthorized strikes. The contract likewise guarantees that the company cannot be sued for a lockout unless it is authorized by the company president. The agreement raises the minimum wage from 65 cents to 76 cents an hour, the average wage from 90 cents an hour to between 97 cents and $1.02, and the top wage is raised to $1.35 an hour.

Other provisions of the contract are the checkoff, liberalized vacations, seniority, arbitration, overtime pay, and 5-cent hourly premium for the third shift. The contract covers 1,400 workers in the company's mills at Dallas, McKinney and Waco.

In Memphis, a majority of the employes of the Associated Press bureau have designated the CIO Newspaper Guild as their collective bargaining agent. A recognition agreement and a stipulation will extend the terms of the Guild's national contract with AP, with an $87.50 minimum wage for experienced reporters, to the Memphis employes.

The Guild and the national management of the Associated Press have an agreement that whenever a majority of any AP bureau signs bargaining authorizations with the Guild, recognition is granted automatically and the contract is immediately extended to cover the new members.

Ernest Marsh, Director of Organization, CIO Furniture Workers, New York, reports the following: In an election of Louisville, Ky., conducted by Labor-Management Committee, the vote was UFWA-CIO 28, C&J-AFL 4, no union 3—Organizer Harry Davidson. In a cross check of membership cards at the Certified Chrome Co., Los Angeles, Calif., the score was UFWA-CIO 112, no union 18—Organizer Oscar Castro.

CIO RECOGNIZED BY AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH COMPANY. The following letter dated October 1, 1947, has been received by J. J. Moran, President, American Union of Telephone Workers and Vice-Chairman of TWOC-CIO, written by G. S. Dring, Asst. Vice President American Telephone and Telegraph Co.: "The Company hereby certifies that it has received dues deduction authorization cards in favor of the American Union of Telephone Workers (TWOC-CIO) executed by a majority of all the non-supervisory employes of the Company.

"The Company accepts delivery of these cards as proof that the AUTW which formerly was affiliated with the National Federation of Telephone Workers and is now affiliated with the TWOC-CIO is the duly designated collective bargaining representative of the eligible non-supervisory employes of the Company."

This is the final and complete answer to those who, contrary to trade union policies, attempted to block this union from having its bargaining rights.

The union as a CIO affiliate is now fully recognized. Other will follow. It is a significant victory!

The writer addressed the West Virginia State Council Convention and the convention voted unanimous support to the CIO drive amongst the telephone workers in that State, which is in full swing now.

The Officers and Delegates are arriving in Boston to attend the CIO Convention. A constructive and harmonious Convention is expected.

ILWU WINS ROUND IN L.A. LOCKOUT

CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union won the first round in its battle with Pacific Coast waterfront employers when Federal Maritime Arbitrator Arthur C. Miller ordered the employers to cease their lockout in the Los Angeles harbor.

The disagreement began last July over the employers' refusal to recognize the ILWU as bargaining agent for "walking bosses."

The Waterfront Employers Association shut down the Port of Los Angeles Oct. 1, following a 12-week strike of the longshore foremen.

Supporting the union's position, the arbitrator found that the employers had not only sought to exercise "managerial rights" against the foremen in accordance with the T-H Act, but had directed the lockout "for the purpose and with the effect of locking out the longshoremen." In addition, the ruling stated, the lockout violated the coastline contract with the union, which forbids work stoppages.

The decision followed a threat by Longshore Pres. Harry Bridges to tie up Pacific coast shipping as far as Hawaii unless "something is done quickly about the shutdown."

The union claimed that the steamship companies has stalled negotiations with the walking bosses, whose ILWU contract expired last July, until enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act, then refused to negotiate on grounds that the Act released them from obligation to recognize foremen's unions.

Still to be determined by Miller are the union's demand that the longshoremen be compensated for time lost during the lockout, and the employers' demand that the longshoremen be compelled to cross the foremen's picket lines.

In their fight against the lockout the longshoremen had been supported by one employers' association, the Marine Trade Association, as well as the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots, which felt that its contract would be jeopardized by a ruling against the walking bosses.

CIO Pamphlet

A 33-page pamphlet giving a survey of current economic trends and presenting a list of questions for discussion has just been issued by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

Entitled "What's Ahead?" the pamphlet is reprinted from the July, 1947, issue of the CIO's Economic Outlook, particularly for use of discussion groups in union halls and homes. This and other discussion material on similar subjects may be obtained from the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C.

Urges Affiliation With Councils

"It is essential that all CIO locals affiliate with the proper Industrial Union Councils, maintain their affiliation and keep up their payment of per capita tax at full strength at all times," CIO Pres. Philip Murray urged this week in his report to the CIO Convention.

CIO members through their councils were in some states able to delay or to turn back strong anti-labor tides in the legislatures.

The Councils maintained contact with Representatives and Senators during the year and assumed the responsibility for encouraging CIO membership to do likewise. Action by some state councils resulted in improvement of workmen's compensation laws, but Murray pointed out that there was "real need . . . for a fundamental revision of the old approach to compensation which will guarantee life-long security to all injured workers . . ."

Progress was reported on the Councils' other fields of endeavor: the erection of Political Action Committees and summer schools for workers, as well as community services activities. John Brophy is in charge of councils.

Sales Tax Licks GOP

TWENTY Democratic victories, constituting what the United Press described a "marked trend to the party," were scored last week in Connecticut's municipal elections.

CIO and PAC officials laid the victories to two factors:

1. Imposition of a three cents on the dollar sales tax by the recent session of the Republican-controlled legislature.

2. A revolt against Republican policies which have led to high prices.

The State PAC, of which Arthur Skeritt is chairman and Harold Senior executive secretary, is a new organization, but it was extremely active in the campaign, issuing a large number of informative and persuasive pamphlets.

A notable Democratic victory was scored in the city of Bristol, where the New Departure Plane Plant of General Motors is located. There, James P. Casey, Democratic legislator who led an aggressive fight against anti-labor legislation and the sales tax, ousted a Republican.

PAC is now planning a full campaign in next year's national elections and primaries. Targets of the drive will be the six Republican Congressmen, all of whom had poor voting records.

In Norwalk, Irving C. Freese, Socialist, who received 500 votes in the last time he ran, was swept into office as mayor along with the rest of his ticket. Freese's Socialist Party is allied with that of Jasper McLevy, Bridgeport mayor. Neither group is affiliated with the Socialist Party, U. S.

Cincinnati

Incumbent City Councilman Rollin H. Everett has been given unanimous endorsement for re-election by the Greater Cincinnati Industrial Union Council.

Everett, a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, is editor of The Sun, organ of the council. He will be No. 1 on the CIO-endorsed list in the Cincinnati Proportional Representation election.

Others endorsed with the recommendation they be voted for in this order after Everett are: Harry Poctor, AFL-Building Trades; Theodore M. Berry, attorney who has represented CIO unions; Albert D. Cash, attorney, several years in council Leo J. Moelder, coal merchant; Frank Simpson, printing craftsman active in World II veterans' housing; Charles P. Taft, president of Charter Commission and former Councilman and Edward N. Waldvogel, businessman who has served in the State Senate and City Council.

The endorsements of the group —four Democrats, four independent Republicans — came after they were questioned as to their views on housing, rent control, health, recreation, police administration, fair employment practices and other questions of interest to working people.

3d Indiana District

Political action is being pushed in the Third Congressional District, Indiana, which includes South Bend.

Under the leadership of CIO Field Representative R. C. Olson, district meetings are being held and a solid district CIO-PAC is in the process of formulation.

The district committee consists of PAC committees from Elkhart, Laporte and St. Joseph County Industrial Union Councils, a representative from Marshall County, local CIO union presidents, vice presidents and recording or financial secretaries and PAC chairmen from local unions.

George Hupp, president of Local 5, CIO Auto Workers, presided over a meeting of CIO leaders, which heard Claude Becktell, secretary-treasurer of the Indiana State CIO, tell of PAC work in other sections of the state. State Sen. Charles Fleming, of Lake County, who is vice chairman of Local 210, CIO Oil Workers, also spoke.

Palmer Weber, PAC research director, gave the 400 present a detailed account of PAC procedure.

Louisiana

Sixty local unions with a membership of more than 60,000 met in New Orleans last week in a hard working convention and adopted a set of by-laws and a constitution for the CIO Political Action and Legislative Committee of the State of Louisiana.

Rules will require rank and file participation before any political endorsements are made and in shaping action on all major political action decisions.

A State Policy Committee was elected which will make recommendations on the record and qualifications of candidates to the Parish Political Action Committees. Where the candidate is running for an office whose constituency takes in more than one parish, at least two-thirds of the local committees concerned must vote on the person they wish to support before any endorsement is announced.

Already parish committees are functioning in New Orleans and surrounding area but in the more sparsely industrialized sections up-state, parish committees will be set up shortly.

CIO leaders who participated in drafting the new PALC constitution pointed out that hand-picked endorsements mean very little if rank and filers don't follow through with work, money and votes.

Albert Pouble, New Orleans Textile Workers Joint Board business agent, was elected president of PALC. Elimination of a three per cent state sales tax will be a primary plank in the platform. There will be an intense effort to unseat Rep. F. Edward Hebert in the First District, which includes New Orleans.

PALC also voted to invite the cooperation of State AFL and Rail Labor Units in planning its program in the forthcoming primary fight.

"Register, Register": That's the theme of the message which Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers took to the residents of New York. Here Quill is seen talking from one of the ten sound trucks which New York CIO-PAC used to get citizens to register last week.

First For Democrats After 238 Years

Democrats won their first victory in the 238-year-old history of Ridgefield, Conn., last week when Democrat Harry Hull defeated John Smith, a Republican, for the office of selectman.

Jefferies Second In Detroit Vote

In Detroit's mayoral primary last week, Councilman Eugene I. Van Antwerp led incumbent Mayor Edward J. Jeffries, Jr., by 16,416 votes, unofficial final returns indicated.

Van Antwerp polled 96,245 votes to Jeffries' 79,829. But, the results are not indicative of the final result, since Jeffries has trailed rivals in two other primaries but won out in the November finals.

Connecticut CIO Fights Milk Rise

The Connecticut State CIO and PAC will stage a major demonstration next Oct. 17 against the attempts of the Connecticut Milk Producers' Association to gain a price rise.

The association will offer testimony against the inerease at a hearing before the State Milk Administrator.

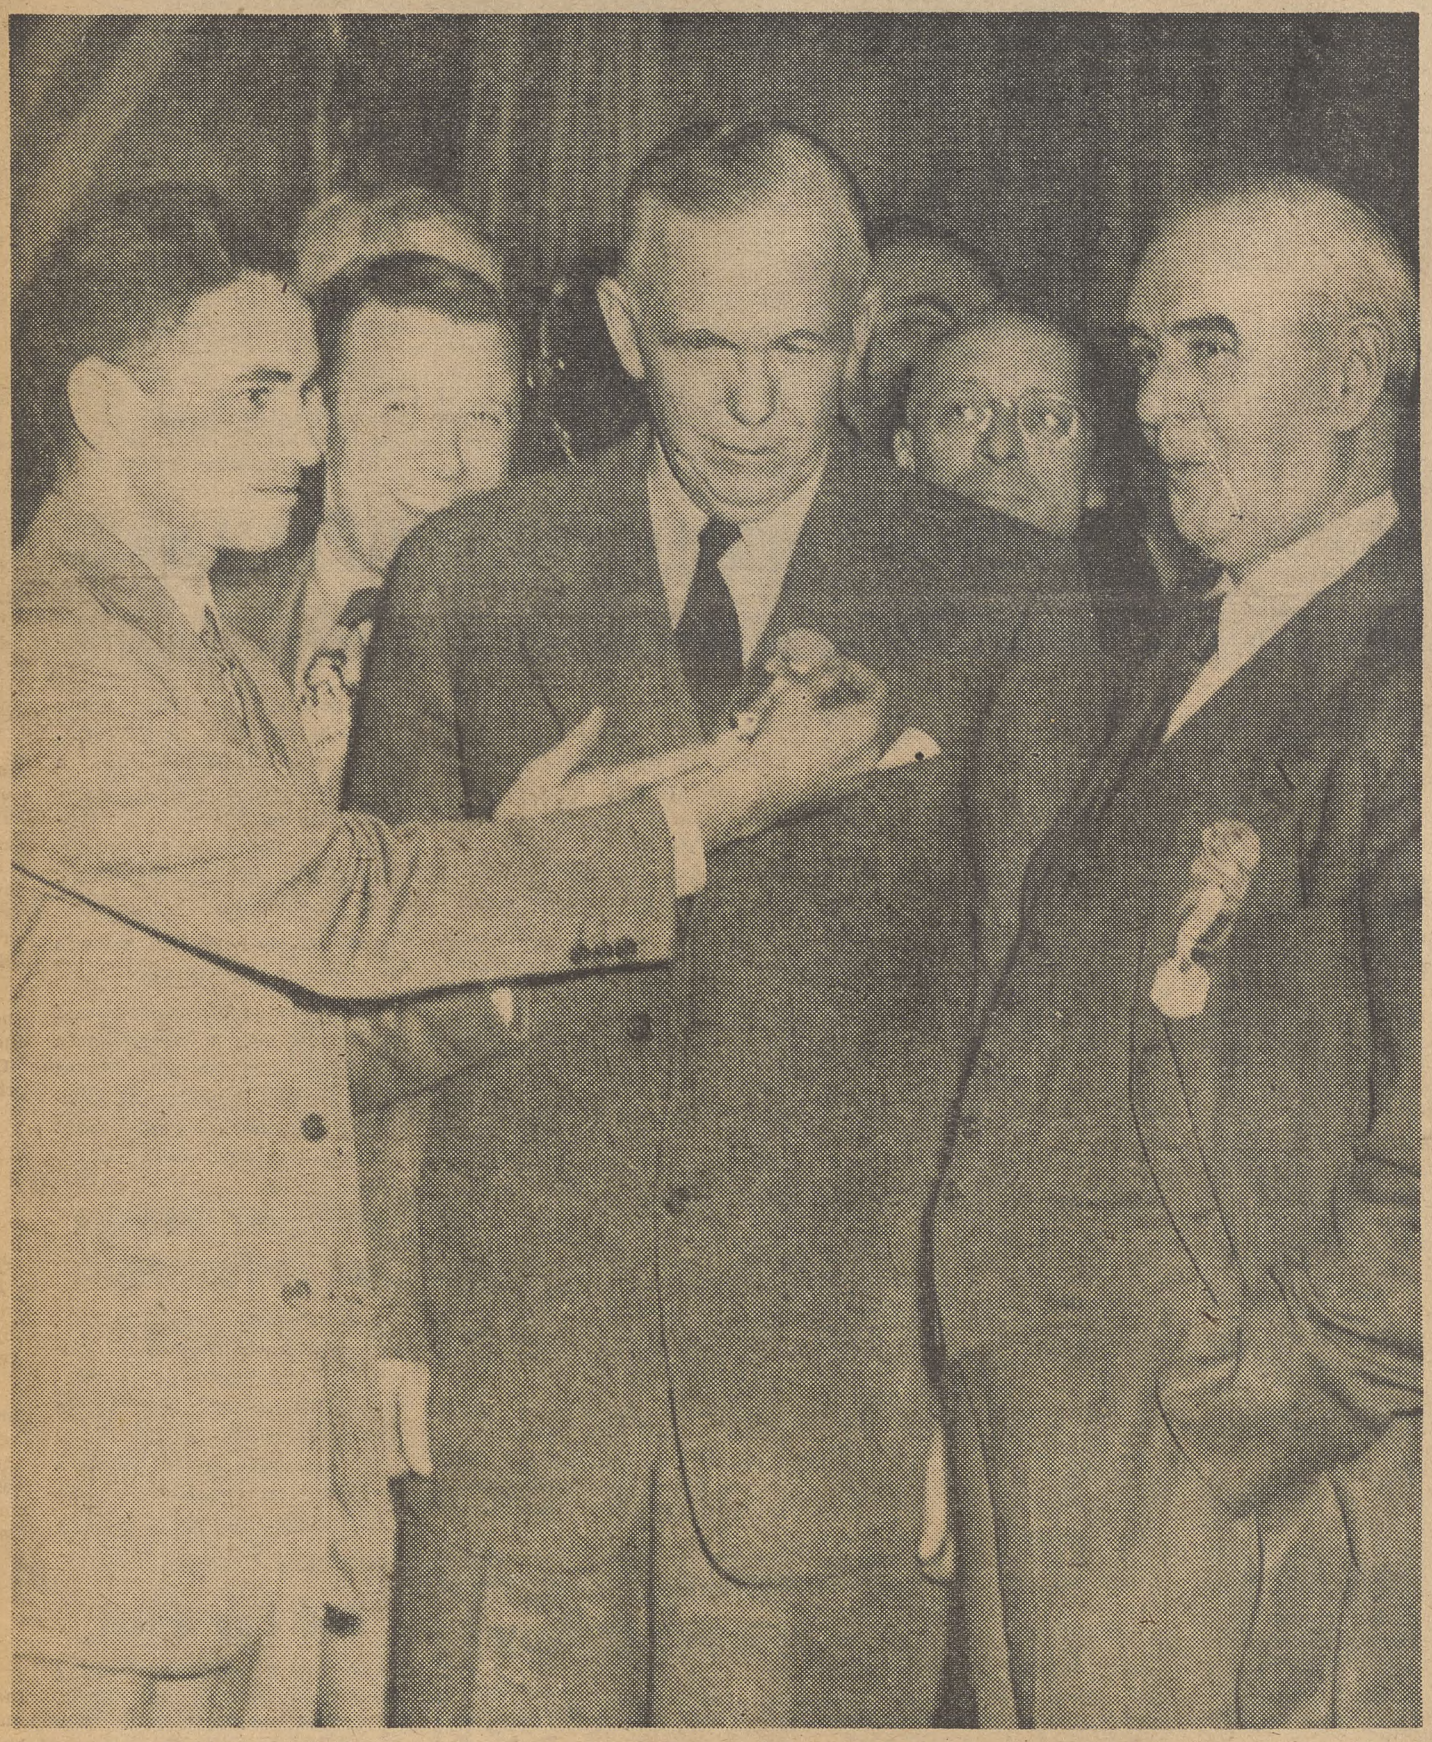
CIO SETS PATH FOR VICTORY BOTH AT HOME AND ABROAD



Medal of Honor: CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey (left) pins a Distinguished Visitor badge on Secy. of State George C. Marshall after the soldier-statesman addressed the CIO convention at Boston. CIO Pres. Philip Murray smiles as he watches the ceremony, which was accorded to every guest speaker. Marshall and Murray keynoted the convention's deliberations on a foreign policy resolution. The "Marshall Idea" was backed by the CIO head. The delegates to the convention then unanimously adopted a resolution advocating the providing of food for the starving and listing steps for peace. Marshall was the first Secretary of State ever to address a national labor convention in the history of the nation.

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

In New York City, 5000 persons had some bad moments when their rush-hour subway train was trapped for 73 minutes in a tunnel 51 feet under the East River.

In the mid-Atlantic, 69 passengers and crewmen were rescued after hours on a derelict flying boat which had made a forced landing on the waves.

That convention had just about everything.

It was by far the biggest in the CIO's healthy existence. It was covered by some 200 news correspondents, who represented a wide variety of organizations, ranging from the Harvard Crimson to the Daily Worker, from the New York Times to the London Telegraph.

But, it had a lot more than that. On the opening day, for instance, delegates roared with delight as a wise cracking governor of staid Massachusetts handed it out. And, he could take it too, for he laughed at CIO Director Joe Salerno's good-natured jibing of his Republican sponsors.

Then, there was a husky, athletic-looking high prelate of the Catholic church, who made a rousing speech that CIO Pres. Philip Murray (who was re-elected) called a "masterpiece of logic." That was Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, archbishop of Boston.

Also, there were these speakers, described by Murray in these colorful words: Sen. Claude Pepper—"his heart remains with the workers;" Rabbi Joseph Loth Liebman, author of the best-seller, "Peace of Mind"—" a man of profound understanding"; Secy. of Labor Schwellenbach—"a pleasure to number this man among my personal friends"; Secy. of State Marshall—"a man of patience and knowledge"; Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr.—"a great son of a great man."

Now, usually, a convention is a dull, boring thing. But. not a CIO convention (Murray called it "the greatest parliament of labor ever convened anywhere in the universe"). Daily, the convention hall galleries at the Bradford Hotel were packed with visitors eager to see what makes the CIO tick. And they saw it,

MURRAY RENAMED; KNIGHT A V.P.

PRES. Philip Murray, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and eight of the nine CIO vice presidents were reelected last week at the CIO convention.

O. A. Knight, president of the Oil Workers, became the ninth vice president when incumbent R. J. Thomas, Auto Workers, declined renomination, saying that the vice presidencies should cover more unions. Walter P. Reuther, president of the Auto Workers, was reelected a vice-president.

Other vice presidents reelected are L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Joseph Curran, Maritime Union; Albert Fitzgerald, Electrical Workers; John Green, Shipbuilding Union; Allan S. Haywood, Director of Organization; Emil Rieve, Textile, and Frank Rosenblum, Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Murray and Haywood are from the Steelworkers and Carey from UE.

THE nomination of Murray, by Jacob S. Potofsky, president of Amalgamated, set off a floor demonstration that lasted for 13 minutes.

In an acceptance speech, Murray noted that AFL Pres. William Green, accepting reelection at his convention, had urged "my erring fellow workers to come back into the house of labor, happily furnished, beautifully decorated, and occupy the rooms we have kept for you."

Murray said he noted the windows have been washed and the floors cleaned.

He declared he was for unity of labor, but "God forbid that I ever do anything that would hurt a CIO union." He said the AFL must have written guarantees to protect CIO affiliates.

HE noted that he was the only one left in the CIO of the eight men who met in an Atlantic City hotel room 12 years ago and formed the then Committee for Industrial Organization. Four have died, he said, and three have returned to the AFL.

He recalled that Lewis, in 1940, had condemned the unions returning to the AFL for "faltering and lamenting."

"Well," remarked Murray, "he (Lewis) left and today he is sitting by the road and he's lamenting."

Murray accused the Administration in Washington of being derelict in its duty and lacking in vigor and initiative. He also denounced "racketeering businessmen."

Hits Attacks On Jews

THE CIO convention, after recounting the anti-Jewish acts of the post-war era, made this resolve:

"(1) That the American delegates to the United Nations take every possible step to secure the adoption by the United Nations of the majority report of the United Nations Commission on Palestine.

"(2) That our Government immediately enact a code of laws dealing with the hateful evil of racial bigotry. We must recognize immediately that anti-Semitism and other forms of racial prejudice is one of the most threatening evils which face us. We must make anti-Semitism and anti-racial acts and incitements a crime. This country is a symbol the whole world over of the effective assimilation of diverse peoples and cultures. We must continue to implement our tradition of human tolerance by branding those who would oppose and destroy it as evildoers. We therefore endorse the Buckley Bill, H.R. 2848, which would ban the dissemination of anti-racial propaganda.

"(3) Our Government, in accordance with its traditional generosity toward aliens and its sympathetic welcome of oppressed peoples, should immediately open its doors to the thousands of homeless and desperate Jews in Europe. By such an act we can furnish to the entire world an inspiring example of a concrete program for the relief of the Jewish people.

"(4) That American trade unions give their complete support to the campaign under way to obtain financial assistance to aid the General Federation of Jewish Workers in Palestine in its colossal task of rescuing, rehabilitating and upbuilding their country."

Pro and Con

James Matles, CIO Electrical Workers' delegate, wound up a discussion of the Taft-Hartley resolution, in which he attacked the law and those who signed affidavits, by remarking:

"Let us ponder on what we are doing."

Pres. Philip Murray, from the chair, said: "Jimmy, might I ask you a question in the most friendly way? Are you for or against the resolution?"

Matles: "I am for the resolution and its lofty purposes."

Murray: "I thought the record ought to show something about that."

Stratton Bill Is Indorsed

The Stratton Bill (J. R. 2910), aimed at allowing some 400,000 war displaced refugees to enter the U. S. during the next five years, received unanimous endorsement last week from the CIO convention.

The bill, introduced at the last session, is due for possible action in Congress when a House committee returns from a European tour with its recommendations.

In Boston, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told a New England meeting of the Citizens Committee for Displaced Persons that "CIO is for the bill with all its force and with no desire that it be watered down."

Carey indicated to the citizens committee that action to help the displaced persons is an integral part of any program for European aid. America is a nation of immigrants, he noted, and the contribution of many national groups has strengthened the nation.

"There is a better understanding of freedom among workers than among the ranks of the Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and the Investment Bankers' Association," he declared. Workers, Carey pointed out, fought the Chinese exclusion act and all other forms of discrimination.

GENTLEMEN OF PRESS VS. SECY. OF LABOR SCHWELLENBACH

THE CIO convention was just about the best-covered—in the matter of numbers of reporters at least—that has ever been held.

Press credentials were issued to 65 representatives of daily newspapers, 71 from labor papers, 24 from wire and news services, 21 from radio and 15 from magazines.

It was a diverse group of reporters and photographers. And, there were a relatively large number of women reporters—not "sob sisters," but actually covering the convention.

The papers and services represented were varied, too. There was, for instance, a student from the Harvard Crimson. There were several reporters from the Christian Science Monitor. The others ranged from the Daily Worker to the Chamber of Commerce organ; from the New York Times to the London Daily Telegraph; from Freiheit to the Executives' Labor Letter.

The appearance of Secy. of State Marshall on Wednesday drew the biggest press gallery of the week.

The CIO News and Publicity staff issued scores of mimeographed texts, statements and background material. As soon as a text was received, it was rushed on to a stencil and distributed a few minutes later. The staff also set up press conferences (like the one above, with Labor Secy. Schwellenbach), obtained hotel rooms for correspondents, gave advice on good eating and entertainment places. And, at the same time, prepared the material for this issue of CIO News.

At the end of the convention, Pres. Philip Murray said: "I am told that this convention has had a larger press gathering than at any other time. You are to be congratulated that the people of America have come to recognize you as an extremely important labor organization and your decisions as of extreme importance."

CIO Sets Path to Victory For Labor

in full sight of their eyes. The audience was widely varied too. One day, there were several score ministerial students; another time a group of debutantes who are studying social conditions; next, college students; then, a visitor from India; again, a group of businessmen, perhaps envious that the NAM or C. of C. conventions weren't as colorful—or democratic—as the CIO.

Mothers brought their children, there were priests, ministers, rabbis, Catholics, Protestants and Jews, Negroes—cross section of the labor movement. One day, ex-Gov. Maurice Tobin, a militant liberal, dropped in to say hello informally to Murray, was drafted for a brief, but fighting speech.

The immense size of the gathering—some 700 delegates, scores of alternates, staff members, the press, visitors from out of town—placed hotel accommodations at a premium. The CIO News staff, for instance, was scattered over three hotel. Perhaps 10 hotels in all had some or a lot of the CIO throng.

Boston weather was close to ideal. The city's famed restaurants delighted epicures. And, the women were beautiful and charming.

Best quip of the week: Murray's reference to the AFL convention fight between John L. Lewis and other AFL leaders as the "Battle of the Bulge."

Most respected man: From the moment the strains of the Star Spangled Banner filled the hall on Monday morning, until the sessions came to an end Friday, it was obvious that one man was respected, honored and esteemed by everyone in the hall, by everyone in the balcony, by every visitor, by every speaker.

Perhaps the best example of how people felt about Philip Murray was given by a hotel chambermaid, who stopped a member of the CIO News staff and said: "Please tell Mr. Murray for me that I think he is a godly man."

The convention was a busy one, with committee meetings, panel sessions, PAC demonstrations, etc. Elsewhere in this issue you'll find a comprehensive roundup of the week. But, here are thumbnail highlights:

Foreign Policy: Murray stated the aims of the resolution, adopted unanimously: "The theme of the resolution, the soul of the resolution, the heart of the resolution, the pulse-beat of the resolution provides through this great house of labor, a means to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and shelter the homeless and give medicine to the sick . . .

"Every delegate, when he votes for this resolution, pledges himself and his organization to support these ideals. And he cannot betray them, either through the use of subtlety or evasion or in hidden places or in open forums and be loyal to the CIO."

Political Action: "The coming year will not be an easy one . . . Other generations have faced a similar threat. It is for us in our generation to determine the outcome of the present struggle. This is it." That's Jack Kroll, PAC director, summing it up.

Taft-Hartley Law: This law was conceived in sin"—Murray.

Afterthought: The Daughters of Pocahontas held a convention in the Bradford at the same time as the CIO. The Daughters of Pocahontas now know a lot more about the CIO than they did before.

Hartley Has Cop Escort In Boston

While the CIO Convention was meeting in Boston, Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.), of the Taft-Hartley axis, arrived in the city to make a speech. He was taken to the Statler Hotel under police escort.

McKellar Decides Not To Run Again

Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.) staunch believer in the qualities and leadership of Kenneth McKellar—and definitely in no remote fashion a friend of CIO—has announced he will not be a candidate for reelection.

"I will finish up doing the best I can for my state," he declared.

2nd Pay Boost

CIO Fur & Leather workers at the Alpena Tanning Co., Alpena, Mich., last week won 4c an hour in addition to a 10c increase obtained last April. Another benefit is a hospitalization plan for all employes.

The blanket increase since VJ-Day totals 30c an hour, plus spot adjustments.

AFL Still Scornful

Murray Pleads For Political Unity

THE degree of importance which the CIO convention attached to political action can best be emphasized by the fact that of 36 resolutions presented in pamphlet form to the convention, 32 concerned this vital function of CIO members.

Jack Kroll, PAC Director, and Pres. Philip Murray led the discussion on PAC, which was unanimously re-indorsed by the convention.

Murray received an ovation when he called upon the AFL, convening simultaneously in San Francisco, to set aside jurisdictional disagreements and take steps "toward a meeting of representatives of all branches of labor to formulate an immediate joint program for political action on local, state and national levels to assure the election of candidates to public office who will be responsive to the needs of the American people."

This should be done, Murray stated, because "we—your organization, ours and the Railroad Brotherhoods—have common enemies, working and planning day and night for the destruction of the American unions for enslavement of American workers, for the depression of American living standards . . .

"Time grows short, brothers of the AFL. We must act for mutual defense before it is too late."

AFL head William Green immediately rejected the proposal, declaring organic unity must come first. A. L. Whitney accepted for the brotherhoods.

After Green's refusal, Murray told the CIO delegates that "the mere refusal does not mean too much. I know the people in the grass roots want to work together."

"In giving you advice on political action," he said, "I do not know whether I am violating the Taft-Hartley Act or not. The act says that while you are working for a union, you have no right to talk about candidates. I have no right to talk to you over this microphone about candidates for public office. I have no right to hire a hall. I have no right to use a newspaper.

Test of Law

"Over in Pennsylvania, we did not go in there to campaign. We announced through the newspapers that we intended to test the constitutionality of T-H. We said so and said so openly.

"I discovered to my dismay that the Dept. of Justice has a man in the mills of Pennsylvania to find out if we violated the act. We admit we have violated the act. Why did not the Dept. of Justice come around and see Phil Murray and ask him about it?"

In his address, Kroll declared "the coming year will not be an easy one. Other generations have faced a similar threat. It is for us in our generation to determine the outcome of the present struggle. This is it."

Kroll asserted, "We have analyzed and condemned the disgraceful record of the 80th Congress. We have voiced our indignation over the Taft-Hartley bill and pledged ourselves to resist and finally to repeal it.

An Exciting Moment: CIO Pres. Philip Murray reads a message to the AFL convention proposing unity on a practical basis to fight labor's foes, while CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, right, arranges the notes. Henry C. Fleisher, assistant director of the CIO Publicity Dept., left, gets ready to take the proposals to the waiting newspapermen. The AFL, however, rejected the proposals, sticking to its position that organic unity must come first.

"We have exposed the swollen power of American monopoly. We have taken the lead in the fight to stem the disastrous inflation which its lust for profit has induced. We have spoken out in defense of civil liberties.

"Talking organization to this audience is like talking about fires to firemen. Basically, there is little difference between organizing men and women for political action and organizing them into unions. The techniques are the same, the goals are the same, and the men and women whom we are trying to reach are the same. Nevertheless, we haven't yet been able to duplicate our success at economic organization in the field of politics. Why?

"Let us be frank. We haven't done the job that we can do and must do because we haven't sufficiently applied ourselves to that job.

Need Conviction

"When we are really convinced that organizing Pittsburgh politically is as important as organizing Carnegie Steel; when we are really convinced that organizing Detroit politically is as important as organizing Ford; when we are really convinced that organizing San Francisco politically is as important as organizing the water front then we'll be winning elections in Pittsburgh and in Detroit and in San Francisco.

"Let's not forget that unions in this country didn't exactly flourish under Cal Coolidge and Herbert Hoover. Let's remember that we grow strong and came to maturity under Franklin Roosevelt. For how many winters can we preserve that strength in the political climate of the 80th Congress?

"Gains won over the bargaining table are of no lasting value if they can be nullified by runaway prices engendered by profit-hungry men and uncontrolled by their spokesmen in government.

"I believe we have learned that lesson. Taft-Hartley taught us. The NAM-Congress and its economic experts who predicted abounding prosperity and low prices when price controls were lifted taught us. The suffering wives and children of American workers, who lack meat, bread and milk because of an inflation that could have been prevented, have taught us.

"What are our organizational needs? Primarily we need exactly what we needed when we first organized CIO over a decade ago. We need people.

Need Block Workers

"We must have active workers in the blocks where they live. These block workers are the key to success. Our PAC committees and our shop stewards can contact workers in the shops. We can talk to them at union meetings. But workers are also members of a community. They have community interests. They are part of a neighborhood. They live in that neighborhood. They vote in that neighborhood. It is in the neighborhoods that we must contact them and organize them politically.

"PAC has set as its objective one million volunteer block workers. They will form the citizens' army that will carry the message of PAC and its program into the parlors and kitchens and onto the front porches of America.

"We particularly need the active assistance of women in CIO—women who work in the plants, women who manage the household, women who know the problems which confront American families."

Kroll asserted, "I want to emphasize the importance of the registration campaign which block workers and PAC committees are now engaged in. The defeat of 1946 was caused chiefly because the voters of America, no the progressive voters of America, just didn't vote. Less than 35 million exercised their constitutional and democratic right of franchise.

"The figures show that there are 91 million potential voters in our country. If only half of that number had gone to the polls in 1946, we wouldn't have a Taft-Hartley Law today. The practical political answer to Taft-Hartley is just that simple.

"Our job is to make sure that these voters who stayed home in 1946 are registered and voting in '48.

"Let's put the twin questions of enlisting block workers and registering members and paying poll taxes on the agenda of every union meeting, and keep them there from now on, through '48. If we keep plugging it, we can win.

"The entire American people know the terrible feeling of insecurity. Insecurity so grips them that some are on the verge of losing faith. The peace they believed was won is shaking. The hopes they held out for the future are fading.

"We must reverse this trend. We must hold fast to our political and economic principles. We must return in our minds and our hearts, in every fiber of our bodies to the founding days of CIO and find there the burning zeal which paved the way to a glorious period in American history. We must get down to the people. We must encourage them. We must speak to them and help them understand. We must organize them. We must organize them for political victory in '48."

Un-American Title Best He's Heard

Sen. Pepper brought down the house at the CIO convention with this crack:

"The Un-American Committee has got the best name I ever heard of.

"I think I will offer a resolution to reward some kind of recognition to the one who first thought of naming that committee the Un-American Committee."

PAC IN ACTION

Dayton, O.

A record off-year registration of approximately 21,000, since the Dayton primary elections has pushed the number of those eligible to vote November 4 in the City Commission race to 104,000.

This record registration comes close to the 118,000 who were registered to vote in 1944, and exceeds off-year registration figures by almost 20,000 eligible voters.

Political observers attributed the high registration to the drive of the CIO to elect its candidates, Charles E. Sims, president of the Montgomery County Industrial Union Council, and C. Josef McLin, businessman, to the City Commission. Sims placed first in the primaries with the highest vote ever achieved by a commission candidate, and McLin placed third, 50 votes out of second place.

Leading in registration were the sixth and seventh wards on the West Side, where 5,000 more are now registred than have even been in the city's history, and the second, third, tenth and eleventh wards, which are labor strongholds in the city.

As soon as the tremendous registration began, a so-called "citizens' committee" of 11 people was formed with the blessings of the three Dayton newspapers.

They announced that their goal was to keep the city "free from the domination of any group of self-seeking interests," referring to the CIO and Negro groups in the city. They are rumored to be raising a fund of $50,000.

Rev. Ira Wilbert has submitted his registration from the committee, stating that his participation was erroneously solicited, and that the facts were misrepresented to him.

The committee never met in a formal meeting to draw up their statement which was released to the press, but rather it was read to the individuals over the 'phone by C. J. Brenner.

San Francisco

The San Francisco CIO Council has made its final endorsements for the city election.

The complete endorsements follow:

For Mayor, Frank R. Havenner; for District Attorney, Edmund G. Brown; for Board of Supervisors, John E. Byrnes, F. D. Haynes, Dewey Mead; for 21st A. D., Irving S. Rosenblatt, Jr.

Council Secretary Paul Schnur called attention to the fact that the AFL and CIO have established real working unity in the campaign around the candidacies of Havenner, Brown, Byrnes, Haynes, Mead and Rosenblatt.

Ohio CIO

The Ohio Council is distributing a petition — "Resign, Senator Taft!"—which was approved by the recent state convention.

William Lavelle, secretary-treasurer, urged that the petitions "be sent through the shops and every worker given the opportunity to sign. The campaign is an excellent vehicle to spur the PAC dollar drive."

'INFAMOUS LAW'

FOLLOWING are excerpts from the Taft-Hartley resolution unanimously passed at the CIO convention:

"In defiance of the overwhelming protest of millions of Americans, the reactionary 80th Congress has passed the Taft-Hartley Act.

"This infamous law was not passed in a vacuum. It is a vital part of a coordinated program . . . for which the zealots in the Republican and Democratic parties share the responsibility.

"This Act seeks to strip the great mass of our people of the means of resisting attacks upon unions. It seeks to condemn the great mass of the American people now to depression living standards and to prevent in the future any lasting escape from the cycle of boom, bust and mass employment . . .

"UNDER this new Act "yellow-dog" contracts, company unions, vigilante committees, all of the most shameful devices in the arsenal of the anti-labor monopolists, ousted from the law only after years of bitter struggle, have again received government sanction. The new Act restores the evil of government by injunction . . .

"The sponsors of this Act have boasted that henceforth it is illegal for a labor organization even to print the voting records of the reactionaries who approved it . . .

"We propose, as good Americans, to fight the political restraints in this legislation.

"WE WOULD betray a fundamental heritage of political liberty if we allowed ourselves to be gagged by the law . . . We will not comply with the unconstitutional limitations on political activity which are written into the T-H Act.

"We dedicate ourselves to an unceasing campaign against the un-American conspiracy which has produced this Act. We pledge ourselves not to permit this Act to destroy either the economic or the political rights of the people. Nor will we permit the blackmail, the threats and the smears of . . . The House Labor and Un-American Committees to divide or deter us . . .

"We hereby dedicate our organizations and the entire membership to work unceasingly in the political field in complete unity with all labor organizations and other progressive groups to insure the political repudiation of those reactionaries who are responsible for the T-H Act, and to preserve a free America."

'We Dedicate Our Organization To Work Unceasingly In Political Field Against T-H'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"WE hereby dedicate our organizations and the entire membership to work unceasingly in the political field in complete unity with all labor organizations and other progressive groups to insure the political repudiation of those reactionaries who are responsible for the Taft-Hartley Act, and to preserve a free America."

With that pledge, unanimously adopted and vigorously cheered, the CIO ushered in what is intended to become a year of unprecedented political activity and determination, designed to end in the defeat of Congressional supporters of the T-H Law.

The CIO will, of course, experience difficulties under the statute, Pres. Philip Murray said, but "it is not going to stop the growth of the CIO. That is not an idle statement. That is a statement based upon facts."

There was no room for conjecture on how the CIO head regarded the law. "It was conceived in sin" and "developed in the minds of diabolical men." He described it variously as "a legal monstrosity," "a vicious piece of reprehensible legislation designed to undermine the labor movement in the U. S. . . . and lower the standards of living of men, women and children all over the country," "not only vicious but foolhardy,'" and "nonsensical."

CIO unions would choose their own methods of coping with the law in accordance with the autonomy given them by the CIO constitution, Murray said, but "there is no division in the councils of the CIO about fighting the T-H Law."

Speaking for himself, Murray stated that "due to some personal convictions which ran very deep," he had determined after the law's enactment neither to sign a noncommunist affidavit or file the financial data required of union wishing to have recourse to the National Labor Relations Board, unless the CIO Steelworkers' Executive Board changed his mind about it. The Board has since affirmed his position.

"I stated that I was unwilling to file an affidavit that I was not a Communist," Murray stated. "I do not know why the Congress of the U. S. should require me to do that, as a citizen. I think the Congress is very presumptuous, because I think if they could do that to me about this question of communism, they could do it with any other citizen about any other kind of issue.

"Why did not this Congress incorporate in this legislation a provision asking a member of a union holding office if he is a member of the Ku Klux Klan? They did not do it . . . The Congress had in mind a diabolical piece of work, extremely discriminatory in nature, and revolting to a citizen who believes in decency and in justice and in freedom."

Whether his action, and that of the Steelworker's Executive Board was good or bad, Murray said he could not predict. "Time, circumstance and conditions "would affect future policy of the union. He hinted, however, that a reversal of policy by the Board was unlikely, "since it is not the purpose of that union to change its mind very quickly."

OUTLINING the responsibilities of CIO unions in the T-H battle, Murray listed: the education of the people, the provision of information, the use of the radio and newspapers, the registration of men and women for voting purposes next year and participation in primary elections.

Of the character of the ensuing battle he remarked:

"Let us hope it will not have to be the picket line, but at any rate it is going to be at that line where the ballot box is." The T-H resolution specifically pledged that the CIO will not "comply with the unconstitutional limitations on political activity which are written into the T-H Act."

What could American labor expect from the new NLRB, headed by Denham? That question was answered by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman.

"The individual worker will be driven away from his union," Pressman stated. He will once again be 'liberated' in the sense that Mr. Sloan (former General Motors President) and Mr. Wilson (GM president) want them liberated."

Sloan, during the 1936 sitdown strike at GM, had stated, according to the CIO Council: "What is the strike all about? Any worker in the plants of General Motors has been free at all times to walk into my office and tell me about his grievance."

What sort of a man is Denham? Pressman answered that with a quote from a report written by Denham when he was a trial examiner for the Board:

OF a Negro leader Denham had reported that "his tendency to concoct almost any fabrication as an answer under such circumstances is well recognized among the white men of the South. Close and intimate contact with the Negro has taught the white overseer to recognize when a Negro is lying."

This section was stricken out of the final report by Denham's superiors, the speaker said.

The CIO Counsel said that it was insufficient to say that the new law had weakened or undermined the Wagner Labor Act. "The T-H Law has repealed the Wagner Act, and you no longer have any legal protection of your rights to organize," he declared.

● By a recent Denham ruling "employers may not only have their spies and infiltrate them into unions," Pressman said, but employers are in effect authorized to hire spies to watch trade unions "because you have to do that to find out whether the unions are engaging in unfair labor practices."

● In three cases, within 24 hours after the employer filed charges against unions, the Board has obtained injunctions against the workers, "driving them back to work." This was cited as an indication of the rapidity with which the Board is acting against unions.

● If an employer discharges a worker for union activity, but uses the pretext that the worker has violated a plant rule, the Board "may not reinstate" the employe. "I don't believe . . . that any employe discharged for union activity, where the employer claims he fired him because he violated a plant rule, will be reinstated by the new Board."

● A provision which bans "coercion" or interference with the rights of individual employes makes it possible for a "few stool-pigeons" to sign affidavits that they were coerced by union organizers and thereby to obtain an injuncton against the organizing activities. Likewise it is possible for a small group of "stool-

Rabbi Hails CIO As Jews' Friend

The Jews of the world recognize the CIO as one of the "staunchest friends of Israel's survival in dignity and freedom," Rabbi Joseph Loth Liebman of the Temple Israel told CIO convention delegates.

The Rabbi, author of the best seller, "Peace of Mind", before delivering an invocation which moved the conventioners to applause, thanked Pres. Philip Murray "for his courageous and statesmanlike statement in behalf of the United Nations report on Palestine."

The CIO stands, he said, "as one of the great friends and coworkers of the Jewish people, and for that creative partnership we shall always be grateful, because we know, the Jews of the world know and have known throughout history . . . that Israel can never be secure until mankind is secure, and that where any human being is oppressed, there also Israel is oppressed."

Oliver Mertz; Arthur Willis, president of Local 3, Boston, a visitor; General Counsel Benjamin M. Robinson; Pres. William J. Riehl, and Martin Liberatore, international representative, a visitor. MURRAY CALLS FOR LEADER TO COMBAT INFLATION

The Truman Administration was warned by CIO Pres. Philip Murray that the country has "a crying need for leadership" to combat inflation and save the system of free enterprise.

The warning was sounded by Murray in an extemporaneous talk before 1,500 representatives of labor and management attending a meeting of the Boston Industrial Relations Council on the eve of the opening of the 9th constitutional convention of CIO.

"I believe in free enterprise and the profit system. But I do not know how long our system can endure when in many places it has become a system of practical extortion," he said.

He charged that "our statesmen are endulging themselves in a lot of idle hope—praying that something will happen. The people of the United States are not looking for that kind of leadership. They are looking for people in responsible positions who will rise to the occasion and lead—lead in that direction which provides security against intrusianism in America."

He reiterated his suggestion that Congress be immediately reconvened to give special consideration to Europe and its starving people and to make that help "more practical through Congressional action that will drive this system of practical extortion from the market place."

Murray attacked the Taft-Hartley act labeling it as a "sinful piece of legislation conceived in the minds of diabolical men." However, it was on the subject of inflation that he was most vehement.

"I think America is in universal agreement," he said, "that prices are too high, and if continued at or about the present level, we are going to jeopardize the health of many people here and interfere seriously with production . . ."

"I know in my heart and soul that we are living in the greatest land in the world, the most tolerant and beneficial democracy in the universe. I will fight with all the strength I may possess against any one or any group that may attempt by use of force to upset this government of ours.

"While we fight for the preservation of this form of government, nevertheless at the same time we shall also fight against the evils which beset us from within. We shall fight for a better day and a better life for the workers of the nation, and a profitable enterprise for the investors."

Other speakers addressing the gathering included, Massachusetts Gov. Robert F. Bradford; Michael T. Kelleher, president of Boston Chamber of Commerce; and Temporary Mayor John B. Hynes.

Lima Mayor Gives A Buck To PAC

He's given adollar to PAC.

The mayor contributed when a committee from UE Local 724, representing workers in the Westinghouse plant, visited him to talk PAC.

What's more, Mayor Ferguson is getting smart fast. He came across on the committee's first visit. Previously, it took five visits to persuade him to sign a letter to President Truman urging veto of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

RAW! RAW!

Sen. Pepper at CIO convention:

"It seems it was the day before the big college game. A bombshell burst on the coach with the announcement from the dean that the star player had been disqualified.

"The dean said 'we caught him cheating yesterday.'

"'I don't believe my player would cheat,' the coach blustered. 'A fine student like him. What evidence do you have?'

"'The star athlete sat in class right across from the star student. When their exam papers were compared, it was found the two were indentical on the first nine questions.'

"'But,' said the dean, 'I can answer that best with the manner in which they replied to the last question. The A student wrote: I don't know. The player wrote: I don't know either.'"

Murray's Keynote Speech:

PRICES IMPERIL U. S. LIVING STANDARDS

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

ISSUES confronting the Nation today are of such grave importance that the CIO must speak out not only for its members but for all the American people, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in his keynote speech on the opening day of the CIO convention in Boston.

While skyrocketing prices are undermining the living standards of millions in the low-income groups on the one hand, staggering profits for a few are being raked in by big corporations on the other, Murray declared.

Warning that "the most dangerous inflationary situation that has ever developed in the history of the United States now presents itself to the American people, "Murray stated that government figures show that while the savings of the low-income groups are exhausted, profits after taxes are calculated to be in excess of $17 billion.

"The 1947 picture describes tragically, insofar as profits are concerned," Murray said, "that there is a greater concentration of wealth in the U. S. today than we have ever had at any time in our national history.

"Prices going up, living standards going down, and profits going to unprecedented heights. That is the picture, and those profits are emanating from the particular industries where people are required to purchase the necessities of life, such as foods, textiles, and other types of basic industry."

Answering a statement made by Sen. Taft and some of his colleagues in the course of OPA hearings 18 months ago that high prices are directly attributable to high wages, Murray said the present state of affairs belies this statement. "There have been no general wage increases in the U. S. in the course of the past eight or nine months," he asserted.

Blasts Extortion

"The recent skyrocketing of prices therefore is directly attributable to those practises of extortion which lie at the doorstep of the great industrialists and food combines . . ."

The present critical situation makes it imperative, Murray told the convention, that Congress "be brought back into session immediately, and that its attention should be directed toward a solution of these internal economic problems."

If necessary, he said, "rationing of a reasonable nature should be returned, price controls be made effective, and extortionate profits taken from the pocketbooks of the American consumers by those large industrialists should be taken away from them and put into the public treasury where they can do the most good."

The CIO is concerned not only with the well-being of Americans, but is also in favor of aiding those suffering from hunger in any devastated country in Europe or elsewhere, Murray declared, in pointing out that lower prices would mean more money for foreign relief.

In the interest of universal peace, he said, "it would seem to be the bounden duty of our American Government to see to it that prices are driven down, and that the Shylocks in the market places of the Nation are put where they properly belong."

Instead of passing legislation to meet the economic stress, however, Congress passed the Taft-Hartley bill, which Murray charged, was "a sinful piece of legislation," promoted by men "seething with hatred." They designed or contrived this law, he said, "for the purpose of imposing their wrath upon the millions of organized and unorganized workers."

T-H Monstrosity

Murray termed the law a "legal monstrosity . . . beyond the ken of ordinary men," and "a nonsensical piece of legislation, not only vicious but foolhardy."

He said it was the only full employment bill designed to protect segments of our population ever passed in this country, as it gives full employment to all the lawyers. "You're not going to find an idle lawyer anywhere in the United States while that law is in effect," Murray added, as the delegates roared with laughter.

The CIO's answer to the serious problems facing the American people, lies in its political action program, Murray said. "We are undertaking for the first time in our history, a real national campaign to organize votes, and to get out large registrations.

"Every unit affiliated with the National CIO is now bending every possible effort toward the accomplishment of that object, namely, the largest registration we have ever had in the history of our Nation, for the year 1948 It is the only way these problems can be answered."

Murray told the delegates that in giving them political advice through the medium of the convention, he might be violating the Taft-Hartley law, which holds that while working for a union, a person has no right to talk about candidates.

"I have no right while I am being paid by my organization, to talk to you over this microphone about candidates for public office," "I have no right to hire a hall; I have no right to use a newspaper.

"Well, I have hired a hall and I am using this microphone and I am ordering the CIO today to use the newspapers again. It can only be done in this way to test the constitutionality of the Act."

Other problems mentioned by Murray which call for CIO action were the fight against use of the injunction in labor disputes, and against lynching in the South. On the question of the rights of Jews to a land of their own in Palestine, he recommended that the CIO support the majority report of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine which urges the establishment of independent Jewish and Arab states in Palestine as a just and workable solution.

As for internal dissension within the CIO, Murray said he did not think it was anything to be disturbed about. "I am quite sure that every issue, no matter what it may be will be resolved by the delegates attending this convention in the usual amiable and very practical way," he said.

Loyal to Nation

Reaffirming his statement made at the 1946 convention that the CIO owes "its allegiance to one country and its loyalty to one flag," Murray strengthened it by adding that the CIO has a loyal adherence and devotion to this Nation's "form of government; to its Constitution and to its basic democratic institutions."

As a special word of warning, he said "Let no one whilst we are conducting our militant fight for economic justice in the United States get on the public platforms and through the use of subtleties attempt to convey the impression that this organization is anything than what I have said it is to this convention this morning."

Murray concluded his keynote address by outlining the steps taken to bring about labor unity with the American Federation of Labor, which he said had so far this convention this morning."

Jurisdictional

The only jurisdictional dispute that reached the floor of the CIO convention last week centered on Christopher Columbus.

The convention opened on Columbus Day, and Massachusetts State CIO President Joseph Salerno insisted that Mr. C. had been a weaver in his youth—and would have belonged in the Textile Workers Union.

But one speaker claimed Columbus was rightly in the National Maritime Union. Another insisted that Brother C. would really have signed up with the Masters, Mates and Pilots.

10,000 Went To Schools

Ten thousand CIO members attended school this summer, learning about unions and day-to-day problems, CIO Director of Research and Education Kermit Eby told convention delegates.

Speaking in support of an adopted resolution endorsing the Labor Extension Bill, Eby urged union members to contribute generously to help in the campaign to push the bill.

William Lavell, Lima, Ohio, also spoke in favor of the resolution, pointing out that the support of all was needed if the campaign was to succeed, and urging them to give financial aid to the Natl. Committee for the Extension of Labor Education. Frank Fernbach of the United Steelworkers is the CIO liaison officer on the committee.

The bill calls for the establishment of a Labor Extension Service in the Dept. of Labor similar to the extension service of the Dept. of Agriculture.

Archbishop Cushing Calls For 'Year Round' Pay

'I Belong Here': Catholic Archbishop Cushing of Boston said that he broke an ecclesiastical schedule to appear at the CIO convention because he believed that "priests always belonged close to the ranks of labor." The archbishop delivered the opening address.

MOST Rev. Richard J. Cushing, D. D., Catholic Archbishop of Boston, is proud to align himself with labor.

He is also proud that "every one of our Bishops and Archbishops is the son of a working man and a working man's wife."

Archbishop Cushing made a stirring address to the CIO convention at Boston, an address which was cheered many times and which brought the audience to its feet in a demonstration at its end.

Keynote of his address came with these words: "I should like to refer to two matters: one domestic, the other concerned with our foreign relations."

"I have read with interest some of the deliberations of both management and labor concerning the so-called guaranteed annual wage," he said. "The worry of the working man has traditionally been this: jobs today—but what will happen tomorrow?

"Up to now, many millions of Americans have been unable to answer that question for themselves. As a consequence, they live in a fear which God never intended to be theirs. A wage earner must have steady work and pay this week, next week and all the year round if he is to have security. Only an annual wage is an adequate wage. So runs the labor argument and it is a hard argument to answer.

"There can be no doubt some economic solution must be found so that a man may intelligently plan his future and make provision to discharge those responsibilities which have been placed on him by God Himself.

"It may or may not be the guaranteed annual wage, but it must be something close to it and I hope that a fair exchange of views on this subject between management, labor and representatives of the public will lead to an answer consistent with the needs and decent demands of labor."

Then, he made his other point —the one concerning foreign affairs.

"Unfortunately, at the moment, attitudes toward foreign policy are complicated by what are called 'conflicting ideologies'," he said. "Now, I do not know what an 'ideology' is.

"I suspect the word of being a catch phrase, a 'phony' word which can't be defined and which is therefore used to describe something not worth defining. Now-a-days we hear a lot about fighting 'ideologies,' and, here too, I am not sure how you go about fighting an 'ideology.'

"But I know what hunger is—and I know how to fight that. You might fight it with food. I know what poverty is. You fight that with money. I know what winter is. You fight that with coal and clothing. I know what discouragement is. You fight that with friendship and friendly deeds. I know what fear is and defeatism. You fight them with faith.

Fear Hungry People

"I do not know what the ideologies of the people of Europe and Asia are. I know what the ideologies of some of the political regimes are—but these are not the people. I know that all over Europe there is going to be hunger, poverty, cold, discouragement and fear. I know what these are and I know to what extremes they can drive decent, democratic God-loving people.

"I suspect that the best way to outwit or overcome evil 'ideologies,' whatever they may be, is by positive action of a non-political kind—by providing the things that fight hunger, poverty, cold discouragement and fear—by providing as efficiently and as much and as quickly as we can food, money, coal, clothing, friendship and faith to the workers, to all the needy of the world who turn to us.

"This hope I express: that an organization as powerful as the CIO—an organization with such great farreaching prestige—will give sincere and solid backing to such points and plans of American foreign policy as will put our resources — food, money, coal, clothing, friendship and faith—behind the democratic—the human war on hunger, poverty, cold, discouragement and fear in the war-breeding areas of the world.

"When we win that fight—a fight we can understand and can win—there will be less need for worry or talk or war about "ideologies'."

The prelate received prolonged cheers when he opened his address by declaring:

"I am glad to be here this morning because the invitation to speak which I received bore the signature of a great American—of a very great American—of a great American who has proved times beyond number both his Americanism and his greatness. I refer, of course, to the President of the CIO. Mr. Philip Murray.

Feels At Home

"But I am also glad to come because I belong here. I am a priest, an Archbishop. As such, I am by office and should be by my every personal action the representative of One Whom twenty centuries have hailed as their High Priest. To the eyes of other men, the Saviour appeared as a tradesman — a worker — and all those who share His priestly office should be found present wherever men are gathered who share in the labor which was the earthly vocation of Jesus Christ."

He went on to say:

"In this country it has been working people who have built the seminaries in which our priests are trained. Our institutions have no princely patrons; they are monuments to human labor and to the generosity of hard-working men and women.

"The aims of the CIO are those of the trade union movement and of organized labor generally. These are chiefly three: 1) the organization of the working men and women of America, without reference to race, creed, color or nationality, for mutual aid and protection; 2) the establishment of sound collective bargaining and wage agreements; 3) the promotion of legislation to safeguard economic security and social welfare, and to extend democratic institutions, civil rights and liberties.

"For my own part, I cannot see how any man in his right mind, certainly how any American with the slightest comprehension of Christianity, can complain about those objectives.

"The trade union movement has long since established its reputation for Americanism and its right to be heard. Whatever mistakes it may have made—and they are no more than those of other groups—to whatever excesses it may have gone—and these are easily balanced by those of its critics—the trade union movement is now a permanent part of the American picture. Labor is organized and it is organized to stay.

"I don't think organized labor should be discouraged when it is criticized. Everything that organizes arouses some one's resentment and some opposition. Organized religion does. Organized efforts of every kind do. An organized movement worth its salt welcomes criticism and thrives on opposition.

"In any case, there are no problems arising out of American organized labor, no problems internal to the Labor Movement or external to it in its relations with the rest of the community, which American Labor cannot solve in an American way within the framework of American law and in the best interest of the American people."

May God Bless Deliberations!

The invocation of the Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, D.D., Catholic Archbishop of Boston, at the opening session of the CIO convention in Boston:

"May God bless your deliberations! May God the Father, Who gave you your strength, teach you how to use it! May God the Son, made man to work among us, be your model! May God the Holy Ghost, the spirit diffused through the hearts of us all, unit with you one another and with all others who love God!"

C. of C. Man Lauds Unions

THANKS to unions, the working man is no longer an object of oppression and exploitation, but a human being with God-given rights which all must respect."

That was the keynote of a CIO convention address by Michael T. Kelleher, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, who brought the greetings of industry to the deliberations.

Kelleher, who paid warm tribute to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and also to CIO leaders who participated in the Boston Community Chest drive, declared:

"I think we all have reason to rejoice in the unusual contribution which your organization has made to the well-being of those who must spend sweat and tears and sometimes blood in the service of their fellow man.

"Thanks to the unions, labor has been able to assume something like its rightful position side by side with mangament and is no longer a miserable commodity in the power of a handful of grasping capitalists, whose type has almost completely disappeared from the American scene.

"Those who control the labor unions of the present day would be false to their trust if they did not bend every effort to preserve the bitterly contested gains of the past.

"No one understands this more clearly than do we of the Chamber of Commerce. We are in a position to know the problems of both labor and management. We are eager that labor may have a fair deal, not only because this is labor's inalienable right, but also because we know that with labor reduced to servitude, only a few will be wealthy and none will be truly prosperous.

Peacetime Draft Opposed By CIO

The CIO convention reiterated its opposition to peacetime conscription.

The resolution declared American youth should be returned to "peacetime occupations and gainful employment" and that a peacetime draft would carry "serious dangers for our own democracy and for the maintenance of world peace."

Trainmen Set Up Political Unit

The Bro. of Railroad Trainmen (unaffiliated) will set up a political organization for its 225,000 members which will parallel the action of CIO-PAC and AFL committees.

Announcing the plan, BRT Pres. A. F. Whitney said he agreed 100% with the suggestion of CIO Pres. Philip Murray that it would be better for the CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods to undertake a joint program "for effective political action." (A proposal to that effect, sent to the AFL convention Oct. 13 by Murray, was turned down.)

Whitney said he had suggested such a program on different occasions but that nothing had ever come of it, so the BRT decided to go it alone.

GOVERNOR ALMOST CONVERTED TO CIO'S NEW DEAL

"MASSACHUSETTS has always admired and respected a hard fighter who believes in the things he is fighting for. And that is what we think of Phil Murray."

That was how Massachusetts' Gov. Robert F. Bradford characterized the CIO president as he addressed the 9th CIO convention in Boston last week.

In fact, the Governor hinted, Murray almost won a convert to the "New Deal program of the CIO," for as Bradford listened to the CIO head he confided that he had remarked to himself. "Take a firm grip, Bradford, hang on, remember you are a Republican."

In introducing the Governor, Massachusetts CIO President Joseph Salerno had described him as one who had "zealously and enthusiastically worked with all the liberals and progressives . . . for the adoption of the fair employment practices law," enacted last year by the state legislature.

The Governor spoke with pride of his state's record in having the nation's best record for the least work stoppages during the past 9 years.

"That record," he stated, "means intelligent labor leadership. It means intelligent management leadership. It means something more; it means a healthy industrial climate. It means a realization in this old Commonwealth of ours that labor and management are equal partners; . . . that they sit down at the council table as equal partners . . . "

The speaker made only an indirect reference to restrictive labor legislation pushed through Congress and state legislatures by members of his party this year:

"No man has any idea, if he is in his right mind, of trying to turn back the clock away from the progress already made in the cause of workingmen's rights, of collective bargaining, or maintaining the gains already protected and safeguarded, as they should be, by our Constitution."

Pointing with pride to Massachusetts' constitution which guaranteed equality and indivual freedom 11 years before the Bill of Rights was adopted, Gov. Bradford reminded his audience that neither that guarantee nor the Bill of Rights "is any stronger than the will to maintain it."

In welcoming the delegates the Governor paid tribute to the way CIO tackles its problems. "You don't duck," he said. "You don't dodge; you don't weasel. You come right down the center of the line and you say what you think. . . "

Fighting a Tough Adversary: Hugh Donahue, left, and Angelo Ciampa, members of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, on the picket line at the East Boston shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Co., where they have been on strike 18 weeks. Only strike benefits each receives for a family of five is $6 a week. The CIO convention pledged that they would receive help, and three unions—Steel, Textile and the Clothing Workers—voted the IUMSW $35,000.

CIO Unions Give $35,000 To Aid Strike---More To Come

Not only did the CIO executive board and the convention pass a resolution supporting the strike of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers to the hilt—financially and morally—but the affiliated unions were quick to act.

Even before the convention had acted, the Steelworkers executive board contributed $25,000 as a down payment.

On the convention floor, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, announced that his union had voted $5000.

Sec. Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers announced that his union's board had also voted $5000 to the strikers, even though the TWUA is itself engaged in a series of smaller but costly strikes in the South.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers pledged that the union's executive board and the locals would make a donation. He said that the strike was following the pattern set after World War I when corporations grown fat with war profits tried to smash the unions.

Pres. Reid Robinson of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers said that this was no time to perpetuate the differences between the MMSW and the IUMSW, pledged the financial support of his organization and called for unity to back the strikers.

Shipyard Striker Says:

IT'S TOUGH SLEDDING KEEPING FAMILY OF 5 ON $6 A WEEK

By FRED ROSS

Ciampa has been on strike for 18 weeks at the East Boston ship yard of the Bethlehem Steel Co. for two very good reasons.

The company refuses to increase his pay to meet the cost of living and is demanding drastic contract revision that would endanger the existence of his union, the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

Ciampa is married and is the father of three children, ages 7, 4 and 2. He lives in a small apartment costing only $20 a month, but his only income is $6 a week in strike benefits in addition to some small assistance that he gets from the Greater Boston welfare agencies.

Ciampa's oldest son, Enrico, is in the hospital, suffering from a nose infection which occurred when a playmate accidentally struck him. His father said he has paid $56 for injections to combat the infection.

"How do you pay your bills?" Ciampa was asked on the picket line at East Boston, where 70 delegates to the CIO convention at Boston last week swelled the ranks of the pickets.

"I have a large grocery bill," the striker replied. "If it were not for the help that I get from my mother and the patience of the grocer, I don't know how we would eat."

Ciampa is not a fellow to cry over his hardships because it remained for local leaders to reveal that during the strike he was hospitalized several days.

Ciampa and the local leaders agreed that the additional help voted and promised at the CIO convention at Boston will "help pay electric light, doctors' and grocery bills and will enable us to redouble our efforts."

The striker was interviewed on the picket line which was swollen to about 150 by delegates to the CIO convention at Boston. The visitors included IUMSW Pres. John Green, Vice-Pres. John J. Grogan, Sec.-Treas. Ross D. Blood, Albert Myers and Richard Carter, members of the executive board.

The pickets jeered the two dozen "leading men" who drove through the line with the assistance of a dozen policemen whose numbers were steadily augmented as the picket line increased. Another dozen scabs prepared to go to work turned their cars around and went home.

When the picket line was swollen to about three times its original size, a jittery police captain told Green "to step on it."

Andrew A. Pettis, the union's regional director, asked:

"If Bethlehem management people were out here, would you push them around?"

"Are you getting hot under the collar?" the policeman said tantalizingly.

"Yes, you would be too if you had been out 18 weeks," Pettis shot back.

The strikers crowded close to the scabs' cars as they passed through the lines, hurling epithets and reminding them that "we've been out 18 weeks and we're getting stronger all the time."

Bitterest remarks were reserved for Thomas Quirk, the plant's labor relation representative, who led a half dozen scabs along the side of the line into the plant.

"We'll not go back until they get rid of you," was the strikers' shouted warning.

Multiply this situation by ten yards operated by the Bethlehem Co. and the one plant operated by U. S. Steel at Kearney, N. J., and then you get an idea of what the 40,000 strikers are up against.

Conditions at some of the plants are worse than at East Boston. Grogan, speaking on the convention floor, said the company was trying hard to break the strike at the Key Highway yard, Baltimore.

There are from 800 to 1,000 strikers at the latter yard—pickets have to be added constantly to match the number of cops, Grogan said. From 15 to 20 strikers are arrested every day and thrown into jail.

But the leaders are confident that the union will win the strike. After thanking CIO Pres. Philip Murray for the $25,000 appropriated by the Steelworker's executive board to the strike fund, Green said:

"We need a lot more help. We've got to pay the rent, and the interest on mortgages for the strikers. Winter is coming on, and we may have to pay for coal and gas in the strikers' homes."

Ship Strike Issues

More than 40,000 workers have been on strike at the 10 plants of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the Federal Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., U. S. Steel subsidiary, 18 weeks.

Issues: Strikers are demanding 12c an hour, which has been granted by other companies under contract with the CIO Shipbuilding and Marine Workers, and maintenance of hard-won seniority and grievance provisions, which the union says are necessary to preserve its existence. The companies have offered to boost the pay of half of the workers 12c an hour, but insist on denying the increase to the piece workers—at least half of the employes.

Location of plants: Bethlehem Co., Quincy, East Boston; 27th and 56th St. yards in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Staten Island, N. Y.; Key Highway, Baltimore; Sparrows Point, Md., Patapsco Scrap Corp., and terminal Island, Los Angeles.

Ready To Lend A Hand: Evidence of moral support is shown by delegates to the CIO convention who are boarding a bus to take them to the East Boston and the Quincy shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Co., where they did picket duty. The CIO convention had passed a resolution pledging financial as well as moral support. Steel and Textile Union and the Clothing Workers have contributed $35,000 to the strike fund.

Murray Sums Up Foreign Policy:

'THE PULSE-BEAT OF OUR RESOLU

A Hearty Handshake: Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), left, exchanges greetings with CIO Pres. Philip Murray after the Senator presented his program for peace and prosperity in the United States and the world.

THE CIO convention, after hearing pleas for aid to the distressed of the world from a member of Pres. Truman's cabinet, a Catholic prelate, a U. S. Senator and CIO Pres. Philip Murray, unanimously adopted a program which advocated:

Food and economic aid for the starving of the world, a campaign for a real peace, the fulfillment of Pres. Roosevelt's Big 3 unity, complete demilitarization for all and continuation of the Good Neighbor policy.

The Cabinet member was Secy. of State George C. Marshall, who said the issue today is "simply whether or not men are to be left free to organize their social, political and economic existence in accordance with their desires; or whether they are to have their lives arranged and dictated by small groups of men who have arrogated to themselves this arbitrary power."

The prelate was Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, Archbishop of Boston, who declared: "You fight hunger with food; you fight poverty with money; you fight winter with coal and clothing; you fight discouragement with friendship and friendly deeds; you fight defeatism with faith."

The U. S. Senator was Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), who offered a nine-point program for peace.

MURRAY, the final speaker before adoption of the foreign policy resolution on a standing vote, said "the theme, heart and pulse of the resolution is to provide means to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, shelter the homeless and give medicine to the sick."

Marshall, first Secretary of State ever to address a labor convention, flew from Washington to make his address. He spoke before the largest gathering of the convention, a crowd which packed every seat in the auditorium of the Bradford Hotel, Boston, and overflowed into the aisles behind the convention floor and balcony.

Murray introduced Marshall with the statement that "peace has many champions, but many of them lack either the courage or the ability to fight for peace.

"Their advocacy of peace arises from a variety of motives, which do not concern us here. What does concern us is the presence and stature of a man who loves peace and hates war, because he knows the utter destructiveness, the callous brutality and the degradation that stem from war.

"IT takes patience, backed by a knowledge of men and events, to handle the current situations. Our Secretary of State seems to have that patience and knowledge.

"I have had some little experience in debates and discussions, and I am certain that our Secretary of State knows better than I that if you keep men talking, that agreement will finally emerge. It is only when men sulk and brood apart from one another that evil passions take possession of them and lead them into folly and oft-times into violence."

MARSHALL declared: "Everyone agrees that labor plays a vital part in the functioning of the modern state. If labor can be confused or embittered, if labor can be made to lose faith in the community of which it forms a part, then the core of any national life is threatened.

"I do not have to point out to this convention that the rights of labor and the hope and possibility of further gains for labor are absolutely dependent upon the preservation of civil liberties. For, the first victim of any dictatorial regime, and notably of the Police State, is the right of labor to organize itself for the protection of its interests.

"With reference to the situation in Europe, the dominant factors are food and coal. Europe is entering another long winter. The situation is precarious. Outside assistance is absolutely necessary to prevent a really dangerous deterioration in health and morale before any carefully determined long-range program can possibly be put into effect.

"THERE now exists the urgent necessity for positive measures to prevent a fatal deterioration in Europe— political, economic and psychological—before Congress has sufficient time to consider and act upon a possible long-range plan for American assistance."

He referred to his statement at Harvard University June 5, now popularly known as the Marshall Plan. He noted that 16 European nations have met and drawn up a list of their basic needs and what outside assistance they may need.

"We are proceeding in a determined campaign which has for its purpose world stability, a condition absolutely necessary to world peace. It is a difficult business. It requires infinite patience and a constant effort to understand the other fellow's point of view. But, it definitely requires cool calculation and great determination.

"Hasty judgments and short range thinking need to be avoided. Above all things, a regard for the American tradition is required, the typical American readiness to assist those in need of help, to discount vicious propaganda and outrageous criticism, and in the end to seek only to do what is right, so far as we can determine the right."

He followed his prepared address with off-the-record remarks, which received even greater applause.

FOLLOWING Marshall's address and after he left for Washington, CIO Gen. Counsel Lee Pressman presented the Resolutions Committee's Resolution on Foreign Policy and the World Emergency. (Text of the resolution is in an adjoining column.)

Van A. Bittner, chairman of the Resolutions Committee, opened the debate. He and all others who spoke prefaced their remarks by saying they were for the resolution. Here are excerpts from addresses:

BITTNER: "There may be a few in the U. S. who advocate war. But those who do were either too old to fight or were deferred in the last war. Any government which says America wants war is absolutely untrue and knows it is.

"I won't stand by idly while anyone criticizes the U. S. without me defending it. I can criticize my government without fear of being put in a concentration camp or being shot to death.

GEORGE BALDANZI, Executive Vice President, CIO Textile Workers: "I preface my remarks by saying that George Earle and others who say we should drop the atom bomb on R disgrace.

"I am not one of say that everything says in the United wrong and everything and Molotov says is against destroying Unity. We must who'll say 'yes' som stead of 'no, no.'

Logical Logistics

From CIO Pres. Philip Murray's introduction to Secy. of George C. Marshall:

"Our Secretary of State has learned as a soldier that whilst belly may make an efficient soldier, a full belly will make an eve ter citizen and subordinate the desire to become a soldier."

Pepper Peace Recipe:

We Must Regain F.D.R. Principles

SEN. CLAUDE PEPPER (D., Fla.) offered the CIO convention "in this tragic moment" some suggestions about "what we should do to make some progress in the direction of peace."

Pepper, who was introduced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray as an "old friend" who "along with being a U. S. Senator happens to be a steelworker who was at one time the third helper in an open hearth furnace in Birmingham," offered these nine suggestions:

"1. All name calling should be eliminated in the U. N. Assembly for one year.

"2. An immediate proposal by the U. S. in the Assembly that the U. S. advance 10 billions a year for the next five years through the U. N. Social and Economic Council, to be made available for world reconstruction.

"3. Let the U. S. at once propose in the Assembly that general world disarmament in all aspects proceed with real earnestness and spirit. The next agreement after the common step of all the nations to reduce their present military budgets 50% might be the agreement by all to halt the creation of new weapons of war.

"4. Let the U. S. propose in the Assembly that every nation shall totally withdraw all military forces out of every other country excepting, of course, Germany and Japan. Everybody get out of everybody else's country.

"5. Let the U. S. propose in the Assembly that, concurrent with troop withdrawal the Trusteeship Council be given jurisdiction over all colonial and mandated areas and peoples to the end of establishing self-government.

"6. That the U. S. propose in the Assembly that all nations not only withdraw their military forces, excepting the occupation forces, but that all the powers interfering in any way, economically, politically, or otherwise in any country, shall utterly cease to do so.

"7. Let the U. S. propose that at the next Foreign Ministers' Conference the whole question of making a single unit of the economy of Germany under joint fourpower control in the spirit of Potsdam be the primary matter upon the program.

"8. After such a program shall have been in operation for a reasonable time, then let the U. S. push for the completion of the German and Japanese peace treaties. Then only can it be expected that the various conflicts, which the changed world power situation growing out of the war has thrust upon us, will be resolved in a cooperative spirit by the major powers.

"LAST. If such a policy of cooperation among nations can be established and the peace treaties can be settled, then the U. N. would be in a position in a stabilized world to take up the whole burden of mankind and carry it on toward a better world in peace."

He noted that "there is a Freedom Train in America. Unfortunately, it did not start in Washington. How fitting it would have been for a guard of honor to have escorted those two estimable gentlemen through that train, and shown them the Bill of Rights and some of the other great human documents that make America what it is.

"Surely the Freedom Train of the future will have among its documents the signal bill which will wipe away the Taft-Hartley law."

HE bitterly denounced the backers of T-H and other illiberal legislation, saying "the people who profess to be the champions of free and private enterprise I charge were doing more to assist Communism in America than all the fifth columnists who are here.

"The antidote to every germ that threatens the American body politic is a healthy, democratic, New Deal capitalism in America. I do not see why everyone is not like us, a Roosevelt New Dealer."

Free Speech

Joseph F. Kehoe, Communications Association, was making an address during the debate on the foreign policy resolution. He claimed the right to criticize American policy in foreign countries, including Korea and Indonesian. CIO Pres. Philp Murray interrupted to ask:

"I assume you also believe the heroes of Stalingrad have the right to take the rostrum and criticize their government?"

are for universal disarmament; the dismemberment of the large armies and the production of all types of armed equipment. This is the kind of peace our organization stands for.

"It qualifies that passage by stating that the U. S. cannot afford to disarm wholly unless all other nations do likewise. That is reasonable. That is sensible. The resolution states that our organization favors giving relief in food, clothing, medicine and other goods to the hungry of the war-devastated countries, and that we support any sound program that has for its purpose the provision of this kind of relief.

"A lot of people have a singular notion about the Marshall Plan. There is no Marshall Plan in existence. A slogan has been used which attaches the name of Sec. Marshall to a plan of some description, to which he made reference in the course of a speech at Harvard last June.

"Personally, I favor the Marshall idea. The Marshall idea is to give money or food or economic aid to the devastated countries. So, it shall be my resolve, with your support, to lend every constructive aid in the development of a satisfactory plan that will provide substantial relief and economic aid to all of the people of Europe.

"The theme of the resolution, the soul of the resolution, the heart of the resolution, the pulse-beat of the resolution provides through this great instrumentality of labor, this great house of labor, a means to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and shelter the homeless and give medicine to the sick.

"This convention is speaking in a spirit of absolute sweetness when it makes this type of contribution, a wholesome contribution, toward the aid of those people in those other countries.

"Let there be no misunderstanding as to what the intent of the resolution is. Its intent is to do just what I have said it is—nothing more and nothing less."

Murray prefaced his remarks by saying: "Every delegate, when he votes for this resolution, pledges himself and his organization to support these ideals. And, he cannot betray them, either through the use of subletry or evasion or in hidden places or in open forums, and be loyal to the CIO.

"He is required, as a matter of policy—and this is a declaration of policy—to subscribe wholeheartedly to these ideals. He cannot subvert them. He is not privileged to do that. He must support them."

The People Are Interested: This picture, taken in the visitors' balcony, should convince cynics that the people are interested in the CIO's program. CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in his opening address that the CIO had declared war on high prices not only in the interest of its members but also of the people of the nation. Most of the group were so interested in the convention proceedings that they were not distracted by the photographer's flashlight bulb.

Foreign Policy Resolution:

"A Program For Peace, Democracy, Abundance"

Following is the resolution on "Foreign Policy and The World Emergency", unanimously passed by the CIO Convention:

TWO years have elapsed since victory was signed by force of arms over the Fascist aggressors—Hitler-Germany and imperialist Japan—yet a stable peace has not been achieved. The aims for which all liberty-loving people fought with such enormous suffering and loss of human lives have not yet been attained.

As Americans we have a right to discuss, commend or criticize the policies of our government affecting foreign affairs. As David Lilienthal recently advised the American people with respect to the use of atomic energy, all matters affecting the lives of the people and the destiny of our nation should and must be the concern of and subject to the will of the people.

THE CIO is an American institution with a single national allegiance and that allegiance to our own country, the United States of America, its form of government and basic democratic institutions under the Constitution of the United States. As such we base our interest upon the interests of our people and our country. The guiding principle of the CIO and of the American people is complete opposition to any form of oppression—in favor of the Four Freedoms—Freedom of Religion, Freedom from Fear, Freedom from Want, and Freedom of Speech—for everyone—everywhere.

We know that the people of the world wish to live in peace. We know that the unity among the Big Three, forged in the crucible of war, was the essential factor which accomplished the military destruction of our common enemy.

In our devotion and allegiance to our country and its people, dedicated to the sacred objective of building a better life for Americans and thereby assuring prosperity and peace for the world, we desire to express these principles by which the policies of our government and other governments shall be guided and judged:

(1) The people demand peace. They condemn with all the vigor and determination at their command belligerent predictions of the inevitability of war, from whatever source it may come. The voices which have been raised in a few places in our country calling for a so-called preventive war are not the voice of the American people. We deny any charge that we plan to launch a war. The American people oppose, as inconsistent with their basic interests and aspirations, any such attempt as we oppose any form of aggression by America or any other nation. There must be the most vigorous and relentless opposition by all liberty-and peace-loving citizens to the offensive led by evil forces to provoke and foster the insane idea of another world war.

THE will of the people in every country should put an end to the activity of this evil minority which is putting out its propaganda in favor of a new war and is lending its support to everything which is anti-democratic in any part of the world.

We call upon the United Nations to carry through on the resolution adopted at the last session of the General Assembly to take early and effective measures for progressive universal disarmament. The United States cannot disarm unless this action is accepted by all nations. This must include international control of atomic energy, with full power of inspection, discontinuance of production of atomic bombs, the outlawing of atomic weapons, bacterial warfare, and all weapons of war.

(2) There can be no enduring peace, as has been repeatedly expressed in American policy, unless there is a fulfillment of the agreement among the big powers for the complete demilitarization and utter destruction of all vestiges of Fascism in Germany and Japan, and the complete elimination of the cartels and Nazi control of industry which planned and furnished the economic base for Hitler's and Hirohito's military aggressions. Anything less would be a complete betrayal of the millions who fought and died in the war. The economic revival of Germany must be directed, under adequate and effective supervision, for civilian and peaceful purposes, under complete democratic control of the people and for the absolute assurance for the protection of the peace that there will be no rebuilding of industry which has war or military potential.

(3) We know that an enduring peace demands that the people everywhere, including the economically backward or colonial countries, be protected in their rights of self-determination and self-government—free from interference of coercion, be it military or economic from any source—benevolent or despotic. The people of the war-devastated countries look to us for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction. We therefore support sound programs for post-war rehabilitation. We urge in support of our Nation's fight against hunger throughout the world prompt action to provide food and other economic aid for the rehabilitation of their countries. We also urge under no circumstances should food or any other aid given by any country be used as a means of coercing free but needy people in the exercise of their rights of independence and self-government or to fan the flames of civil warfare.

(4) Above all, the people of this country demand that there be a fulfillment of the basic policy of our late President Roosevelt for unity of purpose and action among the three great wartime allies—the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union within the United Nations. Failure to accomplish this necessarily means dissension and strife in the world. Each nation has a right and obligation to present and support its basic principles but must be prepared to temper its firmness with self-restraint and understanding. The spirit and purpose of the United Nations does not contemplate, and we would deplore the use of, the veto to prevent the United Nations from furthering a full and lasting peace. However, the issue of the veto in the United Nations is but a symptom of the more basic underlying disunity that has developed among the Big Three and is threatening the very existence of the United Nations. If we fail to achieve unity then the world faces a war which means the destruction of humanity itself.

(5) We know that for the good and welfare of the people of the Western Hemisphere, it is imperative that the Good Neighbor Policy instituted by President Roosevelt be continued in full force and effect.

THE Great Emancipator Abraham Lincoln said in one of his most profound speeches. "The prevention of war and the peace of the world depends upon the working people."

World organized labor, through the World Federation of Trade Unions, has demonstrated that the workers can agree upon a common program for the preservation of peace, the full enjoyment of democracy and economic security and abundance for the peoples of the world. The governments within the United Nations cannot and must not be permitted to do less. Their policies and action must be responsive to the crying needs and aspirations of their people.

Phone Unionists:

SEE WHAT MAKES THE CIO TICK

FIFTY members and officers of telephone unions all over the country took time off last week to watch the CIO in action at its annual convention.

Of that number four were official delegates from the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee.

Representing the American Union of Telephone Workers, national long lines employes with about 23,000 members, were: John J. Moran, president; Robert T. Creasey, vice-president; Francis Caren, R. J. Darling, Lauretta Emma, James Kennish, C. W. Peters, Margaret Reilley, all members of the Executive Board.

Also in attendance from the AUTW were: Oscar Jaeger, editor of the AUTW Voice; A. V. Segby and Caroline L. Miller, president and vice president of Local 3, Cleveland; A. P. Brogle and Ann Harmony, president and vice president, Local 8, Boston; Miss Lyons and Miss McLaughlin, Local 8, Boston.

Twenty-five representatives, including the 15-man Executive Board, of the American Communications Equipment Workers, most recent affiliate consisting of 26,000 members, attended the convention. They included: Ernest Weaver, president; P. M. Williams, secy. treas.; national directors: J. M. Massey, J. R. Mathis, J. R. Frydle, L. R. Walkup, G. C. Thornton, M. W. Gray, W. D. Barry, N. L. Wolf, A. W. Stein, D. V. Harris, C. V. Wattles, J. H. McNamee, F. E. Zunic, H. L. Buelow, W. M. Wallis and F. G. Pfeifer. Alternate delegates: J. E. Vaubel, R. N. Baird, F. J. Sidlo, R. H. Bridge, J. C. Losey, D. G. Matheson, R. J. Ferme and Yolanda Dioguardi, national office secretary.

One of the TWOC delegates, C. W. Bixler, president of the United Telephone Employes of Oregon, representing 4500 employes, was unable to attend. The Executive Board of this union has voted to recommend affiliation to the CIO.

From the Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois came President Richard W. Long and members Patricia Hanrahan and Ellen Conden. The FTCI membership voted last June to affiliate with the TWOC as soon as 50,000 other telephone workers are affiliated. Since the TWOC now has a membership of this number, affiliation will be completed shortly.

Telephone unions in New York City were represented by 6 officers and members: Margaret Kennedy, president; Mae Sullivan and Mildred Dennan, Telephone Employes Organization (accounting dept.) and George H. Kane, president; Carl Sullivan and Richard Horigan, Union of Telephone Workers (commercial employes).

Ruth Wiencek, national representative of the TWOC; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Mayer, both attorneys for telephone unions; and George Brenner, telephone union attorney in New York, were also at the convention.

UE To Broadcast Series By Gaeth

A news broadcasting is being sponsored by the international office of the CIO Electrical Workers. Arthur Gaeth, Mutual Broadcasting Reporter, is presenting a weekly broadcast under the Union's auspices.

The program, starting Wednesday Oct. 22, is to be broadcast over 55 MBS and independent stations. The program will originate from Washington at 7:30 P.M. and will be heard in most areas every Wednesday evening at that time.

WFTU Unanimously Indorsed

CONTINUED support of the World Federation of Trade Unions was unanimously voted by the CIO convention.

The resolution points out that the Federation has demonstrated that the representatives of the labor movements of all the countries of the world can meet and work together.

The resolution resolves, "That (1) The CIO pledges its continued support to the strengthening of the WFTU, and the decisions and policies of the WFTU to the end that workers in every land shall enjoy the basic right of organization and assembly and thereby achieve economic security. We call upon the American delegates to the United Nations to secure immediate and effective action to eliminate the Franco regime; and

(2) "The CIO calls upon the American delegates to the UN Security Council and the General Assembly to support the proposal that an effective working relationship be perfected between the UN Economic and Social Council and the WFTU in order that organized labor may have direct representation in the affairs of the UN and thereby be heard on all questions touching the peace and economic and social progress.

Anchors Aweigh!

The Navy Band from the Boston Navy Yard played at the CIO convention in honor of Sec. of State George C. Marshall. The band was directed by Chief Musician John F. Potoka, a veteran with a lot of gold hash marks. On the bandstands were the music for "Have a Heart, Taft-Hartley."

Three's a Crowd

According to the U. S. census bureau, nearly 2.8 million married couples in the U. S. were living doubled up with other persons in April, 1947.

pigeons" to obtain an injunction against a striking union on the grounds that the stirke "interferes with their right to work."

● The Act repeals not only the anti-injunction provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, but also the protection it gave unions against damage suits for unauthorized acts of its agents or members.

● The Act has given employers "that degree of assurance and confidence that they believe they are in a position to crush the labor movement in this country. Pressman attributed the attitude of Bethleham Steel and U. S. Steel toward the striking shipyard workers to this T-H-inspired psychology.

Joseph P. Selly, president of the American Communications Association, and James J. Matles, organization director of the CIO Electrical workers, both issued stinging condemnations of the legislation and called for united political activity.

Referring to the question of signing non-communist affidavits, Matles pointed to his union's success in organizing 17 plants recently without the NLRB's aid.

"We don't believe," Matles explained, "that you can start out today and lead men into submission step by step . . . and that on Nov. 6 they will spring up on their feet and they will replace the Congress . . ."

The course UE takes next year will be greatly affected by the action other CIO unions take, Matles stated.

"I don't claim our organization is living in a vacuum . . . And we cannot draw a blueprint and say we are such great heroes we will do it ourselves. We will not rush into that lineup for the simple reason that it is not a chow line; it is a line where they are dishing out poison. But if we are ever found in that line, we will be found in the rear and we will be sqawking like hell . . ."

Swellenbach Wants 75c Base

SECY. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach told CIO convention delegates he favored raising the minimum wage rate to 75c an hour.

He declared that living costs have made such a step, not acted upon by the last session of Congress, mandatory.

In a interview with the press, Schwellenbach later said the labor movement should "take Communists by the seat of the pants and the nape of the neck and throw them out."

Asked why he attacks only "reactionaries" in his convention speech, he said the term "reactionary" included Communists—"all those who take orders from foreign governments."

In his speech, Schwellenbach declared:

"There are two actions which this organization has taken for which I am deeply grateful.

"One is the consistent reelection of Philip Murray as your president. He has a complete understanding of the problems which confront our Nation and the relationship between the labor movement and those problems.

"He is not an appeaser on any fundamental issue which confronts the labor movement, but he does understand the necessity for proper timing of the presentation of questions in order that they may most effectively be presented and considered. I have for him not only the highest respect, but a feeling of deep affection as a result of our contacts during the last two years.

"The other thing for which I wish to thank you is the recommendation by this organization to the Department of Labor of John Gibson. No night was too long, nor was any trip by plane too dangerous to stop him when he and I considered either was necessary. He is the hardest worker I ever knew and most loyal assistant I have ever had.

Talks to the People

"The last six weeks, through a series of speeches and press conferences, I have attempted to bring to the attention of the American people the fact that despite what they have been told to the contrary, the increases in wages of the workers of this country were not the exclusive causes of increase in prices.

"For two long years representatives of business, in the press and the magazines, have dinned into the ears of the American people the claim that advances in prices were exclusively caused by advances in wages.

"Wages alone are not responsible for price increases, and I am trying to bring to the American people the realization that the element of profits is also an important factor which must not be overlooked in evaluating the problem of prices.

"Everyone knows that in 1939 we had a loose market under which the purchasers of labor had a pool of six million unemployed upon which they might call if they desired to keep the wages down. The subject which is of importance and the subject about which the American people want to know, is what has happened during the period since V-J Day and since June, 1946, when price control was abolished.

"Those are the pertinent figures and those are the figures to which the American people should pay attention. I am free to admit that wage increases have had a relationship to price increases. I will not admit and I deny with all my vigor that all price increases should be blamed on wage increases. While wages have increased 21% from August, 1945, to August, 1947, during the same period prices have increased 24%.

Why Prices Rose

"Of that 24%, 20% occurred after the lapse of OPA in June of last year, while the hourly earnings of factory workers increased 15%. For the third quarter of 1945, which was the first quarter after price control received its stab in the back, the annual reported profit of all corporations, after taxes, was 8 billion, 100 million dollars.

"Using the second quarter of 1946 and similarly adjusting it to an annual basis after taxes, the profits are 16 billion, 600 million dollars, showing an increase in profits since the abolition of OPA as slightly about 100%. You will notice that the corporate profit figures I have given to you are after taxes.

"I have made no such deduction in reference to wages.

"Certainly the 21% increase in wages should be reduced by the amount of individual income taxes that the individual or the family may pay. I do not think that any sensible person can deny that the use of the repeated statement that wage increase is exclusively culpable so far as prices are concerned in the light of the fact that price increases have consistently moved ahead of wage increases at a time when the profits of industry were increasing over 100%.

"I recognize the right of a corporation to make profits, but I say that when profits increase at this rate, they certainly should bear a substantial portion of the burden for the price increases since June, 1046.

"Another effort to blame the Administration involves the criticism of our tax policy. Statements are made that if the President had not vetoed the tax bills there would not have been such an increase in prices. The fact of the matter is, as everybody recognizes, that we do not today have a free market in which there is competition.

"We have a sellers' market because the earnings and savings of the people during the war and the profits of the corporations make it possible without control to run the prices up.

"The corporations already have received a substantial contribution so far as taxes are concerned when the excess profits tax was abolished as of January 1, 1946.

"It is not our purpose to impress upon the rest of the world our system of democracy. What we tried to do in the war, and what we still are trying to do, is to see to it that those nations which want to embrace all or a portion of our form of democracy may do so without the interference from the outside by any totalitarian power.

"The road of the labor movement has been a difficult one. The liberties which have been enjoyed are not the ends which are sought.

"They controlled the economy through their control of the resources of the Nation, which were so great that they, and they alone, could exploit them. We all know what happened to organized labor under that theory. It was allowed to die on the vine.

"That is why I am so much opposed to reactionaryism in the labor movement itself. I classify as reactionaries those who would give to the Government complete and total control over the lives of our citizens; those who upon order from abroad seek to substitute totalitarianism for democracy in America.

"Congress reduced the President's request for the Wage and Hour Division by more than $2,000,000. This reduction will mean that only 28,000 of the 550,000 covered establishments will be inspected during this fiscal year.

"Perhaps the next session of Congress will pass a bill which will authorize a necessary increase in the floor under wages. I am not the least bit interested, however, if Congress passes such an authorization bill and then fails to provide sufficient funds with which to carry it out.

"The Bureau of Labor Statistics furnishes all the basic figures for most of the planning that is done not only by labor but by industry in the U. S. Never so much as now is there necessity for accuracy of those figures. Never so much as now has it been necessary to cover the field which the Bureau wants to cover. Yet the appropriation for that purpose was reduced from $6,900,000 to $3,400,000.

Need Labor's Aid

"If we are to have a strong Department of Labor we will need the support of those in the labor movement who are organized. The Department was created for you and for all of the unorganized workers of America. We need your support. I have come here to ask it. I want that support not merely when the bills are a couple of days away from passage. I want it throughout all of the weeks of the year.

"Another matter which I wish to call to your attention, because I think not sufficient attention has been paid to it, is the enactment of laws in many States which have as their purpose the destruction of labor union activity. A number of States have enacted anti-closed shop laws, restriction of strike activities, anti-picketing laws, and the regulation of labor relations in public utilities. In some cases there were omnibus laws, which cover a great variety of subjects.

"We live in a paradoxical age. We have 60 million employed persons in this country. Our bank deposits are larger now than ever before. Our car-loadings are limited only by the supply of cars. Yet there pervades our entire atmosphere—the fear of what is ahead. Some are afraid of war. Some are afraid of collapse. We are desperately close to reaching the day when people will say that they want to stand still or go backward."

Now Boss Fights Open-Toed Shoes

The sight is so unpleasant to local GE management at the main plant here that it was offered as one of the reasons for refusing to rehire a woman with six years service in accordance with her seniority rights.

When Local 301, CIO Electrical Workers, negotiated for rehiring of the woman, management said there was no suitable job for her because her record showed several warning notices. It developed that one of these was for wearing open-toed shoes. The local has sent the case to New York to be taken up with top GE management.

Asks Improved Wage Cellar

THE CIO, for the fourth consecutive year, again issued a demand for an increase in the Federal minimum wage law and extension of the law's protection to all workers.

A resolution adopted by the CIO convention in Boston last week termed the present minimum wage of 40 cents "sheer hypocrisy," and called for a 75 cent floor in its stead.

In addition, it severely scored the 80th Congress for passage of the Portal-to-Portal Act, which liquidated wage claims of workers for travel and make-ready time. The Act also provided a 2-year period of limitations, which, the resolution charged, would absolve employers "of responsibility for all back-wage liquidated damage claims."

Speaking in support of the resolution, Jack Rubenstein, CIO Textile Workers, berated Sen. Robert A. Taft, who recently called for a "moratorium on social legislation."

A plea for coverage by the Fair Labor Standards Act of agricultural workers came from Pres. Donald Henderson, CIO Food and Tobacco Workers.

Henderson warned of a "concentrated drive to extend exemptions," and urged CIO unions to do their utmost to prevent the move.

Another resolution, dealing specifically with agriculture labor, charged that workers in the food industry are suffering "unjust and inhumane discrimination."

"We pledge our full support to a campaign through Congress and other appropriate agencies to end the discriminations that force agricultural workers to live at substandard levels and which create a threat to the standards of all workers," the resolution concluded.

Foremen Pickets Withdraw Lines

Fourteen Los Angeles CIO Longshore foremen ("walking bosses") complied with the ruling of a federal referee and withdrew their pictketlines from three steamship companies, ending 13 weeks of dispute on the local waterfront.

Meeting in the office of Pres. L. B. Thomas of Local 1-13, CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, the walking bosses ratified the decision of their negotiating committee in San Francisco to lift the long-entrenched picketlines.

Federal maritime arbiter Arthur C. Miller earlier had ordered longshoremen to cross the picketlines of their foremen but the walking bosses held out for written assurance of non-discrimination against strikers by management.

The arbiter ruled, however, that the CIO must comply with his terms just as employers did when he ruled against their lockout at Los Angeles harbor.

No Boston T-H Party For CIO Delegates

Badges for delegates to the 9th CIO convention were especially designed with the upper metal portion picturing the Boston tea party and the lower piece the ride of Paul Revere.

Hit Decline Of Liberty; Back Santo

RECENT attacks on civil liberties and current actions of the Supreme Court which "failed the hopes of the common people" were denounced by the CIO convention.

The convention, supplementing a resolution on protection of democracy, also unanimously denounced the governmental attempt to deport John Santo, organizational director of the CIO Transport Workers. Van A. Bittner, chairman of the Resolutions Committee, made a rousing attack on the action against Santo.

THE President's Executive Order 9835, purporting to prove a means for weeding out disloyal government workers, is seen as a grave danger to the liberty of government employes.

"This dangerous order," the resolution declares, "can only have the effect of regimenting our government workers and imposing vicious controls upon their political freedom."

The persecution of labor leaders, the imposition of standards upon aliens that would not be imposed upon others, the encouragement lent the Klu Klux Klan by the activities of the House Un-American Committee, brutal lynchings and slayings by mobs, the growth of racial and religious intolerance, monopoly domination of the press and radio—all is likened to the pattern of repression of the 1920's when Gen. A. Mitchell Palmer was attorney general of the United States.

STRENGTH is added to the document in its conclusion—instead of ending with the usual "Therefore, be it resolved," the resolution heads a nine-point program with "WE DEMAND."

The nine-point program follows:

(1) The enactment of effective Federal, State and municipal legislation providing for fair employment practices. The issuance by the President of an Executive Order establishing a Fair Employment Practices Committee covering all employees whose pay is derived in whole or in part from moneys appropriated by Congress to end discrimination in hiring, promotion and tenure.

(2) The enactment of a Federal anti-lynching bill.

(3) The enactment of Federal legislation for the District of Columbia and of State legislation outlawing discrimination and segregation.

(4) The enactment of Federal and State legislation invalidating restrictive covenants based on race, color, creed, or national origin.

(5) That provision be made for adequate safeguards against racial discrimination in Federal appropriations for State aid.

(6) The amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act to prohibit racial segregation in buses, trains and airplanes.

(7) The enactment of effective Federal, State and municipal civil rights laws and of laws guaranteeing the right of suffrage and abolishing the infamous poll tax.

(8) The enactment of laws protecting aliens long resident in the United States and regularizing their status.

(9) The establishment of guarantees to assure the freedom of thought and the freedom of political views of government workers and the revocation of President Truman's Executive Order 9835 dealing with loyalty oaths.

Pepper: Eat Less Is GOP Habit

Biting remark by Sen. Pepper Pepper to CIO convention!

"The other day, Sen. Taft in the West told the people to eat less. Now, Taft need not have said that. The American people are wise people. They read history and they remember it. They know the working people always eat less when the Republicans are in power and that if they elect Taft President there will be a great many of them not eating at all."

TVA and MVA Win Backing

The CIO convention went on record in strong support of the Tennessee Valley Authority as a great social achievement which should be extended to other regions of the country.

"The CIO is to be congratulated in giving a strong lead to the country on the question of unified river basin development and particularly to the proposal for a Missouri Valley Authority," John Brophy, Industrial Union Council director, told the delegates.

Brophy listed some important reasons for MVA. He said it would provide a comprehensive river control plan for the entire region and would make possible extensive reforestation; planning of new cities through the proper development of electricity and other resources; and further industrial development.

John Clark, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers delegate, described some of the advantages such projects would bring to the copper mining industry through cheap power.

The resolution, passed unanimously by the convention, called for the application of TVA principles in all the other great river valleys and endorsed legislation introduced in Congress by Sen. James E. Murray (D., Mont.)

Pres. Joseph Salerno of the Mass. CIO Council welcomes the convention and takes the opportunity to do some PAC work. He said that there were only four Congressmen from the state who could be depended on to represent labor's interests.

CIO Uses CARE's 'Adoption' Plan

CIO's expanding "adoption" program will help many European union families win their battle for survival in the coming hard winter.

Latest demonstration of how the project works comes from Local 61, CIO Rubber Workers, Erie, Pa. The local has "adopted" two overseas trade unionists and will send each a CARE food package every month. The package contains 22 pounds of vital supplies practically unobtainable by the average family in Europe, including sugar, fats, flour, coffee, milk powder, egg powder, meats, dried fruits. The "adoption" program includes also union treasury gifts to the CARE Food Fund established by the National CIO Community Services Committee; individual contributions to the CIO-CSC CARE Food Fund or to the CARE Labor Section, 50 Broad St., New York 4.

Governor Praises Prelate's Talk

Massachusetts Gov. Robert F. Bradford, taking the platform after the address to the CIO convention of Catholic Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, praised the prelate as follows:

"You can see why we politicians are glad Archbishop Cushing is not running for office."

Salerno, Walsh And Carmichael Aid

CIO Regional Director Frank Carmichael presided as temporary chairman at the opening session of the CIO convention, introducing Catholic Archbishop Richard J. Cushing as the first speaker.

Carmichael then turned the chair over to Joseph Salerno, Massachusetts CIO president, who briefly outlined some of the labor and political highlights in the State. He pointed out that Massachusetts is the only state that pays workers unemployment benefits of $25 a week for 25 weeks.

Martin J. Walsh, New England director of the United Steelworkers, introduced CIO Pres. Philip Murray as permanent chairman.

Peppery Talk: Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) is shown addressing the CIO Auxiliary convention, which was run simultaneously with the CIO convention at Boston. Pepper discussed means of achieving peace and urged women's cooperation. Just left of him is Auxiliary Pres. Faye Stevenson. The Auxiliary had a busy schedule all week, with little time for social affairs.

Auxiliary Delegations Hail Murray

DELEGATES to the sixth convention of the CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries, meeting concurrently with the CIO convention, attended a session of the National CIO convention to see their president, Mrs. Faye Stephenson, present a scroll to CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

It commended him for his service and leadership, not only as a champion of labor, but also as a "champion of the people," and "a great builder."

Expressing his appreciation for the tribute paid him, Murray urged the delegates to pay a visit to the Auxiliary convention. "They are doing a mighty fine job," he said.

Pres. Stephenson reported that the CWA membership was increasing rapidly and that many new auxiliaries had been organized. Trade union education and political action are the major activities of the CWA, she said.

Later, the CIO convention passed a resolution reaffirming its endorsement of the CWA and urging all CIO affiliates to encourage and aid its activities aimed at "bringing the families of the CIO and through them the whole community, to a closer understanding and cooperation with our CIO programs."

Murray, Organization Director Allan S. Haywood and John Brophy attended the closing session. Murray declared: "What the men can do is assist organizations like yours both in the community and on a national scale."

Brophy, who is director of CIO councils, called for greater cooperation from the men in the CIO, speaking particularly of the Industrial Union Councils.

CWA then installed its newly elected officers. Mrs. Ruth Craine, Ishpeming, Mich., conducted the ceremony. Mrs. Stephenson was unanimously re-elected.

The following vice presidents were elected:

Verna E. Bell, Transport Service Employees; Corine Fisher, Woodworkers; Grace Mathias, Longshoremen and Warehousemen; Elsie Spencer, Maritime Union; Charlotte Siller, Public Workers; Mary Vessey, Farm Equipment Workers; Dorothy Keene, Auto Workers; Catherine Gelles, Auto Workers, Kathryn Hughes, Transport Workers; Mary Orlich, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Kay Carlin, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Lucile Wenzel, Electrical Workers; and Grace Roberts, Oil Workers.

AFL Changes Rules To Sign With T-H

Federated Press

The AFL convention voted to change its constitution to permit compliance with the Taft-Hartley law.

After heated debate, the 700 delegates passed by more than the necessary two-thirds majority an executive council recommendation to delete the title of vice president from the roster of its executive officers.

The action eliminated the need for the entire executive council to sign unanimously the anti-Communist affidavits required by the law and which Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers has single-handedly opposed.

In so doing the convention overrode Lewis' bitter opposition and turned a deaf ear to his impassioned speech, in which he, Lewis, declared he would refuse to stand for reelection to the "debased" executive council if the measure was passed.

AFL Sec. Treas. George Meany said he knew of "no more cowardly thing to do" than to place the Federal labor unions in the position of being the armored spearhead in the fight against the Taft-Hartley law when they are not equipped for that fight. It would be "abject desertion", he charged, of the 290,000 members of those unions who deserve the federation's support.

Son Thanks CIO For FDR Memorial

DELEGATES to the CIO convention heard the "voice" of FDR in the person of his son, FDR, Jr. While he was speaking, veteran newsmen declared, "Close your eyes and you hear his father."

Young Roosevelt came to the convention to thank the CIO for equipping the children's wing in the new Georgetown University Hospital, Washington, D. C., as a memorial to his father. The CIO board donated $55,000 for that purpose in 1945.

Roosevelt also thanked Murray and the Steelworkers' executive board for donating $2500 to the American Veterans Committee, which the CIO called "the most outstanding and the most deserving of all veterans organizations in the United States." Murray also urged the delegates to cooperate with AVC.

Not only was young Roosevelt's voice like his father's but he said what the elder Roosevelt doubtless would have said. Listen:

"We see today a special interest group known as the NAM writing legislation which the Congress in its servile way then enacts into law."

Franklin Roosevelt lambasted men like Senator Taft for killing OPA, and Rep. Wolcott, (R. Mich.), whom he called real estate lobby's "very servile representative in Congress." He pointed out that Wolcott prevented the Taft-Wagner-Ellender housing bill from "even being considered by the House Banking and Currency Committee.

Knocks Lobby

"You know it is rather amusing to me in connection with that bill, the public relations director of the lobby shouts from the housetops at every opportunity that the Taft-Wagner-Ellender bill is socialistic or communistic. My friends, from what we know here at the CIO convention of Mr. Taft he certainly is not a socialist."

Young Roosevelt said that he resented the loose use of the word "Communist" by special interest groups because "the liberal movement of this country has a great deal to say about progressive legislation."

Like his father would have done he did not hesitate to attack the backward section of the press, declaring:

"We do not have the same kind of money to throw around as they (the special privileged groups) have; and we do not have —shall I say, because I don't want to say a controlled press, because we have a free press in our country—but a somewhat prejudiced element in the press of America."

Here he was interrupted by laughter and applause.

Like his father would have done he then issued a challenge to the voters.

"We as men of labor," he said, "we as farmers, we as veterans, we as consumers alone cannot return our government to a policy of service toward all the people . . .

"If we all get together to fight for the same big principles and objectives which we all share together, if labor, housewives, farmers and veterans get together there is no doubt in my mind as to who will win the next election."

Returning again to the T-H law he declared that the AVC fought the measure while it was under consideration was:

"We know that if one group in a community is enslaved and is oppressed by his government, is deprived of its rights as free men and as free Americans, then the whole community is in danger of losing those same rights."

He then outlined the other AVC aims, declaring that it "was a unique veterans organization" in that it is dedicated to peace and prosperity," and has for its motto "Citizens first, veterans second."

Like the CIO, FDR, Jr., praised the work of Gen. Omar N. Bradley as Veterans' Administrator.

Reason For Choice

The convention earlier passed a resolution not only praising Bradley who is reported to be the choice of the Administration to succeed Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as chief of staff but also asking President Truman to name a successor who will carry out Bradley's ideals in the Veterans Administration.

Introducing FDR, Jr., to the audience, Murray told why the CIO executive board had selected the children's wing in the new Georgetown University Hospital as a memorial to the late President.

He declared that it was chosen because it did not practice discrimintation in admitting and treating patients and that the ward's patients would be "afflicted little children, some of them suffering from the physical affliction that was overcome by President Roosevelt."

Three army sergeants removed the American flag from a replica of the plaque which will be placed in the children's ward.

Murray said that the plaque "will be guaranteed to last 33,000 years. If it lasts that long, I observe in passing that it will crumble to dust sooner than the memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

The convention gave considerable attention to veterans' affairs. In a resolution, CIO advocated: a housing program, increased benefits for the disabled, repeal of the time limits under Public Law 239, increased subsistence allowances for student-vets and on-the-job trainees, and other liberalizations.

Urge Action On H-C-L

PRESIDENT TRUMAN was urged by the CIO convention to call Congress into session immediately so that legislative action could be taken on the deepening inflationary crisis.

A four-point proposal set forth in resolution on cost of living called on Congress to:

1. Re-establish price control on all commodities and set up a rationing system for food, cloth ing and necessities of life.
2. Legislate an adequate tax program to recapture speculative and excess profits.
3. Enact legislation to eliminate margins on the grain exchange.
4. Attack monopoly in our basic industries to prevent strangulation of our economy through monopoly prices, curtailed production and distribution.

CIO Program For Vets

THE CIO program for veterans as adopted in Boston convention resolution calls:

For full protection of the job rights of veterans, a housing program, increased benefits for disabled ex-servicemen, making the GI Bill of Rights fully effective. A summary of the 8-point program follows:

- Job rights for veterans to include full accumulated seniority for all time spent in service, all promotions and increases vets woud have received and full vacations commencing the year of his return.
- A housing program for immediate large-scale construction of decent low-cost homes
- Increased benefits for disabled veterans and their dependents with due provision for matching job requirements to the capabilities of the handicapped.
- Make the GI Bill of Rights fully effective in the protection of veterans' interests by Repealing time limits upon the benefits of the GI Bill of virtue of Public Law 239.

Increasing subsistence allow ances for student-veterans and for veterans taking on-the-job and apprenticeship training.

Assuring unemployment insurance to veterans in a minimum amount of $25 a week, payable for two years if necessary, including vets out of work as a result of a labor dispute.

Assuring full use of the on-the job and apprenticeship training provisions of the GI Bill of Rights with adequate safeguards to prevent subsidization of industry or fraud.

- Real veteran priority in the purchase of surplus properties in units small enough to bring them within the reach of all veterans.
- Appropriation of sufficient funds to the Veterans Administration to permit rapid completion of VA studies in payment of National Service Life Insurance dividends, enlargement of VA hospital facilities, and reduction of delay and red tape.
- Democratization of the armed forces, including elimination of unwarranted special privilege or caste distinctions and reform of the present outmoded and unjust court-martial system.

Truman to CIO:

'U.S. Can Depend on Its Workers'

THE following letter from President Truman to CIO Pres. Philip Murray was read to the CIO Convention:

"Please extend my greetings and best wishes for a successful meeting to the members of the CIO.

"During the nine years that have elapsed since you held your first convention, we have made a complete recovery from the great depression of the early thirties and have won a war. Now, our huge labor force is again peacefully producing for abundance. None of these victories over the forces of tyranny and want would have been possible without the patriotic support of the workers of America.

"The economic changes which have occurred since your convention last year affect every man, woman, and child in America. Employment has soared to new heights, while unemployment has been held to a minimum. Millions of workers have received substantial wage increases.

"WORK stoppages have declined, and production has reached new high levels. But prices have advanced to unreasonable heights, and housing is far insufficient for our needs. These problems must be faced squarely and remedied if we are to maintain a stable and prospering economy, the benefits of which are shared by all.

"We are faced, too, by problems abroad. People in many parts of the world are looking to us for aid until they can again become self-supporting members of the community of nations.

"One of the most acute needs is for food, and it will be necessary for many countries to import more food than they required last year. We know that to accomplish the task of providing more food, particularly grain, will impose real responsibilities on the American people. We are asking every American to help save food, particularly bread, grains and livestock products.

"THE president of the CIO is a member of the Citizens' Food Committee, which is helping the Government plan ways and means of saving essential food. I am sure the members of your unions are squarely behind the effort to provide the food needed to hasten rehabilitation in these countries.

"I feel sure that the working men and women of America do not begrudge our sharing out of our plenty with those less fortunate, especially in view of the fact that our total production today is greater than ever before in peacetime.

"I know, too, that labor and industry, recognizing the seriousness of the situation abroad, will cooperate to raise the production level still further to help meet the critical conditions which threaten the well-being of the entire world.

"AMERICA can depend upon its workers to cooperate fully and generously in an all-out effort to feed the hungry overseas in the cold months ahead.

"Organized labor has exerted a healthy influence on our economic and social structure. The CIO, in addition to its primary concern for its members' immediate welfare and the improvement of their security and their working and living conditions, has been likewise concerned with the interests of the Nation as a whole.

"I know that in their deliberations the delegates to your Ninth Convention will place first on the order of business the welfare of our country and the means by which we may, in cooperation one with the other, build an ever-expanding economy upon a firm foundation of justice, security and peace.

Organizer's Car Shot Up: Here is an auto belonging to CIO Field Representative W. W. Cherry of Birmingham, which was shot up in LaFayette, Ala., where Cherry is assisting the CIO organizing campaign at Avondale Mills. The car was attacked at night while it was parked in the yard of a LaFayette private home where Cherry was staying. No leads have developed as to who shot up the organizer's car, Sheriff Abney said.

UAW Threatens To Leave Labor-Management Group

The CIO Auto Workers last week threatened to withdraw from the Detroit Labor-Management Committee unless the Committee ceases to be used as a "sounding board to whip up public sentiment against the workers . . ."

The threat was wired to the committee's chairman, Judge Paul E. Krause, and was signed by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and Secy.-Treas. George F. Addes.

The committee had failed to function "as it was intended it should" in its first assignment, a 7-weeks strike by the UAW garage workers, local 415, the union charged.

The wire related the history of the strike:

"The garage workers strike is more than 7 weeks old. The strike was first called because the employers refused to negotiate on the union's proposal for wage increases. It was continued when the employers refused to mediate through the State Mediation Labor Board.

"Now it is being extended because the employers refused to appear before the city Labor-Management Committee for mediation, even though the slightest suggestions from the automobile manufacturers on the committee would obtain agreement from the auto dealers for mediation.

"Yet during all these weeks the only aspect of the strike brought to the attention of the public has been violence, arrests and injunctions, although the basic cause of the strike has been the refusal of the employers to negotiate or mediate."

Retail Prices Up Another 1%

Retail prices for the average family in American cities rose another 1% during the July 15 to Aug. 15 period, a preliminary report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics says. The July mark had been an alltime high point.

Dairy products, meat and eggs caused the monthly rise of almost 2% in food prices, BLS said, leaving the consumers price index 11% higher than a year ago and 62% over the immediate pre-war level.

BLS said wholesale prices as of Oct. 11 were 25.4% higher than one year ago.

Handicapped Aid Voted By CIO

Full support to organizations carrying on educational and legislative work on behalf of the physically handicapped was expressed in a convention resolution, urging Congress to provide adequate funds to continue the program.

Recent cuts in federal appropriations have seriously curtailed activities dealing with problems of the handicapped, the CIO stated. There are 28 million handicapped citizens, military and civilian, many of whom are union members or relatives of union members.

Oil Union Leaders Win Town Offices

In the Van, Tex., oil field run by Pure Oil, CIO Oil Workers Local 459 has fought for years for union recognition. It lost two labor board elections because Pure Oil flouted the law.

But the members of Local 459 never threw in the sponge. They kept their union together, paid their dues, and built a union hall last winter just to prove that they're sticking to the union.

Denied recognition by Pure Oil, Van's oil workers have been given recognition by the public of that community. Pres. Gaston Stephenson and Secy. C. L. Curlee of Local 459 have just been elected to the Van city council. Both are active in church, fraternal and civic organizations.

Ask Cooperation With Farmers

Farmers are faced with the same industrial monopolistic practices and prices as the workers in the purchase of goods, the resolution points out.

Continuation and expansion of the CIO program of working for closer unity with the rank and file of farmers and with progressive farm organizations is pledged.

Rail Union Joins Ship

The CIO Railroad Workers have merged with the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

The merger brought together a railroad union with a member ship of 50,000, most of it in the Pennsylvania Railroad system, and a shipyard workers union claiming a membership of 130,000.

John Green, president of the shipbuilders' union, announced that his union's executive board had approved the merger unanimously and that the decision would be ratified at the union convention at Cleveland next February.

A. B. Martin, director of the URRWA, reported that 138 out of 144 railroad locals had voted for the merger.

Martin said the one-year old railroad union needed the "directional skills and experience" of a union like the shipyard workers group.

N. Y. State Airing Anti-Bias Show

The State Commission Against Discrimination, Col. Charles Garside, Chairman, has announced the beginning on local radio station throughout New York State of a notable series of broadcasts, "Lest We Forget—The American Dream," a production of the Institute for Democratic Education, Inc.—

The first presentation began Sunday, Oct. 19, over WTRY with the Albany and Troy Councils of the State Commission participating. WNDR of Syracuse is the nxet to go on the air. scheduled for November.

Each of the 13 broadcasts in the series tells a moving, meaningful story of human relations, starring such famous personalities of the stage and screen as Helen Hayes, Paul Lukas, Fredric March and others.

UE Wins 16 Plants Without T-H

The CIO Electrical Workers have won collective bargaining rights in 16 plants without recourse to the NLRB, the union announced last week.

In 7 instances recognition was won without formal voting, and in the other 9 the union conducted an election or card-check.

"UE won these recognitions, giving the workers collective bargaining representation, despite the Taft-Hartley Act and without interference by the Taft-Hartley Board, whose purpose is to prevent organization of workers . . ." said James J. Matles, UE national organization director.

718 Rails Accused Of Overcharges

Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark has announced the Government has filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission against 718 railroad companies to recover reparation for overpayment of transportation charges collected from the Government on wartime shipments of tents and tarpaulins.

The complaint alleges that the rates and classification ratings applied by the railroads, during the period commencing January 1, 1942 and ending July 1, 1946, on several thousand carloads of tents and tarpaulins shipped by the Government from and to points throughout the United States were unjust and unreasonable.

Curran Wins Two Victories As NMU Convention Ends

THE 20-day national convention of the CIO Maritime Union, whose vocal rank-and-filers had battled almost hourly "crises," drew to a close last week with two narrowly-won, but major victories for NMU Pres. Joseph Curran.

By a margin of 2 votes the delegates supported the Curran-led ouster of the union's former vice president, Joseph Stack. Stack, originally charged with "actions unbecoming a member and officer of the union, and misfeasance, malfeasance, and negligence in the performance of his duties as an officer," was deposed at a membership meeting last April.

A majority of the appeals committee subsequently sustained the ouster, and the case came before delegates of the convention when a minority on the appeals committee recommended reinstatement of Stack. The vote was 353 against to 351 for the minority report.

In a final test of the strength of Curran and anti-Curran forces, the convention again upheld Curran, 389 to 308, when it voted for acquittal of Harry Alexander and R. J. Sullivan, New Orleans union officials.

The two had been accused of discrimination against Negroes in the discharge of their duties, and of "sabotaging strike preparations." National NMU Secretary Ferdinand C. Smith, one of the accusers, charged that the special 15-man trial committee, which reported the men "not guilty," had hurried its investigation and ignored much of the material submitted to it.

Smith scored the Curran-led faction for wasting time in "name-calling" and failure to act on essential issues.

"The convention knocked itself out in name-calling," Smith charged, "in an attempt to suppress the will of the majority, and the pork chop issues were merely scratched. The membership of the union will have to assess blame—and I am sure they will—for failure to act on fundamental issues facing their union, the labor movement and the very existence of a democratic America."

Among the unfinished business, which was referred to the National Council for action, were the issues of foreign policy, wage clause reopening in December and organizing the unorganizing.

The union assured itself of constant attendance on the part of its 758 delegates during the long and noisy sessions by paying them for a day's "work" on the convention floor. During the convention the union granted a "cost-of-living" increase, which increased the per diem "wage" from $10 to $15. A time clock, which had to be punched on entering or leaving the convention hall, played a major role in the wholehearted rank-and-file participation that characterized the 20 days.

Voted to create a $1,250,000 strike fund by June 1, 1948, in anticipation of the expiration of agreements on June 15.

American shipowners were charged by Vice President Howard McKenzie with "hypocrisy" and "swindling" the public treasury. "If the shipowners continue their squawking about foreign competition and their inability to pay us decent wages, we should demand that the industry be nationalized," he declared.

Adopted unanimously a resolution calling for a national maritime conference not later than Nov. 24, 1947, to consider 4 "urgent matters": United struggle against the T-H Law arrangements for the December, 1947, wage review; preparation for protecting the union hiring hall when contracts expire in June, and taking steps toward building one large union in the maritime industry.

Sharply lambasted the 80th Congress for its anti-labor offensive and accepted "with the CIO-PAC the responsibility to build an independent progressive" political group.

Ask Stronger Social Laws

ESTABLISHMENT of a strong, unified national system of social insurance to protect the American people against the economic hazards of illness, death and unemployment was urged in a resolution adopted by the CIO convention.

The resolution endorsed the national health legislation introduced by Sens. Murray, Wagner, Pepper, Chavez, Taylor and McGrath, and denounced measures such as those proposed by Sens. Taft, Smith, Ball and Donnell as reducing "the national health program to the level of a charity relief project."

Since the Social Security Act was passed in 1935, only very slight advances have been made to improve it, the CIO resolution pointed out. The level of old age and survivors' benefit has not been changed since 1939, despite an overwhelming rise in living costs.

Knight Named By Oil Union

ELECTION of officers of the CIO Oil Workers has been announced by International Secy. T. M. McCormick.

O. A. Knight was reelected president for his eighth consecutive term by a more than 2 to 1 vote over C. I. Flemming, Indiana state senator. Vice Pres. A. R. Kintsley and McCormick were also reelected.

W. A. Ritchel, Richmond, Calif.; T. F. Scarbrough, Borger, Tex., and B. T. Sargent, El Dorado, Kans., are newly elected members of the International Executive Council.

Reelected to the board were W. A. Urban, Sinclair, Wyo.; L. L. Crane, Port Neches, Tex.; George W. Carlson, Hammond, Ind., and Leo F. Brady, Carteret, N. J.

The elections were conducted by membership referendum.

No Social Affairs

The White House has cancelled all state dinners for the coming social season as a food saving measure.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

300,000 New Members in South

T-H BECOMES SPUR TO ORGANIZING

IF TAFT-HARTLEY supporters had visions of breaking the spirit and progress of the CIO's organizing drives, they would have suffered a rude awakening at the CIO convention in Boston last week.

"Since the passage of this nefarious law our people are more interested in organization than they were before," stated CIO's director of organization down South, Van A. Bittner.

Delegates from CIO's youngest affiliate, the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, representing 50,000 members, attested to the failure of the Act to halt the CIO's expansion.

And a unanimously-passed resolution underscored the CIO's determination not to permit "the barriers of anti-union violence, intimidation, collusion with public authorities and anti-labor legislation" to dampen its organizing efforts in the future.

More than 300,000 members have been added to CIO ranks in the South since June, 1946, Bittner reported. "That in itself is a tremendous army to add to what we already had in the South before the campaign or organization started," he stated.

Some people had predicted that the CIO would have trouble with the "Negro problem" down South,

VAN A. BITTNER
300,000 Added in South

Bittner remarked. "But as far as I am concerned . . . there is no Negro problem, nor any other race problem in the South. We are organizing workers . . . because they are God's human beings, and if they are good enough for God, they are good enough for the CIO."

"Let us tell the world that the CIO is going into these organizing campaigns with more vigor, more intelligence, more fight and more energy than ever," Bittner concluded.

Complete affiliation of the American Communications Equipment Workers, one of the three national independent telephone unions, was announced during the convention. It has a membership of 26,000. The national union of "long lines" employes, American Union of Telephone Workers, had previously affiliated.

Also cited as a major CIO victory by CIO Vice President and Organization Director Allan S. Haywood was the recent addition of 33,000 employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

"It is our hope that by the time the next national CIO convention is convened," A. B. Martin, president of the CIO Railroad Workers, stated, "that we will have succeeded in delivering two or three hundred thousand more workers to the CIO." It was also announced at the convention that the Railroad Workers voted in a referendum to affiliate with the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

The TWOC has almost signed a majority of the telephone workers in West Virginia, Haywood stated.

John J. Moran, president of the AUTW, in addressing the convention, stated: "We have had the wrong number for a long time. We have finally got a good connection."

"This is the great moment the telephone workers have been waiting for. It is like coming home," Ruth Wiencek, national TWOC representative, told the delegates. Miss Wiencek resigned her position as education director of the independent National Federation of Telephone Workers (now known as the Communication Workers of America) to become a member of the TWOC.

In describing the impact of low living standards in the South upon the rest of the nation, Executive Vice President of the CIO Textile Workers George Baldanzi urged unions to dig deep into their treasuries to support the Southern organizing drive.

A Pretty Leader: Margaret McCollum, the only woman head of a CIO Industrial Union Council, was caught working by the photographer. She is president of the Union County, N. J., Industrial Union Council, and is also an international representative of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

'Right to a Job' Campaign By Convention Action

"WE SHALL fight first and foremost for the right to a job," the CIO resolved at its convention in Boston.

The resolution set down a 6-point program to insure continued full employment, all phases of which have been and will continue to be sought by the CIO:

● Steps to be taken by the Federal Government to provide employment whenever private enterprise is unable or unwilling to do so.

● Protection of purchasing power through Federal price controls, rationing of essential commodities and services, rigid rent control, restoration of free collective bargaining, an end to discriminatory hiring and firing, a Federal 75 cent minimum wage law, tax exemption for low income groups and a guaranteed annual wage.

● Extension of unemployment insurance to every worker with an increase in benefits sufficient to provide decent subsistence, adjusted according to the size of the family.

● Increase in employment opportunities through government expansion in the steel industry, housing construction, public works such as the Missouri Valley Authority.

● An overall farm program, which would issue food stamps to families in need and provide conservation of natural resources.

● A national health insurance program, government appropriations for new hospitals and Federal aid to education.

Pres. Emil Rieve, of the CIO Textile Workers, recalled that the full employment bill proposed by the late Franklin D. Roosevelt was so emasculated when finally passed after his death as to have "no relation to full employment whatsoever."

Rieve lambasted the full employment committee appointed by Congress and the President's Council of Economic Advisors for failure to take any action.

"I think that if we want to be frank with ourselves we must admit that as far as the price situation is concerned, it is getting out of balance more every day and nothing is being done to bring back price control."

PRICE AND WORLD CRISIS MADE SESSION NECESSARY

Tears of Joy: Jose Rivera, NMU member, is a hero to the passengers on the seaplane Bermuda Sky Queen, in whose rescue he assisted but to his mother he is her boy returned safely to port. Rivera was one of the nine seamen, eight of them NMU members, who were cited by the Coast Guard for their part in the rescue of the ill-fated seaplane forced down 700 miles off Ireland. (Story on Page 2).

NMU Members Heroes of Seaplane Rescue

By Fred Ross

SURVIVORS of the Flying Boat Bermuda Sea Queen last week joined the Coast Guard in praising the members of the CIO National Maritime Union who assisted in their rescue when the plane was forced down amid mountainous waves 700 miles off the coast of Ireland.

Not only did Capt. Paul B. Cronk of the Coast Guard Cutter Bibb, which brought the 69 survivors to Boston, issue a citation to the merchant seamen, but he called each man to the bridge to praise him individually. The official citation said:

"Many passengers have told me of your splendid poise and assistance while the Bermuda Sky Queen was in the sea. I have no doubt but that mass hysteria and panic were prevented by your actions in soothing the fears of the passengers and caring for them.

"When volunteers were called for, your group responded and manned the small life raft that demonstrated the feasibility of such an operation.

"Since you have been on board this ship, you have, on your own initiative, continued your care of the survivors and have turned to assisting in maintaining and operating this vessel.

"You have maintained the American tradition of seamanship and proved to the world that the American seaman still excels.

"Please accept the assurances of the respect, admiration and gratitude of the commanding officer, the officers, and the crew of this vessel."

The nine men who were returning to this country after having taken the Chisholm Trail to English owners are:

Thomas R. Quinn, Arthur Brown, Gerald C. Harmon, William G. Curie, Owen King, Jose Rivera, Louis W. Miller, Robert Crenshaw and Malcolm J. McNeil. All are NMU members except Quinn, a chief petty officer, who belongs to the AFL Masters, Mates and Pilots.

All passengers were warm in their praise of the nine men whom the Boston Post described as the "unsung heroes."

Like many heroes, the seamen were modest and were reluctant to tell their part in the rescue. The other passengers, however, told the gallant part played by the union members when the plane tossed around for ten hours in waves 30 feet high.

The passengers, many of them women and children, became so seasick that many of them did not realize their peril. Their desperation was described by Mrs. Edgar Ritchie who said:

"Three of the merchant seamen disappeared. We were told that they had gone off in a raft to get a line across. Then the feeling came that the recue had almost reached us, but every creak of the plane, every sound of the sea told that it was too late.

"Now I put up every prayer I knew.

The three men who had "disappeared" were Brown, Winn and Harmon, who took turns blowing up a life raft after they failed to find air bottles which are supposed to be attached to the rafts.

Then they jumped 15 feet into the raft bobbing around in the choppy sea and fought their way to the Bibb to tell how the rescue could be effected.

When rafts arrived from the Bibb the other seamen encouraged the nervous passengers to jump into them. When they refused, the union members pushed them into the rafts, an action for which the passengers later thanked them profusely.

The seamen lost all their clothing, except dungarees, and their continuous discharge papers without which they cannot sail. They were taken to a Boston hotel by their unions to be outfitted and given aid for illness due to exposure.

The Civilian Aeronautics Board announced that a hearing will be held Oct. 30 at New York City into the circumstances of the forced landing of the seaplane, the property of the American International Airways.

The investigation was announced after William Bostock, a Shell Oil Co. executive, told newspapermen that all but three of the passengers had signed a declaration complaining that the plane was overcrowded and asking "Why planes of this type are allowed to fly at this time of year?"

The unofficial explanation for the "ditching" was that the plane had run out of gas.

Set Fearless Example: When the seaplane Bermuda Sky Queen was forced down in mountainous seas 700 miles off the Irish coast, nine seamen, eight of them members of the CIO National Maritime Union, took the lead in the transfer of the passengers to the Coast Guard Cutter Bibb. Left to right, Arthur Brown, Chief Petty Officer Patrick Quinn—a member of the AFL Masters, Mates and Pilots—and Gerald Harmon showed the passengers how they could save their lives by launching this life raft and taking off for the Coast Guard Cutter Bibb to tell how the rescue could be effected. All 69 passengers, many of them women and children, were saved in the dramatic incident.

Ask UN Act In Race Bias

THE problem of discrimination against Negroes in the U. S. has been placed in the lap of the United Nations for action by the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Discouraged by failure of the U. S. Congress to move against lynching and discrimination, the NAACP has filed a 154-page petition with each of the 57 delegations of the General Assembly. Sympathetic replies have been received from 12 of the delegations, according to Dr. W. E. Burghardt DuBois, director of special research for the NAACP.

There is little likelihood that the subject will be discussed by the Assembly during the current sessions, as the deadline for agenda suggestions expired Sept. 29. The petition, however, is being formally presented to the Commission on Human Rights of the Social and Economic Council.

Action by the General Assembly would come under that section of its charter which places it under "obligation to initiate studies and recommendations for protection of human rights and freedoms for all."

In his introduction to the petition, Dr. DuBois said: "Discrimination practiced in the U. S. against her own citizens and to a large extent in contravention of her own laws, cannot be persisted in without infringing upon the rights of the peoples of the world and especially upon the ideals and the work of the U. N."

Cost Of Living Causes Voters To Gallup Back To Democrats

The Gallup Poll last week, noting that public support has swung strongly back to the Democratic Party, also reported that the main concern of citizens today is the high cost of living.

In 1946, the three problems most worrying voters, according to Gallup, were: (a) food, clothing, etc. shortages; (b) labor troubles; (c) foreign policy and Russia.

Today, Gallup says, the worries are prices (37%), foreign affairs and Russia (30%); food (12%); strikes (5%).

The Gallup pendulum on voters' party preference had swung from 47% Democratic, 53% GOP in October, 1946, to 56% Democratic and 44% Republican in October, 1947.

Berkshire Accused Of Plot

FILLING that Christmas stocking is going to be no easy task. Part of the reason is, of course, high prices. But, the main reason will be a scarcity of nylon hose—not like during the war, but plenty scarce.

"Nylon stockings are an exception to the general supply situation in women's clothing," says the National Week section of David Lawrence's U. S. News. "Here, there is a shortage of yarn that makes it impossible to fill the demand."

But, U. S. News did not mention (or perhaps went to press before it happened) a U. S. complaint, filed in New York Federal Court, which laid the blame for the scarcity of low-priced full-fashioned hosiery to a conspiracy between the country's largest manufacturers of full-fashioned hosiery and hosiery machinery.

The defendants named are the Berkshire Knitting Mills, notorious for its long fight against unionization, and the Textile Machine Works, which since the war has manufactured 85% of the hosiery macninery available in the U. S. The two mills are located at Wyomissing, Pa.

The complaint charges the efforts of the defendants to monopolize machinery and hosiery manufacturing production have included a program for the destruction of second-hand machinery that might fall into the hands of producers of low-priced hosiery. It was charged that since 1932 the defendants had spent $380,000 to buy up old machinery and that 4,000 machines had been destroyed.

The urgency of the Government's action was highlighted later in the week when the Justice Dept. announced it was releasing for free use of American business 46 patents representing the brains and ingenuity of I. G. Farben, German dye trust, in the production of nylon.

PAC Active In Local Polls

AS Nov. 4 nears, with local elections scheduled in many areas, PAC was active in these sections:

Mercer County, N. J.

PAC has indorsed three Democratic candidates for the Assembly in this county, of which Trenton is the chief city.

Those supported are: Kenneth O'Dell, a member of the CIO Office Workers; Richard Kafes and Richard Gray. O'Dell and Kafes served previously in the Assembly, now predominantly Republican.

Detroit

PAC has made no indorsement for mayor, but five labor-indorsed candidates were placed on the ballot for City Council as a result of the recent primary.

They are: City Council President George Edwards, a member of the CIO Auto Workers; Charles F. Edgecomb, UAW; State Sen. Stanley Nowak, UAW and international representative for the Fur & Leather Workers; Tracey Doll, president of the Detroit CIO Council and a member of UAW, and the Rev. Charles A. Hill, pastor of the Hartford Ave. Baptist Church.

10th Indiana District

Progressive Labor Clubs are active all through the 10th Indiana District backing the campaign of Frank A. Hanley for the Congressional seat made vacant by the death of Rep. Raymond Springer.

Hanley, the Democratic candidate, is opposed by Ralph Harvey, Republican.

Cleveland

PAC has indorsed Democrat Thomas Burke in his race for re-election as mayor. Burke will be opposed by Elliott Ness, Republican.

A joint AFL-CIO committee is supporting Al Young for City Council in the large 30th Ward.

IT'S UP TO CONGRESS TO FIND A CURE

Profits Rise To Record Heights

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PROFIT, n. 1. Any accession of good—physical, mental or moral—from labor or exertion; benefit; return. 2. Excess of returns over outlay or expenditure.—Funk & Wagnalls Desk Standard Dictionary.

The profit system was indeed all of Meaning No. 2 last week—and a lot of the "from labor" portions of Meaning No. 1, too.

It would be extremely difficult even for the most conservative anti-labor source to deny that American workers—60,000,000 or more—were contributing their brain and muscle in large degree to the greatest profits in American history.

While profits soared, these inflationary signs clouded the economic scene:

● Poverty was being claimed by the railroads, which were spending millions of dollars in advertisements to prove they needed millions more of dollars.

● Washington's Capital Transit Co. gave a hint of things to come all over the country when it announced it would seek a fare increase to 15c cash or two for a quarter. The fare is now 10c.

● Wheat futures were up last week to $3.07, highest price ever paid for December wheat futures in the 97 years that the contract has been traded on the Chicago Board of Trade.

● Average industrial wages were up to $50.42, which was worth less than $30 in 1939 dollars.

● Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, took sharp issue with Ewan Clague, Labor Statistics Commissioner. Rieve said Clague gave an erroneous impression that, because employment and money wages are at high levels, it follows that the economic situation of wage-earners is favorable. Rieve declared Clague should have referred to rising prices.

● Pres. Truman's well-intentioned voluntary food conservation plan seemed to be having rough sledding. This writer noticed that in general Boston restaurants observed the meatless Tuesdays and fowl-less Thursdays (maybe due to the presence of the CIO convention). But the picture appeared to be just the opposite in HST's front and back yard in Washington. The restaurants didn't seem, in general, to be paying much attention to Neighbor Harry.

Here's what was what on profits last week:

Dept. of Commerce: Corporations returns showed that profits in each of the first two quarters of 1947 were higher than those in the last quarter of '46, a phenomenal picture, according to economists. Phenomenal, that is, because the last quarter of any year, with its heavy Christmas sales, is usually the most profitable of any year.

The first quarter of 1947 showed estimated corporate profits, before taxes, of $29,000,000,000 ($17,500,000,000 after taxes); the second quarter showed $27,000,000,000 afterwards); the last quarter of last year showed $27,000,000,000 before, $16,000,000,000 after.

Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass: Net earnings up 235% for the first nine months, from $2,618,681—$1.02 a share—last year to $8,727,826—$3.42 a share.

Lion Oil: $4,856,321 for nine months this time; it was $2,416,742 last year.

Union Carbide: $54,865,182 compared with $40,331,672.

Wrigley Co.: $6,058,404 vs. $4,813,106.

Kaiser-Frazer: An outstanding profit statement by a firm which has bucked the monopolies. The new auto firm announced that a net profit of $8,277,308 in the third quarter had offset a $2,188,038 net loss in the first six months for a nine-month profit of $6,089,269. Improvement of production (Kaiser-Frazer now claims to be world's fourth largest auto-producer) was given as a factor. Working capital was doubled. K-F's net deficit for 1946, its first year of operation, during which scoffers in the competition predicted complete failure for Henry Kaiser's venture, was $19,284,681. K-F expects to manufacture a total of 143,000 units for the year.

Losses: There were a few reported losses. Such a one was that of F. L. Jacobs Co., which showed that up to July 31 this outfit had a net loss of $219,786 after deduction of $1,034,000 for cost of tools, dies and miscellaneous charge-offs. The firm hastened to explain that all departments are now operating on a profitable basis.

Declines: Some made less than last year, but most of these were a lot higher than you and I make, bub.

Standstills: A fair number made almost exactly as much as in 1946. but they were well up there.

Textile: Kenneth Douty, Georgia director for CIO-Textile, last week made a timely attack on what he bluntly called profiteering in this industry.

Recalling that the industry was a leader in the fight to kill OPA, Douty said, 'The reason is obvious: profits for this year are estimated at $764,000,000, an increase of 34% over 1946 and of over 300% over 1945 after taxes. When we compare estimated profits for 1947 with the so-called normal period of 1936-1939, you get into unbelievable but true figures. Profits for 1947 after taxes will be greater than that base period—used by both OPA and the Treasury Dept.—by 2,358%."

Douty's testimony was backed up by Business Week, McGraw-Hill's voice-of-industry. B. W. showed that 'leading companies in the textile industry continue to show sensational earnings records. In fact, it's beginning to look as if the trade will reap its greatest harvest of profits in 1947." (Business Week says that, remember, not the CIO News. But, we agree.)

Business Week substantiated Douty's charges, with comparisons of share earnings for a number of textile companies. Here are examples:

Hopeful Note: Pres. Truman's calling of a special session.

Truman Acts Less Than Week After CIO Convention

MILLIONS were facing starvation in most of the world outside the Western Hemisphere.

Americans were staggering under the burden of the highest living costs in history.

Profits were over and above the fondest dreams of industry.

IT WAS in this atmosphere that Pres. Truman, suddenly and dramatically, took the initiative and summoned a special session of Congress to act on:

"the alarming and continuing increase in prices in this country and the situation regarding the need for emergency foreign aid."

The announcement came less than a week after the CIO convention had demanded that a sepcial session be called, that price ceilings be imposed, that certain scarce articles be rationed and that the needy of the entire world be fed and clothed.

TRUMAN'S call put the responsibility squarely upon the shoulders of the 80th Congress, a body which failed to enact legislation which might have averted the admittedly deep crisis. Most Republican leaders had opposed calling for a special session, but some jumped immediately on the bandwagon.

The GOP leadership was warned that the common man would not tolerate any obstruction at this session. PAC Director Jack Kroll said it well when he stated:

"IT would be disastrous for the Congress to take this opportunity to ram through any pet proposals of a partisan nature, such as the Republican-sponsored tax legislation which was defeated twice in the last session. Such bills as these, which offer relief only to the high income groups, would only increase the inflation boom which price controls are designed to eliminate."

Even as the call was being issued, the Government was announcing the appalling news that prices are at an all-time high, 7% above the previous peak in 1920.

Observers hoped that Truman's decision meant he had changed his mind since his remark the previous week that rationing was part of the Police State.

Don't Blame the Farmer: This picture shows that food profiteers are flourishing handsomely because of markups that amount to as much as almost 300%, in the case of tomatoes. When the congressional subcommittee investigated prices set up shop in Atlanta, Ga., a member of the Farmers' Union gave this demonstration on the sidewalk. He claimed the following markups on a pound basis: Apples, 4c to 12c; Butter beans, 8c to 29c; snap beans, 10c to 23c; sweet potatoes, 3c to 7½c, and tomatoes, 6c to 23c. Attention, Mr. Congressman!

How High Is Up?

The consumers' price index of the National Industrial Conference Board, covering retail prices—food, housing, clothing (men's and women's), fuel, light. house furnishings and sundries—listing changes in prices, showed that this is what happened in 66 cities:

A Buck For PAC

We don't intend to use a lot of two-dollar words to tell CIO members they ought to give a dollar to PAC.

We're merely going to point out the need and trust to the judgment of those who may have a buck to spare for a major CIO undertaking.

Here is what happened:

Business and industry, through their spokesmen in Congress and in state legislatures, have been putting hobbles on labor unions. Their objective is to wipe out, through legislative action, gains won through negotiations and strikes.

It's as simple as that.

Then, too, we think it worth mentioning that those who fight labor the hardest are rolling up fat profits while union members and other "average" consumers stretch their budgets in an attempt to meet the high cost of living.

The CIO says that the men responsible for the anti-labor legislation and largely responsible for high prices need a good, sound paddling where it does the most good—at the polls.

The organization set up by CIO to help accomplish this task is the Political Action Committee.

PAC can't function effectively without money. The only way it can obtain money is through individual contributions.

Maybe a dollar isn't worth so much any more in certain markets, but you can still buy a share of PAC for a buck.

A Fair Standard?

In 1944, the Republican party platform and Candidate Dewey swore to high heaven that the Grand Old Party was going to do right by the Fair Labor Standards Act (Wage-Hour); that it was as much a part of our life as the hamburger and hot dog.

Last week, representatives of Big Business launched an anti-FLSA campaign before the special House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. Samuel McConnell, Jr. (R., Pa.). First two salvoes in the campaign made Big Business' position clear.

Round A called for an end to all overtime for those making $75 a week or more (since the average industrial workers' wage is now $50.42, many are making well above $75). Round B aimed at abolishing the 40-hour week.

The ultimate conclusion is painfully clear to those interested in keeping FLSA strong, if only for FLSA's effect on full employment. Keep an eye on Messrs. Taft, Ball, Hartley and Hoffman. They move fast.

'Experts' Were Wrong

The CIO was told by the "experts" a long time ago that the South couldn't be organized. Nevertheless, the CIO undertook the task.

Employers used the blacklist, intimidation and coercion in an effort to stymie the campaign—yet the campaign moved ahead.

Passage of the Taft-Hartley Act brought "expert" predictions that the CIO would soon abandon its drive in Dixie. The CIO at its Boston convention authorized continuation of the campaign.

All of which proves that the "experts" can be wrong and that the CIO doesn't abandon an important job just because the going is tough.

That 'Full Belly' Remark Covered Lot of Territory

By ALLAN L. SWIM

"OUR Secretary of State has learned as a soldier that whilst a full belly may make an efficient soldier, a full belly will make an even better citizen and subordinate the desire to become a soldier."

That's what Philip Murray said when introducing Secy. of State George C. Marshall to the recent CIO convention.

Those blunt, simple words pack the punch of a major oration because they're easy to understand and because they cannot be disputed.

IN THE CIO today are thousands of members who know the real meaning of hunger or at least the horrible fear of it.

They learned about fear and hunger during the last depression—a depression during which there was great want in the midst of plenty.

It was a bitter lesson—one which made many of them question the value of our economic-political system.

Many CIO members saw hunger and want again during the last war while serving in places that had been ravaged by bomb and shell.

They saw men and women and children with empty bellies, and they didn't like what they saw.

EUROPE is hungry today. There simply isn't enough food to go around. Many face slow starvation unless relief is forthcoming.

The situation isn't merely alarming. It is desperate. And there is no substitute for food.

Neither is there any way that Europe can be fed this winter without considerable help from the United States.

Those are the facts.

So we face the choice of sharing what we have or turning a deaf ear to those who are hungry.

THE CIO has thrown its full support behind President Truman's food conservation program—but it has warned that voluntary action is not enough.

It has urged that Americans eliminate wasteful food habits—but it has cautioned that economic disaster may lie ahead unless government takes a hand in the crisis.

The CIO does not want price control and rationing merely for the sake of having governmental agencies poke their noses into the activities of individuals.

The CIO doesn't like governmental regulation any more than any other group. But it believes regulation is necessary to meet the current food-price problem.

LOOK at what has happened since the summer of 1946.

The CIO claimed that inflation would follow if OPA was killed prematurely. Business and industry said the CIO didn't know what it was talking about.

The CIO, however, was right. Inflation is here. It is eating at the security of individual wage earners and is threatening the economic future of the nation.

The CIO is again being told it doesn't know what it is talking about. Those who say this, however, said the death of OPA would not cause serious problems.

THE economic and political future of a large portion of the world depends largely on what goes into—or doesn't go into—the bellies of millions of persons during the coming months.

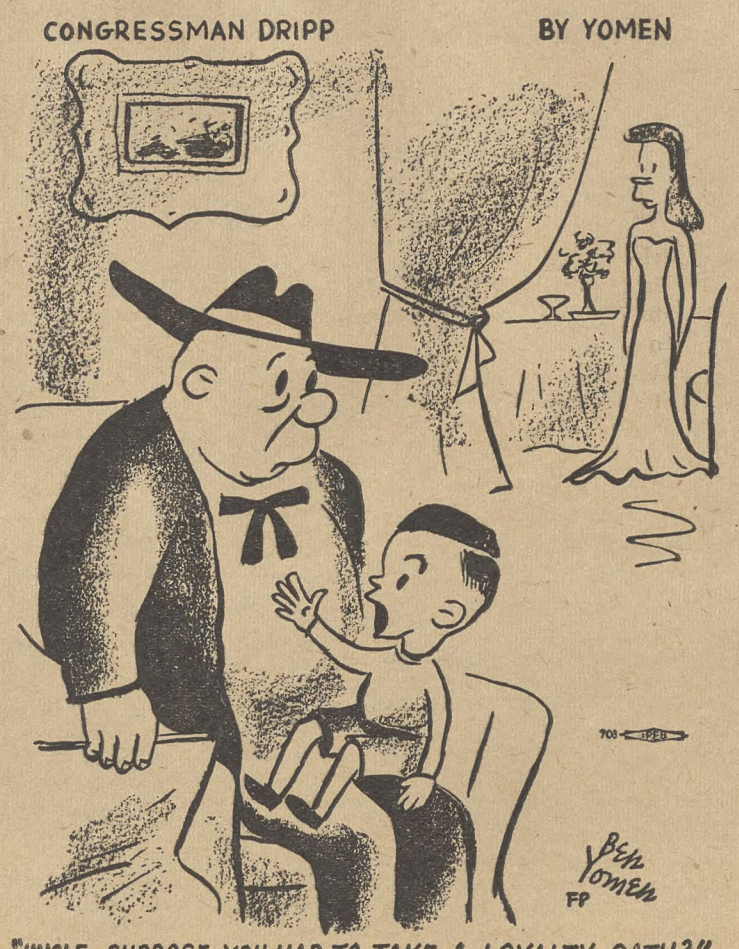
Food must be provided if it is available.

And American business and industry will be guilty of a major moral crime if they continue to profiteer, directly or indirectly, on the needs of the hungry.

Today there are many things more important than extortionate profits!

Few Strikes

American workers lost only ½ of 1% of estimated working time in August because of strikes and other work stoppages, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says.



"UNCLE, SUPPOSE YOU HAD TO TAKE A LOYALTY OATH?"

Q. Plus A. Equals T—H

THIS little cross-section of Taft - Hartleyana shows just about what labor's "rights" are under T-H. Examination of Business Agent Ira Vail, Local 6, CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, was recorded as:

Examiner: Did or did not one of your girls on the picketline open the door of a car carrying a strikebreaker?

Vail: Why, yes, I believe she did. Why?

Examiner: On those grounds, under the Taft-Hartley Act, the company claims you are using force against the strikebreakers. Did anybody use profanity on your side?

Vail: This scab had been using vulgarity toward our girls every day. He shouts vile language at them.

Examiner: That hasn't got anything to do with it.

Vail: You mean that under the Taft-Hartley Act, even if a scab curses at you, you are not allowed to answer?

Examiner: Under the Taft-Hartley Law, if you swear at them for any reason you are using intimidation . . . The law does not concern itself with the conduct of anyone TOWARD the picketline.

Vail: It so happened our people did not use profanity. What happened was that our girl told this scab. Quote: Will you please be more careful of your language? Unquote. I suppose we can't even call them scabs?

Examiner: I believe there was a judicial decision recently which allows pickets to use the word scab—but we're not sure how the usage of the word scab is interpreted under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Vail: How about the scabs throwing things at our people from the windows?

Examiner: The Taft - Hartley Law is only concerned with the conduct of the pickets toward the people inside.

Vail: What protection have we got?

Examiner: Under the Taft-Hartley Law?

Vail: Pardon me, I shouldn't have asked.

Convention Position On Women's Rights

A strong stand for the protection of women's rights both on and off the job was taken by the CIO convention. Delegates voted unanimously for a resolution championing all legislation designed to establish and protect the right of women to equal pay for equal work and endorsed the Pepper-Morse Bill, S. 1556, dealing with this matter.

All CIO unions were urged to try through collective bargaining, to obtain equal pay, equal opportunities for promotion and advancement, adequate maternity leave and protection against discrimination in hiring and firing.

Await Report On Civil Rights

The eagerly awaited report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights is expected to be made public Wednesday, Oct. 29, when the committee is scheduled to meet Pres. Truman at the White House.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey is a member of the committee.

Conventions Are The Darndest Things!

THERE'S drama behind the scenes at a CIO convention—especially when you're sitting on a big "secret" that everybody seems to know already.

That's how it was at Boston.

Finally, on the morning before the convention opened, word came through that Secy. of State George C. Marshall would address the delegates.

That was the $64 answer the news and radio men had been seeking for several days.

A NETWORK radio commentator got the break on the Marshall yarn and temporarily put the CIO publicity department in a dither.

Reporters wanted to know why they hadn't been informed the night before that Marshall would be on hand. The answer was, "We didn't know for sure ourselves until 8:20 this morning."

Prize remark on the situation came from one of two reporters who decided to drive through the Boston area at about the time the Marshall acceptance was received by CIO. Said he:

"I didn't know a d..... thing about it until I turned on my radio about 75 miles from Boston. Why didn't you let me know?"

He was informed the CIO publicity department wasn't set up to deliver press releases to reporters who were touring New England.

A GROUP of white and Negro delegates to the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries ate together at a Boston restaurant during the convention. When they asked for their check they were told it already had been paid.

A patron of the restaurant told the cashier that he had been fighting race discrimination for 20 years and "would like to have the honor of paying the bill for a group of CIO women who have the courage to practice what they preach."

He left without giving his name.

ABOUT 50 Amherst, Smith and Mt. Holyoke students listened to a few convention speeches, then gathered in a Hotel Bradford room to hear 5-minute talks by union officials.

Antoinette Doyle, a leader of the Newspaper Guild strike against four Springfield, Mass., papers, was telling the students about the strike.

"Soon after it began," Miss Doyle said, "we discovered that the police were on the side of the employer."

When she finished speaking an Amherst boy shot up his hand for a question:

"Didn't you know before the strike started that the cops are ALWAYS on the employer's side?"

WESTERN UNION handled nearly a half-million words of copy filed by reporters covering the convention. When there's that much wire traffic, accidents or near-accidents are bound to happen.

During the rush, a telegraph operator was all set to send a story from the correspondent of the conservative New York Daily News to New York's liberal PM.

Reporters for the two papers (both good Guildsmen) had a case of something resembling subdued hysteria until they learned definitely that the right story had gone to the right paper.

A WOMAN reporter from New England kept shooting questions at CIO Pres. Murray at a press conference. Murray answered—but not to her satisfaction, so she kept boring in.

Good Morgan!

"What's the difference between a politician and a statesman?"

"A statesman is a politician who has been elected to office."

Expand Productive Capacity For Full Employment

JOHN W. GIBSON, Assistant Secretary of Labor and former head of the Michigan CIO Council, appeared last week on America's Town Meeting of the Air, to take part in a discussion on "How Can We Keep American Economy Free and Strong?" Others in the discussion were Maj. George L. Berry, president of the AFL Printing Pressmen; Benjamin L. Fairless, president of U. S. Steel, and Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Pictures Producers' Association.

"A strong economy should meet the needs of all the people, the mill, mine and factory worker; clerk, stenographer, farmer, doctor, lawyer, merchant, teacher and manager. It must give all of them sustained employment and income at levels which will provide at the very least a decent standard of living.

"A free economy should protect and guarantee the right of each of us to enter any business we want. Work at any trade or occupation. Set our own value on our goods or services. Sell or refuse our goods or services. Work or refuse to work.

"FREEDOM does not mean that everybody can do anything and everything they feel like doing. Freedom imposes on each of us certain restraints and obligations.

"A free economy, then, is a strong economy. If profits are fair there'll be incentive to expand production, which is one way of raising our standard of living. If wages are high enough workers will have the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce and to enjoy the kind of standard of living they're creating with their work.

"HOW do the four Ps of our economy —prices, profits, production and pay checks—line up today? Production is at its highest peacetime level. Despite this fact, we have many shortages at home and find it difficult to supply the things the rest of the world needs to achieve a healthy and stable economy. It was the removal of price controls before supply and demand became more nearly equalized that sent prices skyward.

"Only the fact that organized labor was able to demand and get wage increases has kept purchasing power as high as it is today and made possible the employment of more than 60,000,000 workers. If this were not so you and I might be discussing another question: 'Shall We Revive the W. P. A.?' We are not going to be able to maintain full employment unless we expand our productive capacity for domestic and world needs.

Later, a questioner from the audience posed this query to Fairless:

"I would like to ask him if in these meetings with Mr. (Philip) Murray (president of CIO Steelworkers) all is sweetness and light?"

Fairless: "Of course, Mr. Murray and I do not always see eye to eye. We're both human, however, but we will in our opinion have many more disagreements if we do not meet and discuss our problems. Then to the extent we can get the facts out in the open the better our chances to settle our differences."

Johnston said, in response to a question about the housing shortage: "The Government can build houses . . ."

Lilienthal Credo

Atomic Energy Chairman David Lilienthal said this in an address before the New York Herald Tribune Forum:

"American foreign policy is based upon our domestic policy—our way of living together here at home—and upon the ethical and spiritual principles that are the foundation of our strength as a nation.

"Our society in America is not founded on the cold and bloodless 'economic man' of the Marxist, but upon faith in man. We believe that the purpose of our society is not primarily to assure the 'safety of the state' but to safeguard human dignity and the freedom of the individual."

T—H, STRIKEBREAKERS FAIL TO HURT UNION

By GLORIA CAPLAN

DESPITE gun-toting strikebreakers, a CIO Auto Workers strike at the Galion, Ohio, plant of the North Electric Co. appeared to be approaching a solution as company officials agreed to sit down with union representatives and to keep the plant closed in the meantime.

Officials of the company, which manufactures telephone switchboards, had refused to recognize the union as bargaining agent for its 625 employes, although the UAW has had a majority signed up for the past two months.

The 10-week strike hit a climax last week when 275 strikebreakers remained inside the plant for 24 hours rather than cross the picket line outside. During the 24-hour period, union representatives held two meetings—one with Col. Robert T. Graham of the NLRB regional office, Gov. Thomas J. Herbert and company attorney Robert Jamison, and another with Galion Mayor Leon Amann, the sheriff and the chief of police.

The company agreed to close the plant and to make no attempt to operate it pending a meeting with the union Oct. 27. Two pickets who had been arrested for alleged violence were to have been released. At 1:30 a.m. the union ordered the picket line opened, and the "trapped" scabs made their way home in peace.

COMPANY officials had given as an excuse for failure to bargain with the union the charge that the UAW was not a "responsible union," since it had refused to sign anti-communist affidavits in accordance with the Taft-Hartley Act.

One official, Vice President R. K. McBerty, was more forthright. He told UAW International Representative Edward J. Duck: "We just feel we don't need a union."

Financial and picket line assistance has been given the strikers by other UAW locals, as well as by members of the CIO Steelworkers, Electrical Workers and Rubber Workers.

Financial contributions should be mailed to Herbert W. Arnold, chairman, North Electric Local 951, UAW, 343 S. Market St., Galion, Ohio.

The strikers are seeking, in addition to recognition of the union, a contract with increases which would bring their wage level up to a par with prevailing rates in the region. A spokesman for tne union stated that the company had refused three petitions of the employes for raises and that hourly wages at the plant are from 35 to 60 cents below the prevailing rate.

The company operates plants at Mt. Gilead and Kenton, Ohio, in addition to the one at Galion. Charges of unfair labor practices have been filed against the company by employes at each of the factories. The complaint at Kenton was filed by the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which is attempting to form a union there.

NEWSPAPERS last week reported vandalism at the Kenton plant which had resulted in several thousands of dollars damage and implied that the CIO union was the instigator.

"We emphatically deny that we had anything to do with the Kenton violence," stated UAW Representative Duck. "The company's problem there is with the AFL and not with us."

Newspaper accounts likewise gave the impression that a gun had been fired inside the plant gates by a striker. According to Duck, the shot had been aimed at a picket by a strikebreaker.

Georgia Workers' School to Reopen

Sponges Their Business

Five hundred sponge fishermen at Tarpon Springs, Fla., last month joined the CIO. Boat owners, captains, divers, deck hands, clippers and warehousemen—they are now members of Local 4060 of the CIO Steelworkers. (Left) A diver is getting ready to scour the bottom of the ocean for sponges. (Below) A view of the unionized sponge fleet of 75 vessels.

Sponge fishermen are protesting the low tariff on cheap, foreign sponges which gives them advantages over the better American product. They claim that the Mediterranean sponges offer unfair competition, because, they say, the U. S. law prohibiting the sale of sponges of less than 5 inches in diameter is not enforced.

The local also charges that thie fishermen are being driven toward starvation by a group of buyers who have so far been able to regulate prices.

Intl. Harvester Strike Vetoed

THE executive board of the CIO Farm Equipment workers last week refused to grant a request for a nationwide strike against the International Harvester Co., Grant Oakes, international union president, said.

The national council of Harvester locals, which requested permission to strike, was urged to take all necessary steps to obtain peaceful settlement of wage disputes.

The board placed the onus for future peace on the company, stating, "In any action involving the 35,000 FE-CIO members in the Harvester chain will be dictated by the good or ill faith of the company from here on."

The company's answer to the union board's attempt to avoid a nationwide strike was a charge that the top officers of the union are "irresponsible radicals who have no respect for their contracts and who are more interested in disruption than in labor-management peace."

Two of the Harvester plants—Rockville Falls, Ill., and Louisville, Ky.—have been strikebound for over a month. Negotiations in 10 other plants have been in progress for the past 12 weeks. The Louisville strikers are seeking elimination of a southern pay differential which was instituted at the new plant.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The great CIO Convention held in Boston was the best that has ever been assembled. Those are the comments of many of those who were fortunate to be present. It started out on a high plane with the address of Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, who himself came from a worker's family and understands clearly the problems that the workers of the Nation are confronted with today and speaks fearlessly in their behalf for justice and decency.

Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach made a fighting speech. General George C. Marshall, Secretary of State, set forth with clarity the aims and purposes of our government in its relationship with the problems of the world. Governor Bradford of Massachusetts acquitted himself with credit.

The outstanding person at the convention was President Philip Murray. His words of wisdom and his tact in dealing with the problems we are now confronted with and in dealing with the delegates themselves won the admiration of all. He steered the convention to and kept it on a high plane.

THE WAR ON HUNGER resolution was unanimously adopted. President Murray's comments on the Taft-Hartley Act and its evils will long be remembered. The Nation's press comments from every part of the land were generally favorable. President Murray's proclamation that we have one loyalty to one country and one flag—the United States—was enthusiastically supported by the delegates present. The gathering was an inspiration.

Our task now is organizing and political action. The delegates returned to their homes determined to intensify their efforts in these fields. Our movement is stronger in every way by this great convention.

The Telephone Workers were received by the convention with great applause. The CIO Executive Board and the Convention put themselves behind TWOC to bring the telephone workers the benefits of real, sound trade unionism within the CIO.

Tom Andert, Chairman, Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee, reports that a New York State Labor Board election was held at the Gibson & Doty Optical Company in Buffalo, N. Y., and the result was: Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee 10, no union 3. Organizer James O'Reilly was in charge.

Pressman Says:

T-H BOARD TOSSES OUT FREE CHOICE OF UNION

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

THE National Labor Relations Board and its General Counsel, Robert M. Denham, with each succeeding act reveal the truth of labor's accusation that the Taft-Hartley Act was devised as a weapon for the destruction of organized labor.

The complaint issued by the Board under the direction of General Counsel Denham in a recent case will, if upheld, place in serious jeopardy the right of workers to strike.

An AFL union had entered into a collective bargaining agreement with a shoe company. During the life of the agreement the members of the AFL, at a local union meeting, voted to leave such union and affiliate with the CIO. The employer immediately discharged certain leaders of the employes because of their action encouraging the men to leave the AFL and affiliate with the CIO.

With the refusal of the employer to reinstate those discharged, the men engaged in a strike. There is no charge that there was any violence or force involved.

The employer filed a charge against the CIO union, its officers and agents. The AFL union did not file a charge nor did any of the individual employes.

The General Counsel of the Labor Board thereupon directed the Regional Director of the Board to issue a complaint against the CIO union.

The essence of the complaint is this: Section 7 of the Taft-Hartley Act provides that employes shall have the right to self-organization, form, join or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, and shall also have the right to refrain from any or all of such activities.

Another section of the law makes it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to restrain or coerce employes in the exercise of the rights guarantee in such Section 7.

The complaint charges that the employes in the plant, in going on strike are restraining and coercing the employes of the company in the exercise of rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Taft-Hartley Act.

THE important issue raised by this case is that a peaceful strike on the part of employes is construed by the Board and its General Counsel to be coercion or restraint. The CIO union is also charged with "threatening" the employes with discriminatory treatment as to jobs or refusal of membership unless the employes joined the CIO union.

For many years the National Association of Manufacturers and its representatives in Congress, such as Congressmen Howard Smith, Clare Hoffman, and others, sought without success to amend the Wagner Act by making it an unfair labor practice for a union to coerce or restrain employes in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by the Wagner Act.

Such an amendment was rejected when the original Wagner Act was being considered. It was repeatedly defeated because it was pointed out such language would be construed to embrace many legitimate activities on the part of workers including the exercise of their right to strike. While such amendment was being considered by Congress this prophesy was consistently denied.

The National Labor Relations Board, through its General Counsel in one of its earliest cases, now proves how correct this accusation has been.

Section 7 of the Taft-Hartley Act confers a right upon employes to refrain from joining a union or to bargain collectively or to engage in concerted activities. A strike is held in the shoe company case to be coercion.

Thus, it may be soon urged by the Labor Board that any economic strike can be restrained by the Board where the employer charges that a minority group of employes prefer to work on their jobs without interference or restraint or coercion from the union or its agents.

It is interesting to note that while the corporation originally filed its charge on the ground that the CIO union was engaged in a jurisdictional dispute with the AFL union, on the suggestion of the Board's agents such charge was withdrawn and a subsequent charge filed on the basis of which the Board has issued its broad all-inclusive complaint.

It is imperative that organized labor recognize the full meaning of such cases as this and their impact upon the traditional sacred rights of labor. The policy of the Board and its agents will undoubtedly be, in the administration of the Taft-Hartley Act, so to couch their action in legal phraseology as to mask the real effect of its acts.

In this fashion the Board will seek to whittle away the rights of labor until it will be too late for the trade union movement to take effective action to meet the frontal attack of employers to cut wages, speed up work, and threaten the continued existence of the labor unions.

Police Violence Grows Under T-H

Peace, it's wonderful — and here's what happened to it under the inspiration of the Taft-Hartley Act last week:

Brooklyn, N. Y.: Four men were mauled, one cut up as 25 policemen tried to break up a mass picket line at the Industrial Container Corp. Strikers belong to Local 65, CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Union.

Louisville, Ky.: Eight CIO Farm Equipment Workers, including an international representative and the local union president, were hauled off by police as the International Harvester strike approached its fifth week.

Brooklyn, N. Y.: A Purple Heart veteran was arrested after denouncing an attempted back-to-work movement at the strikebound Bethlehem shipyard. The CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers have been on strike 19 weeks.

Mass Arrests: Montreal police are shown here arresting three CIO packinghouse workers. Two hundred and fifty strikers were arrested in one week. but the union members declared, "Arrest one of us and ten more will take his place." The pickets are carrying signs saying "Pas de contract, pas de travail," which is unequivocally and unmistakably French for "No contracts, no work."

Murray Endorses Packing Strike

The strike of 23,000 meat packing workers in Canada and in two U. S. cities received full endorsement of President Philip Murray, who appealed to all CIO affiliates to give their full "moral and financial support." The two strikes in this country are at Chattanooga, Tenn., and Wells, Minn.

In endorsing the strike of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, Murray noted:

"I need not remind you that the major packing companies have reaped tremendous profits in recent months—largely as a result of their successful war on price controls over foods.

"Despite this high degree of prosperity, the leaders of the packinghouse workers have reason to believe that the Canadian strike—which in some cases started as a lockout of the employes is a preliminary round in a battle to undermine the union in this country, and to pave the way for a return to low wages and poor working conditions.

Towns Can Cut Accident Toll

Organized community action is urged as a means of reducing the nation's staggering toll of accidents, in a new Public Affairs Pamphlet "Make Your Town Safe!" by Herbert M. Yahraes. Many examples are cited from the files of the Natl. Safety Council to show that the proper kind of community organization is the most potent weapon available for reducing the number of accidents.

"Leadership looking toward a community program can be taken by any alert local group that knows how to work with other organizations, Yahraes states.

COPS NAB 250 WORKERS IN CANADIAN STRIKE

By NORMAN DOLNICK

MESSRS. TAFT and Hartley would get an eyeful if they looked north of the border and saw the CIO Packinghouse Workers at Montreal hold the line in a seven-week strike marked with terrorism and police brutality.

Company-tailored injunctions backed with police clubs and mass arrests haven't been enough to keep a back-to-work drive from fizzling like last year's soda pop.

In the past week, some 250 strikers were arrested by local and provincial police. Union officers have been torn from their homes in the middle of the night and hauled to jail. Charges against the strikers range from vagrancy, refusal to obey an officer, illegal picketing, to inciting to riot.

UPWA Eastern Canadian Director Sam Hughes was picked up by the police for being in the vicinity of the struck plants. Another group of workers was taken off a streetcar by the police a half mile from the plants, although they carried no placards or other identification that they were strikers. Police said they looked like strikers.

The Montreal incidents are a dramatic part of the strike, which shut down the major packing plants throughout Canada after contract negotiations had broken down with the leading packing companies, Swift Canadian, Canada Packers, Ltd., and Burns Packing Co., Ltd. More than 15,000 Packinghouse Workers walked out in what is considered to be Canada's largest industry-wide strike.

The union reached an agreement last week with the Swift Canadian for a 10c hourly increase with geographic adjustments up to three cents at some plants. The contract can be reopened on wages after 15 days' notice.

Possibility of settling the strike with the other companies was closer as the CIO News went to press. Locals were voting on whether they would accept a formula which would provide a 7c-an-hour down-payment and the arbitration of the difference between that amount and the union's original 17c demand.

FIRST indication that there would be trouble in Montreal appeared when the companies sent special delivery letters to each employe promising a five-cent rise, full seniority, double time for working on Canadian Thanksgiving, and ample police protection.

When informed of these letters, the union held an emergency meeting of its strategy committee, and a membership meeting was called for 6 o'clock the following morning. Messengers were dispatched, telegrams and 'phone calls kept the committee busy throughout the night notifying the membership of the meeting. At the appointed time the meeting hall was jammed with Packinghouse Workers.

The picketing strategy was to have groups of 10 pickets march past the plants at regular intervals. The first group of pickets was met by a cordon of armed police who refused to let them walk by the plant gates. When several pickets objected, they were shoved into waiting patrol wagons and carried away. Among those arrested was UPWA Representative Jacques Casgrain, who protested the mass arrests and insisted that the strikers be allowed to picket peacefully. He was booked for "inciting to riot."

Chanting "The CIO Will Roll," additional groups of pickets came into the packing plant area, which now resembled an armed bastion. As they protested police interference with peaceful picketing, they were thrown into patrol cars.

At a mass meeting attended by more than 1,000 Packinghouse Workers that evening the entire group pledged that they would never give up the fight for their liberties or for decent wage and working standards.

CIO CONVENTION RESOLUTIONS

Philip Murray

"The strength and stature of CIO and its position of leadership among the working people of this country constitute a living and glowing tribute to the leadership of Philip Murray.

"His strength, his fortitude, his militant devotion to the cause of the common man have sustained and promoted the consistent will and vigor of the CIO and its unions.

"His tolerance, his breadth of understanding and his capacity for concentration of effort and attention upon the true enemies of the common people have united the efforts of CIO unions and their members and preserved the strength of CIO for the gigantic tasks which it has performed and for the historic role which it must perform in the future.

"The need for a strong, united, and intelligently led labor organization such as CIO spearheading the defense of America against these attacks will be greater than ever before.

"We pledge to Pres. Philip Murray our united support and cooperation to the end that the people of America may emerge victorious in the struggle which lies ahead for the establishment and maintenance of a full and free life, economically and politically, for the common people of the nation."

World Federation of Trade Unions

"The WFTU has firmly established its position as the authoritative spokesman for the working people of the world. It has steadfastly defended the trade union rights and liberties of the workers wherever they have been under attack by anti-labor forces.

"It has steadfastly demanded the right of representation in the leading bodies of the United Nations and despite the opposition manifested by certain nations, has made no little progress in earning for the workers a voice in the paramount task of establishing a stable peace.

"The CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs continues its work in maintaining cordial relations with the trade unions of Latin America. This has become even more significant as a result of the well financed attempt by the AFL to split the Latin American trade union movement which, in a number of South American countries, is conducting a brave struggle to survive; now, therefore, be it

"RESOLVED that (1) The CIO pledges its continued support to the strengthening of the WFTU and the decisions and policies of the WFTU and of the joint labor committees to the end that workers in every land shall enjoy the basic right of organization and assembly and thereby achieve a decent standard of living and economic security. We call upon the American delegates to the United Nations to secure immediate and effective action on the part of the United Nations to eliminate the Franco regime as a breeding place of oppression; and

"(2) The CIO calls upon the American delegates to the Security Council and the General Assembly of the United Nations to give their support to the proposal that an effective working relationship be perfected between the United Nations and the Economic and Social Council and the WFTU in order that organized labor may have direct representation in the affairs of the United Nations and thereby be heard on all questions touching the peace and economic and social progress.

Political Action

"At every step this Congress has borne the indelible stamp of subservience to the dictates of the representatives of the powerful few who control the major destiny and policies of the corporate interests. The people of the country have seen the evidences of that same stamp extended, since the untimely departure of Franklin D. Roosevelt, to every branch of our government. In too many instances representatives of the ideals and principles of our great war President have been ousted from office and replaced by representatives of monopolized industry.

"These are facts and events which impose upon the labor movement a significant task and responsibility. The people of this great Nation are entitled to representation in their Government. They seek and are entitled to have in all branches of our Government, representatives who will work unceasingly for the people and not for the special interests, for construction of housing, for reduction and control of living costs, for expansion of social security protections and health and educational facilities, for expansion and protection of civil rights for all groups, and for assurance of world peace.

"To accomplish that task in the 1948 elections will require a gigantic organization on an unprecedented scale of the forces of the American people. The fullest contribution of CIO and of the labor movement to success in that fight cannot be made by any program of subservience to any political party.

"For leadership and action in that historic role we turn with confidence to the CIO Political Action Committee.

"(1) We pledge full and unstinted support to the strengthening of the CIO Political Action Committee and to the carrying out of its program.

"(2) We urged upon all affiliated unions and all State and local bodies that no effort be spared to make effective the political action program of the CIO among their own members and throughout their own communities.

Resolution Round-Up

Excerpts from a number of resolutions adopted by the Boston convention are printed on this page and the next. The foreign policy resolution, excerpts from the resolution on the T-H Law and stories on a number of resolutions appeared in the Oct. 20 issue.

"(3) We urge that all political action bodies and the leaders and members of our unions spare no effort to make every union member, every eligible member of his family and every eligible member in their community a qualified registered voter and a member of the PAC through his financial contribution.

"(4) We urge that the organization of political activity be carried forward on a detailed practical level reaching into each and every ward, precinct, block and home so that the message of political action may reach all of the people, commencing immediately with the State and local elections of 1947.

"(5) We urge that the demand of the people for representation truly devoted to the advancement of their best interests be carried into effective action not only by votes in general elections but also by active participation in primaries to secure the selection wherever possible of candidates qualified to represent the people.

"(6) We renew the pledge of CIO to speak and act through free, independent, unbossed political action for the building of a strong, well-fed, well-housed, free and secure Nation in a world at peace."

Cost of Living

"Our national economy is in the grip of a deepening inflationary crisis. Led by skyrocketing food prices the cost of everyday commodities has reached unheard of heights. Millions of Americans, in order to meet living expenses, have seen their hard-earned savings disappear. Living standards are being seriously impaired, with families finding it impossible to take care of ther health needs.

"Savings, which increased to almost one-quarter of disposable income during the war years, have already dropped to about one-twelfth. The cost of food, the major expense of every working man's family, has increased more than 40% during the past year.

"For the year 1947 corporate profits after taxes are at the rate of $18,000,000,000 as compared with the wartime figure of less than $10,000,000,000 in 1943 and a little over $8,000,000,000 in the peacetime boom year of 1929.

"Controlled monopoly prices dominate our entire economic system which make possible heartless profiteering at the expense of all the people and a hastening of depression and mass misery.

"Unless immediate and bold steps are taken to curb our present inflation, collapse will inevitably follow and our entire people will be engulfed in untold misery and chaos.

"At the same time, organized labor in the face of the drive to degrade their living standards will continue its unremitting fight through collective bargaining for wage increases to lighten the burden which the reactionaries seek to impose upon the people; now, therefore, be it

"RESOLVED, (1) That the President call for an immediate session of Congress for the purpose of re-establishing price control on all commodities and rationing for food, clothing and other necessities of life;

"(2) That at such Congressional session an adequate tax program must be legislated to recapture speculative and excess profits;

"(3) That legislation must be promptly enacted to eliminate margins on the grain exchanges;

"(4) That a realistic attack upon monopoly in our basic industries must be made to prevent the strangulation of our economy through monopoly prices, curtailed production and distribution, and the creation of scarcity for profiteering purposes."

Thomas - Rankin Committee

"Since its creation in 1938 the House Un-American Committee has served as the spearhead in the reactionary drive against the rights of workers, against the civil rights of all our people. No slander has been too gross, no lie too great, to be accepted by the evil tribunal when it could serve its infamous purpose of tearing down our democratic bulwark.

"Since its creation and up until the present time the Committee has been unremitting in its attack upon labor and upon the leaders of our movement.

"Its contempt for democratic groups and for democratic processes is matched only by its strange tolerance of such organizations as the Ku Klux Klan and by its persistence in autocratic procedures.

"Presiding over this kangaroo court is Chairman J. Parnell Thomas, a Wall Street insurance broker who has announced to the nation that his intended victim is the American trade union movement.

"Never before in the functioning of this Committee has it presented so grave a menace to the freedom of our people. This Committee is the most powerful voice of a reactionary program to deprive our people of cherished civil and political rights and to rob our heritage of its tradition of democracy, fair play and tolerance.

"The Thomas-Rankin Committee must be stopped. The CIO affirms its unqualified opposition to this un-American Committee and renews its pledge to work unceasingly for its abolition."

Full Employment

The full employment resolution asserted:

"(1) The CIO, together with the great mass of industrial workers, farmers, merchants and professional people of our country, shall fight for the establishment of the economic bill of rights set forth by Franklin Delano Roosevelt and the enactment of a real full employment bill.

"We shall fight first and foremost for the right to a job.

"We shall fight to establish as the overriding principle of national policy, that whenever private enterprise fails in its obligation to provide jobs for all those able and willing to work, the Government must take whatever steps may be necessary to provide full employment.

"(2) As a first step toward assuring full employment, the Government must protect the people's purchasing power from further drain. This means immediate application of a streamlined Federal program of price control and rationing of food, clothing, and other basic commodities and services, including rigid rent control.

"This means restoration of free collective bargaining through free trade unions. This means elimination of discriminatory hiring practices, and of wage differentials based on color and sex.

"This means a federal minimum wage law for 75c an hour. This means tax exemption for families whose income is below a health and decency standard. This means prompt steps toward establishment of the guaranteed annual wage to secure stability of income and employment.

"(3) As a second step, Government must protect the American people immediately from the effects of unemployment. This means unemployment insurance must be extended to every worker, with benefits raised to decent subsistence levels, adjusted ac-

Hoisery Workers To Seek CIO Tie

The American Federation of Hosiery Workers, suspended recently by the CIO Textile Workers for refusal to pay an increase in its per capita tax, will seek a charter of direct affiliation with the CIO.

The AFHW executive board last week voted unanimously to take such action.

Co-Op Business Reaches All-Time High in U. S.

LOCAL COOPERATIVES did $800,000,000 worth of distributive and service business in 1946, an all-time high, according to figures of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Wholesale cooperatives, to which more than 4,000 of these co-ops belong, also had a record-breaking year, with sales and services exceeding $220,000,000—a 34% increase over 1945—and net earnings up nearly 84%, for a total of more than $11,500,000. All but $3,250,000 of this was returned to the member associations on their patronage.

Cooperative wholesales have been expanding productive facilities rapidly during the past few years from small beginnings in 1929, with the largest expansion occurring in the production of petroleum products and fertilizer.

At the end of 1946 consumers' cooperatives owned 10 petroleum refineries and some 1,000 producing oil wells, with a total refined product valued at nearly $36,500,000.

CO-OP SCHOLARSHIPS: Ten four-year scholarships in cooperative study are being offered to school children in the Northwest by the Farmers Union Grain Terminal Association. The scholarships are for Valparaiso University, Indiana, and provide grants of $2,000 each—$500 a year for four years.

A NEW CO-OP STORE in Lansing, Mich., a self-service super grocery, has been opened with an experienced co-op manager in charge, reports the Lansing Labor News. Members of the United Auto Workers are among the store's supporters.

Fisher Local 602 of the UAW in Lansing has also attacked high prices by selling at the union hall, cuts of frozen beef, wrapped in packages with weight and price marked on each package. The meat is sold at the close of union meetings. The sales met with instant and overwhelming success.

UNIONS ARE TURNING with such vigor to the cooperatives for help in their fight against high prices that the facilities of existing co-ops are being taxed to their utmost, reports "The Cooperator," publication of the Eastern Cooperatives, Inc.

CIO unions mentioned as having asked aid of cooperative leaders in formulating co-op activities included the Textile Workers and Auto Workers in New Jersey; Amalgamated Clothing Workers in New England and Philadelphia and Electrical Workers in Pittsburgh.

Four locals of the Steelworkers in Ridgway, Pa., with pledges totaling $41,800, have also called for immediate assistance, says The Cooperator.

cording to the size of the family and maintained for the duration of the unemployment emergency or during the period of unemployment caused by a labor dispute.

"(4) As a third step, Government must increase employment opportunities through expansion of production in basic industries, such as steel; through public housing construction; through public works like the Missouri Valley Authority and the St. Lawrence Seaway; through aid to farmers and small business; through vigorous anti-trust action to break up artificial monopoly restrictions on production and employment; and through fostering scientific research to develop substitutes for our rapidly disappearing mineral resources.

"(5) As a fourth step, the Goverment must develop an over-all farm program to assure equitable distribution of farm income. It must also adopt a food stamp plan to make available to low income individuals vitally needed foods. This should include the conservation of natural resources, including preservation of the fertile soil which produces abundant crops.

"(6) Finally, the Government should adopt a national health insurance public health program and provide appropriations to build new hospitals and assure Federal aid to education in order to provide national educational opportunities to all."

Fair Labor Standards Act

"The first act of the Republican majority of the 80th Congress was to initiate legislation to wipe out so-called portal-to-portal pay claims. These wage claims by workers for travel and make-ready time, which had been upheld by the Supreme Court, were retroactively liquidated by a reactionary Congress in an atmosphere of unprecedented hysteria instigated by the powerful employers of the country.

"In its zeal to do the bidding of these powerful employers, the reactionary Congress gutted and virtually destroyed the entire Wage-Hour Act.

"Under the pretext of dealing with portal-to-portal pay claims, the Congress imposed upon the Act an unjust and discriminatory two-year period of limitations for the bringing of future claims.

"As a result of amendments to the Wage-Hour Act, employers have been granted an open opportunity to absolve themselves of responsibility for all back-wage liquidated damage claims.

"In its reactionary zeal the Congress went even further and amended the provisions of the law relating to liquidated damages for recovery of future wages so as to make these provisions almost meaningless. The result of this irresponsible action will be to destroy the only practical safeguard which exists in the Wage-Hour law to insure compliance by chiseling employers. The door has been wilfully and deliberately opened to widespread evasion even of the merger and in adequate standards now written into the law.

"THEN, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED THAT,

"(1) The arrogant disregard by the present Congress of the needs of the people is so great that instead of improving the protection of the completely inadequate Wage-Hour Act, the Congress has destroyed even its limited value. An evil conspiracy of reactionary Republicans and southern Democrat poll-taxers has insured a further continuation of substandard living conditions for millions of Americans.

"(2) A proper regard for the public welfare and for the desperate needs of our people requires an immediate amendment of the Wage-Hour Act increasing the minimum wage to 75c an hour, the extension of the protection of the law to presently excluded groups, and the repeal of the infamous Portal-to-Portal Act."

Labor Unity

"To achieve its purpose of uniting the people against reaction, organic unity must preserve the integrity, the industrial structure and the self-government of the CIO industrial unions in the mass production industries, and the new organization must assure effective labor political action machinery for advancing the objectives of organized labor.

"The developing unity of program and action on the local level between the AFL, CIO and the Railway labor unions on economic and political matters is eloquent testimony as to the correctness of our position. It shall be our purpose to encourage and extend such joint action; now, therefore, be it

"RESOLVED, That (1) It is our conviction that a united labor movement is necessary and obtainable. The forces of organized greed and their political henchmen stand in powerful combination, determined upon the destruction of American labor, best reflected in the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act and the many state anti-labor laws.

"We believe in all sincerity that joint and united action within the American labor movement is the answer to the compelling challenge to obtain the repeal of all vicious anti-labor laws, and we shall work tirelessly for such objective.

"(2) We commend President Murray and the CIO Labor Unity Committee upon the proposals which they have submitted to the AFL as being specific and practical steps for building labor unity on a lasting basis.

"(3) As a contribution to the development of the unity of labor and the people against the forces of reaction, the CIO is prepared to enter into mutual agreements with other trade unions to bar any cross-raiding and to respect one another's organizational status."

Industry Council Plan

This resolution reaffirmed support of the principles of the Industry Council Plan. Under this plan which was first presented by CIO Pres. Murray during the war a national planning board would be set up, composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, consumers and the government.

This board would coordinate the work of Industry Councils consisting of representatives of labor, management and government. The resolution stated in part:

"At the Chicago Convention in 1944, the CIO went on record for the application of the basic principles of the Industry Council Plan to peacetime production. Anticipating the end of inflated wartime productive activity sooner or later after the end of hostilities, we declared that methods of national economic planning useful for war purposes were equally applicable in peace. If they were sound for producing weapons for mass destruction, they were even sounder for bringing about full peacetime production and general prosperity.

"RESOLVED, that (1) We hereby reaffirm our support of the principles of the Industry Council Plan as a sound approach to peacetime prosperity, full employment and production, and democratic participation of the people in the operation of the national economy; and

"(2) We commend our President, Philip Murray, for his leadership in first presenting this program of Industrial Planning during the defense period as the Industry Council Plan, and reaffirming its policy for peacetime purposes in the Re-employment Program of the Chicago Convention of the CIO."

Ship Union Must Act On Merger Plan

Only one step remains to complete the merger of the United Railroad Workers of America and the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, reports Director A. B. Martin of the CIO rail union. This is favorable action by the national convention of ship workers union, scheduled to meet in Cleveland in February.

The amalgamation was announced at the recent national CIO convention in Boston. A referendum of local unions affiliated with the Railroad Workers held earlier, showed that 104 of the 106 locals voting favored the merger, Martin said.

1st Decertification Vote Won By UAW

The first decertification elections held by the NLRB under the Taft-Hartley law resulted in the CIO being retained as collective bargaining agents.

In the precedent-setting case, the CIO Auto Workers at the K. R. Wilson Co., Arcade, N. Y., voted to keep the UAW.

His Commanding Officer

'Counted' on Santo's Support, Friendship

JOHN SANTO, organization director of the CIO Transport Workers Union, won impressive support last week at federal hearings where he is fighting a government move to deport him back to his native Roumania.

A group of TWU members from the subway and streetcar systems of New York testified to Santo's Americanism and his help to hundreds of union members in meeting their problems. And his commanding officer in an Army engineers' outfit spoke high words of praise for Santo as a soldier and a builder of morale in his unit, which had been stationed in the isolated Aleutian islands.

While it appeared that Army G-2 had been worried about Santo's status, his commanding officer—a New Jersey architect—spoke warmly of the union official's acts and attitudes.

"I counted on his support and friendship in administering and working with the men under my command," Harold J. Perry, a former lieutenant, told the hearing.

"If I had had any doubt after I got to know John Santo, and if I felt he was a man with the intent of breaking down our government, I would have felt it my duty to see that such activity was stopped.

Earlier testimony had come from about 10 TWU members who told of Santo's help in raising their wages and working standards, and in helping them be better citizens.

BUSTER GIORDANO, one of the TWU members and a former official of the Disabled American Veterans, told the hearing that he's never heard Santo express anti-American sentiments. In fact, he said, "Santo was too dog-gone conservative."

Mrs. Nora O'Grady, a widow, who has supported her four children for the past eighteen years while working as a subway clerk, said that Santo's activities in behalf of the union had helped her give the children a "good Catholic education."

Official support for Santo's defense has come from the Transport Workers Union and from the CIO convention. In line with a convention resolution on the subject, Pres. Murray named Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers to serve as a CIO Defense Committee.

Van A. Bittner, Steelworkers vice-president and head of the convention resolutions committee, voiced strong support for the resolution when it came before the delegates at Boston. He said:

"The charges, and this attempted deportation of John Santo, after he comes back from the armed forces, is not only a disgrace to the United States but it is a disgrace to civilization everywhere."

The resolution said that Santo's record as a "labor leader, a citizen and a soldier is proof in action of his devotion and loyalty to the principles of American democracy."

Santo came to the United States several years ago, allegedly on a student's visa. He was charged once before, in 1941, with being a Communist and the government sought his deportation. Hearings petered out and no action was taken at the time.

The TWU official served three years in the army, and sought his citizenship at that time, but action was constantly delayed. The present hearings were scheduled to end last week, following which Arthur J. Phelan, presiding officer at the hearing, will forward recommendations to the Director of Immigration whether or not to oust Santo from the country.

Schedule Talk In Ship Strike

OFFICIALS of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers and representatives of the Bethlehem Steel Co. were slated to meet with the U. S. Conciliation and Mediation Service in Washington Oct. 27 in an effort to settle the 18-week shipyard strike.

Meanwhile in New York union representatives were preparing to meet with officials of the Federal Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., whose Kearny, N. J., yard has been strikebound for the entire period.

Last week the Navy entered the dispute when Vice Admiral Earl W. Mills, chief of the Bureau of Ships held what was termed an "exploratory" meeting with John Green, president of the union. No results were announced.

Labor Has Little Voice—If Any—on Rent Boards

RENT controls showed signs of slowly cracking at the seams last week as Federal Rent Director Frank Creedon approved a 10% rent boost in Klamath Falls, S. D., and total decontrol in Ottawa County, Kan.

This brought to four the number of areas in which real estate owners have won their battle for higher rents. Previously okayed by the Rent Director were a 5% increase on Louisville, Ky., rents and decontrol of the Rapid City-Sturgis, S. D., area.

Hailed by tenants and labor as a move in the right direction was the rejection by Creedon at the same time of requests for increases by five local rent boards. These were:

A general increase on about 50% of the homes occupied by Negroes in St. Petersburg, Fla. (Creedon ruled that such an increase would be "discriminatory and contrary to the Housing and Rent Act of 1947."); decontrol in McPherson County, Kan.; a 15% boost in Dickinson County, Kan.; 15% increase in Salina County, Kan.; and decontrol of Morris County, Kan.

A request by the Tampa, Fla., rent board for a 20% hike covering those rents which were frozen in 1942 is being considered by Creedon.

Only 34 of the 600 local rent boards, appointed by state governors have so far made their recommendations.

An analysis of 179 boards showed that 449 members were businessmen, real estate men, bankers, lawyers and insurance men. Only 57 labor spokesmen were included.

Here are typical examples of how heavily the rent boards are packed against the tenant:

- Chicago, Ill.: (10 members) three real estate agents, one insurance man, one attorney, one store owner, one YMCA secretary, one foundry owner, one with no listed occupation, and one labor representative.
- St. Louis, Mo.: (five members) two real estate brokers, one automobile dealer, one attorney and one labor representative.
- Los Angeles, Calif.: (five members) four retired businessmen and one real estate agent.
- Elmira, N. Y.: (five members) two attorneys, one real estate agent, one tobacco merchant, one retired businessman.
- Montgomery County, Md.: (five members) one mortgage company secretary, one attorney, one restauranteur, one banker, one architect.
- Louisville, Ky.: (five members) two lawyers, two real estate men and one landlord.
- In Virginia one board consists of five real estate men.

Since all rent controls are due to go down the drain Feb. 29, many landlords are biding their time until then.

Union officials have been urging their members to challenge the appointment of boards which are heavily stacked against them.

Labor-Religion Partnership Advocated By Bittner

ORGANIZED labor and religion must work together to "create an economy based upon the Christian concept of justice" if the world is ever to know true and lasting peace, Van A. Bittner, CIO Organizing Committee Director, told the congregation of St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral, Boston.

Speaking from the pulpit, Bittner addressed a large congregation at a special evening service conducted on the eve of the CIO convention.

"The organized labor movement has just one aim," he said, "the achievement of the brotherhood of man through the limitation of the competitive and the development of the cooperative." To achieve this, he said, labor and religion must work together "to give specific meaning to the abstract conception of justice and love as set forth in our Hebrew-Christian culture."

Bittner was recently made a member of the Department of Church and Economic Life of the Federal Council of Churches.

BITTNER opened his address by observing, "Over the long years that I have been connected with the labor movement it has been impossible for me to conceive of life lived in compartments. Our Christian ideals are not something to be expressed on Sunday and then contradicted the other six days of the week."

As a solution to the dilemma, Bittner suggested that "we cannot stress the values of brotherhood and cooperation on Sunday, and then live by fierce competition in our day-by-day struggle for survival. To do so leads to spiritual conflict and moral decay and the ultimate of all great evils—war.

"We must seek to give specific meaning to the abstract conceptions of justice and love.

"DOES it provide food, clothing and housing for all people? Can it do so? Should it do so? Does it provide equal opportunity for all people, black and white? Does every able adult have a creative job? Does the way in which we earn our living build or destroy life? Does it make for creativity of personality?

"If we cannot give affirmative answers to these questions then it is our task of labor and religion to see to it that the way a man earns his living is not incompatable with the tenants of his religion." He concluded his remarks by saying, "I believe man is created for the purpose of service to God and his fellowmen. The CIO stands on this fundamental premise to bring about this concept of life."

Federal Reserve Agency Advocated

A people's agency functioning for the benefit of all Americans in the field of research and mass information on public affairs is proposed in a 104-page booklet, "A Plan for A Democratic Public Opinion," by Joseph Facci.

Explaining that his plan does not mean government operation, control or regulation, nor self regulation of press and radio, which he considers hopelessly unworkable, Facci gives what he regards as the basic principles for providing a genuinely democratic method of disseminating information through the formation of "People's Council on Research and Information."

Under Facci's plan, these councils would be free from both government and private interests, and make possible a scientific approach to all relevant facts and opinions, without discrimination. They would be financed by large Federal subsidies without political strings attached.

Facci, who was with the Italian section of the OWI during the war, has undoubtedly given much time and thought to his plan and writes of it persuasively and eloquently.

The booklet, which the author is particularly eager to have called to the attention of union labor, may be purchased direct from him—address, Box 716, Falls Church, Va. Single copies $1, 50 or more, 50c each.

Torrington CIO Conducts Rally

The Torrington, Conn., CIO Council held a successful public rally recently at which the major policies of CIO were brought before the workers.

Issues discussed included: the Taft-Hartley Act, the 80th Congress and the state sales tax. The latter topic was particularly interesting, since CIO leaders feel the imposition of the sales tax by the Republican Legislature was largely responsible for the recent victories of labor-indorsed municipal candidates.

Rally speakers were Edward McCrone, regional CIO director, who discussed T-H—"it places labor in a position where there is not much room to move about"; George Holt, director of the United World Federalist of Connecticut; Peter B. Higgins, council president; Mayor William Killmartin, Richard Forrester, of the Associated Retailers, who discussed the sales tax, and Harold Harold Senior, editor of the State CIO publication, Vanguard, who discussed PAC. City Councilman Edwin Gath, former CIO council president, acted as master of ceremonies.

Rep. John Wood Seeks

'FREEDOM TO FIRE' UNION MEMBERS

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

"YOU'RE fired — I think you're a Communist. And furthermore, I'll see that you don't get another job in the industry."

That, in effect, is the charter for union-busting employers recommended by the House Un-American Committee's No. 2 man —Rep. John Wood (D. Ga.)—as the committee's bizarre hearings on Hollywood made their successful bid for press headlines.

Wood's remarks—with their threat of loss of civil and union rights for millions of workers—came during examination of a movie executive, one of a bevy of Hollywood "names" brought to the witness stand.

The Georgia Congressman voiced his opinion during a discussion of whether the Communist party should be outlawed. It was obvious to newsmen covering the show in the House Office Building that any such "freedom to fire" could and would be used by any employer who wanted to get rid of a union member.

The Washington Post commented next day that Mr. Wood wants to "enable the movie managers not only to fire men but to fire them on mere suspicion and to blacklist them to boot with absolute impunity. . . . The effect of Mr. Wood's proposal would be to deny redress not only to actual Communists but to persons falsely accused of being Communists.

Paradox of Paradoxes

"Here is a paradox to end all paradoxes. It is proposed that in the name of democracy, a system which exalts the individual, and to combat communism, a system which disregards individual dignity, we should deny individuals a chance to earn a living because of their political opinions and deny them even protection of those individual rights which are the distinctive glory of our society."

But in the glare of the kleig lights, the committee members—headed by Rep. J. Parnell Thomas—seemed less interested in basic American rights than in the publicity which they were scooping up in great heaps.

Movie stars, producers, heads of corporations all testified—generally to the effect that they dislike Communism and that indeed there are some Communists in Hollywood. But the outlines of a successful communist "plot" to seize control of the movie industry seemed hazy indeed.

Much of the testimony centered on two or three films made during the war about the Russians—a matter which the committee members obviously wished had never been mentioned in the movies.

Throughout the sessions ran a clear theme that the movies would do well to be guided by the ideas of the House Un-American Activities Committees, and that any wandering from that narrow path would bring down the wrath of Reps. Thomas, Wood and Rankin.

Among the heads of the industry, at least, and some of the other witnesses, there was little spoken objection to the idea of censorship by government of a prime medium of expression, the American movie.

Pepper Objects

But liberal Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla) spoke up quickly. At a press conference he said:

"I would advise witnesses to stand up and say, 'I am an American and it's none of your business what I say, what I think and what I write.'"

Pepper said the hearings may prove to be "the Stalingrad in the attack on civil liberties in this country," with defenders of civil rights once again taking the initiative against home-grown fascists and crack-pots.

"If they (the committee members) do it to the movies today, they will do it to the press tomorrow," Sen. Pepper said. "The press should rally in a single accord to denounce this thing as something that has gone too far."

Rep. Emmanuel Celler (D. N. Y.) told reporters to keep "one vital aspect" of these antics of the committee in mind.

"Today it is the motion pictures," he said. "Tomorrow it may be the newspapers or the radio. The threat to civil liberties is a real one."

Paul McNutt, one-time war manpower commissioner and Ambassador to the Philippines, was equally sharp in his criticism. Hired by the movie producers as special counsel, McNutt said to reporters who had heard a morning's testimony on what the movies should show:

"How would your editors like to be told what should be put on the editorial page?"

It's become "perfectly obvious," McNutt added, that during questioning of James McGuinness, an MGM executive, "that the purpose was to try to dictate and control, through the device of hearings, what goes on the screen of America.

"This is no concern of any congressional committee," he said.

CIO Vice-Pres. Knight Oil Union Pioneer

Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, who was the only new CIO vice-president elected at the Boston convention, entered the labor movement in 1933 when he helped to organize the Shell refinery in East Chicago, Ind.

He worked for Shell from 1926 to 1937, when he joined the CIO staff.

By trade a stillman, the most highly skilled refinery operative, Knight was one of the group who helped found Hammond, Ind., Local 210 of the AFL's Intl. Assn. of Oil Field, Gas Well & Refinery Workers.

With Roosevelt's election to the presidency in 1932, oil workers the country over began spontaneously to reorganize locals that had been defunct in the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover period. The old International Association had become moribund in that period, with only a few locals in California functioning.

Hammond, Ind., Local 210 was one of the first to be organized in the New Deal resurgence of unionism.

O. A. KNIGHT
New CIO Vice-President

In 1936 when the old International Association was reorganized into the present Oil Workers Intl. Union and helped to form the CIO, Knight was elected to the new International executive council, as representative of midwestern oil workers.

In 1937 he resigned to become CIO staff representative in California, assigned to organize oil workers. He worked there and in the mid-Continent oil fields until 1940, when he was elected president of OWIU. He has been reelected every year since then by direct referendum vote of the membership.

During Knight's tenure of presidency, the Oil Workers Intl. Union has quadrupled its membership. Wage rates have almost doubled in that period.

As a member of CIO's Latin American affairs committee, Knight has attended several Latin American trade union conferences as CIO fraternal delegate.

Knight was born Sept. 24, 1902, at New Hampton, Ia. He lives in Fort Worth, Tex., headquarters of OWIU.

GEN. FLEMING TESTIFIES:

75c Base Would Not Be 'Unreasonable'

PRESENT 40c-an-hour federal minimum wages are "grotesque and obsolete" and should be lifted immediately to about 75c, a House Labor sub-committee was told last week by Gen. Philip Fleming, one-time Wage-Hour Administrator.

The General's testimony was received with apparent coolness by the committee's Republican majority, and in questioning that followed they seemed anxious to build a case for weakening, rather than strengthening, what remains of the Wage-Hour Law.

General Fleming, now Federal Works Administrator, told the committee that he was "amazed" to read a short time ago that Wage-Hour inspectors "are still turning up violations of this ridiculously low minimum wage."

He suggested that 75c "would not be an unreasonable figure" for a new base pay rate under the Wage-Hour Law, with provisions for higher rates in certain industries.

Fleming was the first of many witnesses who are expected to appear before the sub-committee. Representatives of CIO unions will testify in coming weeks.

The principal reason for enacting federal minimum wage legislation, Fleming recalled, was to protect low-paid, non-union workers from exploitation by sweatshoppers.

"The law has operated to protect fair and honest employers from chiseling competitors," the committee was told. "During my time in the Wage and Hour Division, we received and acted on many complaints of employers about competitors who violated the law."

But, Fleming reminded the Labor sub-committee, there is "no real advancement" when a law is passed but funds to enforce it are not appropriated. Needed, he said, are more money, coverage for workers in "industrial farms" and for employes in firms "affecting" interstate commerce. This last group was covered by the Wagner Act but was omitted from the Fair Labor Standards Act.

40c Wage Equals 25c Now—Potofsky

Today's 40c minimum wage is worth less than a quarter in terms of the prices prevailing when the Wage-Hour law was passed in 1938, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers pointed out last week.

His statement answered testimony by Prof. Paul Nystrom of Columbia University, who had managed to keep a straight face while he told the House Labor subcommittee that the present 40c base wage is "inflationary."

Nystrom's statements, Potofsky said, are a "re-hash of the false charge being made by apologists for profiteering." He added that it ties in with a big business drive to destroy the wage-hour law.

Vetoes Alabama Anti-Union Bill

GOV. James E. Folsom's pocket veto of a bill designed to prohibit collective bargaining for state, county and municipal employes left Alabama's statute books without any anti-labor legislation resulting from the 1947 Legislature.

Introduced by Senator C. J. Owens of Guntersville, the bill to prohibit collective bargaining for public employes was the only anti-labor measure passed by the 1947 Alabama Legislature.

It was enacted in the closing days of the session and sent to the Governor for signing. The Legislature adjourned sine die on Oct. 3. Deadline for the Governor's affixing his name to bills he favored was midnight, Oct. 14. The deadline passed without his signing the Owens bill, and it died for lack of his signature.

Two other anti-labor measures were introduced during the session but neither was passed. The Legislature refused to enact bills which would have banned the closed shop and mass picketing.

But while no anti-labor laws were put on the statute books, neither were several major bills designed to improve workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance enacted.

These bills, passed by the House, came on the floor of the Senate in the closing minutes of the 1947 session. State Senator R. J. Lowe of Hunstville, however, filibustered these measures until a few minutes before the Legislature adjourned.

Outline Community, Union Cooperation

A series of program guides aimed to aid unions in working with community groups may be obtained from the National CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

The guides outline the purpose and responsibilities of a CIO Council or local union Community Services Committee; tell how to get labor representation and how to organize a labor participation committee, and describe the union counselling program.

FULL FORCE OF CIO THROWN BEHIND CIVIL RIGHTS REPORT

Pres. Truman's committee says "pride is no substitute for steady and honest performance . . . the record shows . . . at varying times . . . we have had human slavery . . . we have had religious persecution . . . we have had mob rule . . . we still have their ideological remnants." The committee's recommendations: Make the Founding Fathers' dream a living reality; with "God's guidance and help we can move forward toward a nobler social order in which there will be equal opportunity for all."

Report on Civil Rights: The President's Committee on Civil Rights presents its report to President Truman. Left to right, Bishop Francis J. Haas, Rabbi Roland G. Gittelsohn, Mrs. Sadie Alexander, James B. Carey, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr.; Mrs. M. E. Tilly (behind the President), Channing H. Tobias (partly hidden), Chairman C. E. Wilson (handing Truman the report), Boris Shishkin, Charles Luckman and Francis B. Matthews. The committee made specific recommendations for strengthening civil liberties throughout the nation. See story on pages 6 and 7.

Affiliates: Begin Now

CIO affiliates should get busy right now putting labor's program before Congressmen and Senators throughout the country.

That advice was sent to all national unions and industrial union councils last week by Legislative Director Nathan Cowan and Councils Director John Brophy.

"Little time remains before November 17 to guarantee that Congress hears the people's serious demands for leadership and action," the letter said.

"Congress must be made to understand that the needs of the American people and the world do not permit the playing of petty politics in the special session and the regular session which follows in 1948."

The CIO letter pointed out that the overseas situation is "equally serious," and that support for the Marshall Idea of sending economic help to Europe—affirmed by the CIO Boston convention—must be forthcoming.

NATIONAL unions and councils were urged to launch immediately a 6-point program to impress their Congressmen with the desperate need for speedy action. The suggestions include:

1. Urging the President to demand a full program of price control, rationing and allocations of commodities, and the ending of profiteering through high taxes on super-profits.

2. Sending of CIO delegations to call upon Congressmen and Senators before they return to Washington for the special session.

3. Circulating of petitions demanding price control, rationing and super-profits taxation among workers "in every shop, plant, mill and mine, and in every ward and precinct."

4. Holding of at least one public rally in each community before November 17.

5. Urging Congressmen to support the fight against hunger in the world by providing enough food and economic aid for all countries, "making sure that such aid is not used as a means of coercing free but needy people."

6. Sending resolutions, wires, letters and petitions supporting the whole program to Congressmen and the President.

THE letter said CIO is "gratified" at the decision to bring Congress together early to meet a "national and international crisis which every day grows more serious.

"If the Congressmen return to Washington with the same blindness for the people's needs that they exhibited earlier this year, the special session will fail.

"Congress must be made to understand that the American people are being squeezed into a state of desperation by the scandalous rise in prices. Congress must heed the demands for militant action which spring from families who come face to face with higher living costs each time they enter a grocery store or butcher shop, or when they pay their rent.

"The American people know that to feed, clothe and shelter the population, the grim facts of cold-blooded profiteering by corporate interests must be faced honestly and courageously."

The Economic Scene:

Many Say: If This is Prosperity Give Us A Depression

PRES. TRUMAN'S call for a special session of Congress began last week to have a sobering effect on the "wild oats" markets.

The Chicago Board of Trade noted a tendency to edge down again among grain prices, which had soared and soared and soared.

Some sources spoke of a drop in food retail prices but the average housewife couldn't see much difference as yet. Charles Luckman felt that his voluntary grain saving plan would win its goal by the first of the year.

But, the special session was looked to for a price solution—even though many of the members of the "Down with OPA!" crowd were indicating they still didn't give a tinker's dam—or any kind of a damn—about the impact of the cost of living on the people.

Most people knew their taxes were skyhigh—and that the 80th Congress had given them a lot of phoney-baloney tax "reductions" exposed by unions and Pres. Truman's vetoes—but a report from the Natl. Industrial Conference Board made all of us gasp, nevertheless. According to NICB, personal taxes now are 683% above the 1935-39 period.

Last week, people were talking about: 1. prices; 2. profits and prices; 3. production and prices; 4. plots and prices; 5. taxes and prices; 6. profits, prices, production, plots and taxes.

ALLEGED PLOT: The Justice Dept., Tom C. Clark, prop., accused 17 New York investment banking firms and the Investment Bankers' Association of America with conspiring to monopolize the sale of new securities.

Named as defendants were these banking firms, some of whom are close relations to the House of Morgan:

Morgan, Stanley; Kuhn, Loeb; Eastman, Dillon; Kidder, Peabody; Goldman, Sachs; Lehman Bros.; Smith, Barney; Clore, Forgan; White, Weld; Drexel; First Boston; Dillon, Read; Blyth; Harriman, Ripley; Stone and Webster Securities; Harris, Hall; Union Securities.

Clark said these 17 firms, over a 10-year period, managed sales of new securities totalling $14,357,000,000, or about 69% of the security issues handled through syndicate methods.

In Cleveland, Cyrus Eaton, Cleveland financier and official of Otis & Co., investment banking firm, said the action against Wall St. bankers "was an absolute necessity."

Eaton said the nation "simply will no longer stand for the continued concentration of financial control in a few hands and one place."

Eaton, who long has fought against New York power in American financing, said "the New York houses that have been indicted form a colorless fraternity, banded together to do only the riskless, high-grade business and to divide it up into tiny participations, according to fixed percentages, with the houses that should be their competitors."

PROFITS: It's awfully hard to figure out just what giant to begin with on these. But, suppose we take General Motors, certainly a pretty big hombre.

GM: Reports a consolidated net income of $75,658,274 in the third quarter of 1947, compared with $24,644,813 same period last year. The 1947 figure, equal to $1.65 a common share after provision of $3,232,078 for preferred dividends, compares with 71 cents a share last year. Net sales of $941,733,864 were listed for the period of '47, against $622,618,885 in '46.

But, with all that, and despite the price increases last summer, GM put on a sad face. "Production for 1947 has been far short of the volume required to meet the postwar demand for GM products," said the statement signed by Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., chairman, and C. E. Wilson, president.

Now, take another deep breath:

Standard Oil of Calif.: Net income for first nine months of '47 is $66,544,580 after all charges, which is equal to $5.12 a share. This does not include $10,450,365 of proceeds, after tax, from a dividend from the Arabian American Oil. (Don't ask us why it's not included; that's Soccal's statement).

(In Washington, it looked as if that $10,450,365 from Arabian American was in for some explanations. Sen. Brewster (R., Me.) announced he'd ask Atty. Gen. Clark to determine whether the present makeup of Arabian American violates existing anti-trust decrees.)

Next—

U. S. Steel: This healthy baby declared a dividend of $1.25 a common share, an increase of 25 cents over the quarterly rate prevalent since 1940, and also voted an extra disbursement of 75 cents a share.

U. S.'s profit for the first nine months of 1947 was $97,306,461, as against $57,467,894 last time.

Irving S. Olds, chairman, saw a rosy future: "I don't think the early depression that is being predicted for us is likely to happen."

Westinghouse Electric: WE told of a peacetime high in net sales, or $492,179,242 for the nine months. On one hand, Gwilym A. Price, president, said shipments during the period were off $152,000,000 from the volume of new orders received; on the other hand, he said that if certain military orders were excluded, unit production in the past six months actually exceeded new orders.

Also—

U. S. Lines: An estimated net profit of $8,328,000 for the first nine months, which includes a $2,157,000 profit from the sale of securities and from the liquidation of Oceanic Steam Navigation Realization Co. Ltd., of London. Last year, the net profit was $4,780,575.

There are hundreds of other profit statements—and few losses—but those are good samples.

Now, on to other problems, such as families.

FAMILY TABLE: The Cleveland Press (a daily, conservative paper) can say it for us:

"The average Greater Cleveland family with small children is spending 30 to 40% more for food now than it spent a year ago.

"For this extra outlay, it is getting less food, both in quantity and quality.

"Many of the most earnest mothers (polled by Press reporters) insisted that for months they have no had money to replace clothing and household necessities, such as sheets and towels. If this is a prosperous era, these people say generally: 'give us a depression'.".

FAMILY LIFE: The Family Service Association of America reports an alarming rise in family rifts, which "are being inflated anew by the pressure of high living costs."

Specifically, the FSAA investigated conditions in 114 agency areas from coast to coast and "high prices are not only presenting millions of families with the severe difficulties of making ends meet, but, directly or indirectly, contributing to the frequency of marital friction, separation, divorce and the insecurity of children."

Operation Dixie To Be Stepped Up

THE CIO's drive to organize the South will continue "full-speed ahead — with more vigor, more intelligence and more fight than ever before," Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, said after the CIO annual convention at Boston voted all-out support for the campaign.

Bittner called attention to Philip Murray's statement, in the CIO president's report to the convention.

"We feel that our gains in the future will be greater than those in the past, because we have a smoothly functioning field staff and more than 1,000 volunteer organizers," Murray said. "We also have well-established CIO local unions in regions in which CIO was virtually unknown before our arrival."

The convention voted a resolution stating "We extend to the CIO Organizing Committee our approval and appreciation for their constructive and vigorous activity in the face of great difficulties, and we pledge to them our continued support and cooperation until the important task of organizing the unorganized throughout the nation has been carried to a successful completion."

Bittner said the drive had "made real progress in the South.

"We won more than 550 National Labor Relations Board elections in the South. We have organized 825 new local unions. We have added in excess of 300,000 members to unions affiliated with the CIO . . . The record speaks for itself," Bittner said.

George Baldanzi, vice-president of the Textile Workers Union of America-CIO and assistant director of the Southern drive, stressed "how important the campaign is, not only to the CIO, but also its significance in so far as our general welfare in the nation is concerned . . ."

"You cannot have an expanding economy in the nation, nor should we become concerned with world trade, when we have for all practical purposes right down below the Mason-Dixon line a foreign colony that has been exploited for 300 years," Baldanzi said.

Buckley Bill Not Indorsed

The recent CIO convention at Boston did not indorse the Buckley Bill on dissemination of anti-racial propaganda, as indicated in printed copies of convention resolutions and as stated in the convention issue of the CIO News. The resolution adopted by the delegates did not mention the Buckley Bill.

The People Are Voting

OFF-YEAR election day is at hand, with CIO-PAC concentrating its drives in a number of widely scattered contests.

Perhaps the most important was New York City's referendum on whether or not to retain Proportional Representation, which has been in operation since 1937.

There have been previous attacks on PR by referenda, but this year's has the open support of most Democratic leaders—except Mayor O'Dwyer, who has remained silent—and most Republican leaders. The powerful New York Times has come out against it, though the Herald Tribune is making a fight to retain it.

Independent Democrats and Republicans, the Labor Party and the Liberal party have joined with the CIO and PAC to line up public support for PR. The City Club, the Citizens' Union and the League of Women Voters—all highly respected groups which have battled for years for good government—are urging retention of the system of choosing the City Council.

Most of these groups are using the potent argument that in 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936, when there was a Fusion City Government, the old council consisted of as high as 63 Democrats and one Republican. Judge Samuel Seabury, famed fighter for good government, reminded voters that President Roosevelt had backed PR.

Other key elections this year include:

Cincinnati: Where there is also a fight against PR (New York, Lowell, Mass., Toledo, Cambridge, Mass., Yonkers, N. Y., Wheeling, W. Va., Long Beach, Calif., and Cincinnati all elect councils by PR). Also high on the PAC list is the reelection campaign of Rollin Everett, member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Jack Kroll, head of the national PAC, who is a Cincinnati resident, came out strongly for PR and Everett.

Dayton, O.: This other key Ohio city is witnessing a strenuous PAC campaign for City Council by CIO Council Pres. Charles E. Sims and his running mate, C. Josef McLin, a liberal businessman. Heavy registration has been part of PAC's drive, which has included endorsement of Board of Education candidates.

Sims and McLin, who have received the united opposition of the city's newspapers, have stuck to their basic, liberal platform for a better Dayton:

San Francisco: A united CIO-AFL committee is pushing Congressman Frank Havenner for mayor, along with a slate of other candidates for various offices.

Buffalo, N. Y.: Another unit labor committee has endorsed candidates for surrogate, sheriff, city judge, comptroller, president of council, councilman-at-large and supervisors.

New Jersey: A number of cities, including the State capital at Trenton, are having elections in which PAC is active.

Detroit: Five labor-endorsed candidates are seeking City council posts.

Artificial Legs Fail to Deter This PAC Block Worker

By ROLLIN H. EVERETT

Editor of the Cincinnati CIO Sun and candidate for reelection to the Cincinnati City Council

"I received a telephone call from W. T. Woodall Sr. He had just finished polling his neighborhood and, it being his first such experience, he thought other workers should know what he learned.

"'I listed 98 people, 50% of whom were not registered and the rest of whom had not intended to vote,' he reported. 'When I explained to them why working people really do have a stake in city government, most of them promised to register and vote.

"'The real trouble is that they haven't understood what politics meant to them. They looked on it kind of like a baseball game in which, if you were a Democrat, you cheered when the Democrats won, or if a Republican, when the Republicans won.

"'They didn't understand that the Charter group (which is backing Everett and Proportional Representation) is made up of both Democrats and independent Republicans, with real labor representation in it to speak up for the working man. They didn't understand until I told them that real issues were at stake.'

"'That, my friend,' Woodall said, 'is why machine politics exist. The voters are kept ignorant of what is at stake. Put a good man in every block to tell them and it will be a different story.'

"Woodall is a machinist at the American Can Co., member of Local 1861, CIO Steelworkers. He has for years worn two artificial legs. But that didn't stop him from polling his neighborhood."

Cuba Cracks Down On Labor

JAILING of several top leaders of the Cuban Federation of Labor (CTC) and withdrawal of government recognition of that union group, brought turmoil in Cuba last week.

Five hundred union members, jailed for joining a protest demonstration against the government's action, won release after conducting a 44-hour hunger strike. They were greeted by a second crowd, running into the thousands, who hailed their freedom from jail.

Among those who had been jailed was Iazaro Pena, CTC general secretary and a leading figure in the Latin American Federation of Labor.

CTC leaders bitterly assailed the government's action in withdrawing recognition from the island's principal labor federation. They described the action of Pres. San Martin and Labor Minister Socarras as illegal and unconstitutional.

Steelworkers File Objections In NLRB Recognition Cases

THE CIO Steelworkers have filed an objection, either as petitioners or interven or, demanding that the Natl. Labor Relations Board hold hearings and or arguments on 22 pending USA Recognition cases.

The NLRB has declared the cases are subject to dismiss under the affidavit provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. USA officers have refused to sign the affidavits.

The USA objection, filed by Gen. Council Lee Pressman, says that if the NLRB dismisses the cases it would be "illegal, invalid and an improper construction of the Wagner Act and the powers thereunder and also unconstitutional."

The objection said the unconstitutionality claim is based on (a), USA be deprived of "due processes"—5th Amendment; (b) of "equal protection of the law"—th; deprived of "freedom of speech, press and assembly"—1st, and it would be "a bill of attainder"—1st Article.

USA also contends the board's action would be a violation of the Administrative Procedures Act in that the NLRB failed to publish its order in the Federal Register.

Pressman declared the Wagner Act requires hearings and due notice in recognition cases. The NLRB had merely announced its system to the press in August and sent a letter to the union.

FE Strike Ends At Harvester

The 40-day strike of CIO Equipment Workers at the Louisville, Ky., International Harvester plant has ended with what FE hails as a victory for the unions struggle against a North-South pay differential.

Praised by the FE's national Harvest Council as a "major accomplishment in the long battle for union standards," the settlement provides raises retroactive to August 21.

Smart Councilman: City Councilman Jack R. Adams of Wheeling, W. Va., receives a PAC emblem from CIO Steelworker District Director Paul Rusen after making his donation to PAC. A free ticket to a PAC-day picnic is being prepared for Adams by Union Office Sec'y. Betty Hinkle. The picnic climaxed the PAC donation campaign.

Probe Hit By Murray

CONGRESS, to save its good name before the American people, should quickly repudiate the House Un-American Activities Committee and end its existence, CIO Pres. Murray has suggested to leaders of the Senate and House.

Referring to the Thomas-Rankin group's "probe" of the movie industry, Murray said:

"I suggest in all sincerity that the leaders of Congress cannot permit this type of performance to be conducted without rebuke or other appropriate action.

"For many years now, the Un-American Activities Committee has constituted a shameful blot on the pages of American legislative action and a reflection upon our standards of decency and fair play."

HE went on to say: "The new depths to which this Committee has descended poses to the responsible leaders of Congress a sharp challenge—a challenge to maintain the name and standing of the institution they represent. It creates for leaders like yourself an obligation to the people of the country to act promptly and decisively to repudiate the Committee and to terminate its existence once and for all."

Murray's letter was addressed to Sen. Vandenberg, president pro tempore of the Senate; Speaker of the House Martin; and majority and minority leaders of the two branches of Congress.

Murray noted that in the past "labor has felt the whiplash of this Committee and its predecessors." Labor has seen the committee's willingness to "use the cloak of Congressional immunity for purposes of slander and character assassination—all to serve the political end of weakening and vilifying any progressive thought in our nation," he added.

The CIO president said the "entire performance" has been marked by testimony based on hearsay and rumor, by refusal of permission for cross-examination of witnesses and by the banning "of any other line of inquiry calculated to determine whether there was a single grain of truth in their testimony."

MURRAY'S letter was sent as the Committee abruptly concluded the hearing after having cited 10 Hollywood figures for contempt. In each of the 10 cases, the witnesses had declined to answer "yes or no" when asked whether they are Communists.

Some of the witnesses said the question was none of the Commitee's business, on the basis that their political ideas are personal, or maintained that the question could not be answered in the one-word fashion demanded by Chairman Thomas.

Reporters at the klieg-lighted hearing in the House Office Building and editorial writers throughout the nation expressed strong confusion as to what the Committee was aiming to prove.

Little evidence of any significant Communist headway in controlling the movies was produced at the hearing, and the questions of Rep. Thomas (R., N. J.) led many spectators to believe the committee was putting on the heat for production of anti-Communist propaganda movies.

SHOULD READ IT

The report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights is an important document with which every American should become completely familiar.

Highlights of the report are printed on Pages 6, 7 and 8 of this issue of the CIO News. Don't miss reading them.

THAT SPECIAL CALL

We've got a couple of serious problems that require quick attention, President Truman told members of Congress as he called them back into special session.

One is the foreign aid issue. The other is the domestic cost-of-living problem.

We're not going to predict what Congress will do, but we want to state—in simple terms if possible—the issues involved.

Russia is trying to extend its influence westward across Europe and establish communistic forms of government in some 16 countries.

The U. S. Government is opposing this move and it figures the most effective way to do the job is to help Western European nations get back on their feet.

Then—forgetting for an instant the struggle between the leftists and the rightists—there is the important humane problem of what the U. S. will do about helping millions who face hunger.

The CIO takes the position that we should do everything we can to prevent starvation abroad.

Can this country pour food and money into Europe without causing unreasonably high prices to go even higher at home? Can those who have profiteered since the end of the war be expected to mend their ways when the squeeze becomes even tighter?

Or will there have to be legislation to keep us from ruining our own economy while trying to help others?

The CIO takes the position that recent events have demonstrated voluntary action will not get the job done.

The foreign and domestic problems are tied so closely together they will have to be considered almost as one.

Every citizen—whether he draws a fat salary or earns a half-dollar an hour—has a tremendous stake in what Congress does. The people are going to have to pay the bill—whatever it may be.

Which prompts us to suggest that every union member should . . .

Tell Them the Score

Congress goes back into session two weeks from today, which means that "the folks back home" have plenty of time left in which to tell lawmakers what they've got on their minds.

It does little real good for union members to sit around among themselves and gripe about the high cost of living, the Taft-Hartley law and failure of Congress to do anything constructive about the housing shortage.

The griping should be done to those who make the laws.

Then they can't say just before election time next year that they didn't know what the voters wanted.

You Can't Appreciate Civil Rights Until They're Gone

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE was a lot of scheming and shooting in this country back in the early days because folks wanted freedom so badly they were willing to die for it.

They didn't go around making pretty speeches about "inalienable civil rights," but that's really what they sought.

They wanted an end to the old business of tossing into jail those unable to pay their debts. They wanted to kick over the old system under which men were imprisoned because they spoke unkindly of their rulers.

The going was tough, but they made real progress. There's still a long, hard road ahead, however.

THE average person—unless he sits down and does some hard thinking on the subject—will say the U. S. does a good job of protecting the civil rights of those who live within its borders.

That's unfortunate, because it's not true.

Ask any union organizer who has been slugged while deputy sheriffs stood idly by.

Ask any member of a minority group who has been discriminated against because of creed or color.

Ask any person whose right to vote has been limited by the poll tax.

Ask any reporter who has covered the story of a lynching.

THERE'S a moral side to this civil liberties business—and there's an economic side, too. Both are important.

Those who violate the moral code of civil rights and carry their activities to the extreme form organizations such as the Ku Klux Klan, the Columbians and the Free White American Gentile Army.

Those who violate the economic code exploit race and religious prejudice to prevent their employes from forming labor unions—and they keep wage rates down by playing race against race.

Both groups are bad for the country.

EVERY CIO member—and every other person in the country—should give close attention to the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

It's an important document of any era—and a particularly important one at the present time. Civil rights take a terrible beating during and immediately following a war.

The Un-American Activities Committee, for instance, is operating as prosecutor, judge and jury. The accused do not have adequate opportunity to defend themselves.

Certain governmental agencies have adopted a policy of not providing fair and adequate hearings for those accused of being subversive.

A union organizer who isn't beaten gives little thought to the matter. The person who isn't denied a good job because of his race or creed doesn't go around talking about it.

The men and women who enjoy full freedom to vote take voting as a matter of course.

But it's not hard to realize that what happens to one group which suffers discrimination may happen later to another group.

Enjoyment of civil rights provides the foundation for democracy. The men who established our nation knew that to be true.

No CIO member should ever forget it.

Satevepost Called to Task

THE Saturday Evening Post took "a list of employer-sponsored arguments" on the Taft-Hartley Law and presented them to readers "as the work of an impartial student," the CIO publicity Department charged last week.

"On behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I request that you make space available in the Saturday Evening Post for a reply by a member of the CIO Legal Department to statements contained in the J. Mack Swigert article, 'The Taft-Hartley Law: Does It Really Hurt Labor,' in your October 25 issue," Allan L. Swim, CIO publicity director, said in a letter to the editor of the Post.

"Mr. Swigert is described in the Post's introduction in terms calculated to prove him a 'neutral' expert. You mention that he represents 'both employers and unions,' and imply that his services in connection with the 1946 steel strike were sought by President Truman on the basis of a reputation of neutrality in labor-management affairs.

"But the record of Mr. Swigert, a law partner of Senator Robert A. Taft, is clearly that of a man representing employers, fighting unions and helping design schemes aimed at destroying labor's rights. That opinion is confirmed by bona fide union officials in Cincinnati, who look upon Mr. Swigert as a 'chore-boy' on anti-labor cases.

"The same source reports to us that a 'careful check through CIO and AFL unions in Hamilton County (Cincinnati) fails to uncover a single case in the last ten years wherein Swigert has actually represented a legitimate labor union.'

"The list of employers whom Mr. Swigert represents in labor-management cases is long and impressive, but as an official of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, has pointed out, 'he is largely identified as special counsel for employers who try to repudiate their contracts and break down collective bargaining. Many employers who have regular counsel retain Swigert when trick works are contemplated. Whenever an Ohio employer retains Swigert as special counsel in a labor case, the unions know that that employer intends to break the union if he can.'

"Obviously Mr. Swigert's selection of clients is his own business. But we believe it is our business to complain when a magazine like the Saturday Evening Post takes a list of employer-sponsored arguments and presents them to his readers as the work of an impartial student. Such action, we feel, is unfair to your readers and to the organized labor movement.

"Accordingly, we formally request that you provide equal space for a member of the CIO Legal Department to present the other side of the story. It is apparent that an informed public opinion cannot be developed through one-sided presentation of these complex issues. The Post has a duty to its readers to tell the whole story on one of the most significent pieces of legislation of our decade."

Some Free Speech About The Civil Rights Report

MEMBERS of Congress and newspapers exercised freedom of speech and press—two of the basic civil liberties guaranteed by the U. S. Constitution—in commenting on the report of President Truman's Civil Rights Committee.

The Comments on the report ranged from Pres. Philip Murray's "important milestone" to Rep. Harold Knutson's "I don't want the Government to tell me whom I shall hire," and from the New York Herald Tribune's, "an attack on the blindnesses, the barbarisms" to the Nashville, Tenn., Banner's plaint that the report "originated in the left wing of imported politics."

Here are some of the earlier comments:

SEN. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), long a fighter for Civil rights: "If there ever was a time in the history of the world when a Government must stand in its actions foursquare with the principles it poses in the world, now is the time."

SEN. Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.), author of the New York State fair employment law, hailed as one of the country's best: "Any support, especially from groups as influential and prominent as the President's Committee shall be most welcome."

SEN. Wallace White (R., Me.), GOP leader in the Senate: "The proposals will be provocative of a lot of discussion. To press them in the special session might endanger the President's emergency aid program."

SEN. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.), leader of the liberal GOP bloc: "The best type of Americanism is that which protects the guarantees of the individual in our Constitution."

REP. Charles A. Eaton (R., N. J.): "Charles E. Wilson (chairman of the President's Committee) is one of the great men of the country. But, his report omits one very important fact—the way God made human beings. No legislation can change human beings. That can be done only by religion and thought."

NEW York Times: "We can make more progress, in which the Federal Government, representing the whole people, must take added responsibility. We have a right to demand that enemies of our democratic system disclose themselves and their sources of income. But in the last analysis, in Congressional hearings or elsewhere, it is better that one man be allowed to abuse his freedom than that another be wrongly deprived of it."

NEW York Herald Tribune: "Here is an outline, thoroughly reasoned, of what can and ought to be done. The difficulties of doing it all would obviously be great, but the very boldness of the proposals gives them their strength."

WASHINGTON Post: "The document is a heartening as well as an appalling one. The record of this Nation falls far short of its pretensions; it is a record which gravely impedes the fulfillment of our aims in foreign affairs, which seriously undermines the development of our full strength and security at home. Yet the recognition of our shortcomings is the indispensable first step toward correction of them."

FROM the South:

Nashville Banner: If Truman adopts this as a plank in his platform, "he would first have to crowd Henry (Wallace) off it."

Charlotte, N. C., News: "Unwarranted and impractical."

Mobile, Ala., Register: "Not the answer."

Raleigh, Va., Times: "Some worthwhile sentiments," but the recommendations would "do irreparable harm to interracial relations."

Amherst Prof. Refuses To Sign Loyalty Form 'On Principles'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

ALANKY, bespectacled Amherst professor, who serves as a government economis consultant, last week refused "on principle" to file an FBI loyalty questionnaire. He said to the government, in effect, "go do something about it."

The professor is Colston E. Warne, nationally known as an expert on consumer problems, who has been serving as an unpaind consultant to the government's top economic agency—the Council of Economic Advisors. His only payment from the government is an occasional expense check for travel between Amherst, Mass., and Washington.

Early in October, Warne received a letter indicating he must file the "loyalty questionnaire" required of all government employes under Pres. Truman's much-criticized Executive Order 9358.

"This Executive Order is so completely repugnant to the political institutions of our country that I cannot comply with its terms, and feel that as a citizen I have no other course which in good conscience I can take," Warne wrote to Chairman E. G. Nourse of the Economic Advisors Council.

DESCRIBING himself as an "up-state New York Yankee . . . living in a small New England town where we pride ourselves upon carrying on American democratic traditions," Warne wrote:

"I am indeed shocked that for the first time in American history, heresy hunting has received official sanction of the President of the U. S."

"I am not a Communist and have never been," the professor declared. "I do feel, however, that even Communists, as citizens, have a right to the fullest possible expression of their ideas and that efforts to silence them by loyalty tests are blundering in conception and dangerous in execution."

Pointing out that the government has his fingerprints and full information about his background, Warne said his refusal was purely on principle. He charged that the principle of loyalty orders is anticipated in police states, where "arbitrary boards pass loyalty judgments on the basis of flimsly evidence founded on rumor, suspicion and hearsay . . ."

Warne said that the principle of "guilt by association"—on which the government appears to be relying in its loyalty tests—is a "tenet of Nazi justice, but has never become an accepted principle of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence."

TO combat the tendency towards reaction, the professor declared, "the only weapon on which the ordinary citizen possesses is that of speaking out in unmistakable language against arbitrary loyalty orders."

He charged that the government's loyalty quiz program is in conflict with the U. S. position at the United Nations, where Mrs. Roosevelt has proposed adoptionof a program providing "equal opportunity to engage in public employment in the state of which he is a citizen."

YW Aids Italians

A gift of $29,000 from the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee will be used to start a demonstration welfare center for women employed in the first industrial cooperative in Italy, the YWCA Natl. Board announced last week.

The CSC donation was given to the Round-the-World Reconstruction Fund Drive for $2,100,000 to aid women in 30 war-affected countries.

Mrs. Sherwood Anderson, representative of the YWCA's foreign division, sailed for Italy Oct. 24 to start organizing the welfare center, the YWCA said.

CIO officials serving on the American advisory committee for the YWCA center are Leo Perlis, CSC executive secretary; George Baldanzi, executive vice-president, Textile Workers Union, and August Bellanca, vice-president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

5 Strikers Now Nuns

Says Rev. William Smith, Jesuit conductor of a labor school:

"Five of the young ladies who pounded the pavement on the picket line in the telephone strike have entered the convent.

"When they get into the classroom, the propaganda of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, which floods the schools, will not be gullibly accepted."

'It Will Require As Much Courage

CIVIL RIGHTS PROJECTED

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

AN EPOCHAL Magna Carta of civil liberty designed to implement fully the Founding Fathers' belief that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable rights," has been presented to Pres. Truman by his Committee on Civil Rights.

The report, in its first few paragraphs, stated "we cannot avoid the knowledge that the American ideal still awaits complete realization." At the end, it declared that with God's "guidance and help we can move forward toward a nobler social order in which there will be equal opportunity for all." It pulls no punches, spares no feelings and leaves no stone unturned.

Immediate praise came from Truman, who said "an American charter of human freedom in our time" was needed, and from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who hailed the committee's document, "To Secure These Rights," as an "important milestone in the development and diffusion of American democracy."

The committee, which included CIO Secy.-treas. James B. Carey, sought answers to the following:

"1. What is the historic civil rights goal of the American people?

"2. In what ways does our present record fall short of the goal?

"3. What is the government's responsibility for the achievement of the goal?

"4. What further steps does the nation now need to take to reach the goal?"

Several score recommendations were made to implement the drive to "secure these rights" (the recommendations are in an adjoining column), but these were the major objectives:

(a) To strengthen the machinery for the protection of civil rights: This section set as it goal reorganization and new powers for the Civil Rights Section of the Dept. of Justice, with establishment by the states of agencies similar to the federal section.

(b) To strengthen the right to safety and security: Calls for legislation against police brutality; for anti-lynching law.

(c) To strengthen the right to citizenship and its privileges: Demands an end to poll taxes.

(d) To strengthen the right of freedom of conscience: Asks safeguards against hate groups, and establishment of proper loyalty standards and procedures to protect public workers' rights.

(e) To strengthen the right to equality of opportunity: Urges complete elimination of segregation and asks enactment of an FEPC.

(Two of the witnesses who testified in favor of a federal FEPC for federal workers were George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, and Thomas Richardson, vice president of the CIO Public Workers.)

(f) To rally the American people to support a continuing program to strengthen civil rights: A long term educational program to inform the people of their rights and what they owe to each other.

To reach these seven conclusions, the report, in colorful, but direct language lays its thesis on the line.

The chapter headed "The American Heritage: the Promise of Freedom and Equality," recalls the high aims of the Declaration of Independence, the noble tenets of the Bill of Rights and the solemn pledges of the Four Freedoms.

The Committee arrives at this conclusion:

"We have seen nothing to shake our conviction that the civil rights of the American people — all of them — can be strengthened quickly and effectively by the normal processes of democratic, constitutional government.

"The strengthening, we believe, will make our daily life more and more consonant with the spirit of the American heritage. But, it will require as much courage, as much imagination, as much perseverance as anything we have ever done together. The members of this committee reaffirm their faith in the American heritage and its promise."

AS TO THE "Rights to Freedom of Conscience and Expression," the committee remarked "it is natural and proper for good citizens to worry about the activities of those few people in our midst who would destroy democracy", such as Communists and Fascists. But the committee "unqualifiedly opposed any attempt to impose special limitations on the rights of these people to speak and assemble." It warned against near-hysteria on this subject.

WHAT HAS BEEN done to achieve the goal of the Founding Fathers? The answer is given in Chapter 11— "The Record: Short of the Goal."

The committee pauses to give a clear definition of what the phrase, "civil rights," means. According to the committee, "it is an abbreviation for a whole complex of relationships among individuals and among groups."

But, even with that definition, the committee feels that "we cannot properly understand the American civil rights record without giving attention to the composition of the American people."

WHILE THE committee saw signs of recent improvements, it felt that the overall picture showed a vast need for remedies. Improvements included those achieved by private groups, by several groups in the south, by the press, by the radio, motion pictures, churches, schools, colleges, unions, business professions. Also, community projects have helped.

However, the debit side was bad.

As Pres. Murray put it after reading the document: "Our history, during the 172 years of our national existence, has been marked with a number of milestones, but this is by far the most significant of all of them, constituting as it does a public accounting of what has been accomplished in the matter of human rights under The American tradition, and setting forth concrete plans as to the work that remains to be done."

The Committee

The President's Committee on Civil Rights, established Dec. 5, 1946, by President Truman, consists of:

Follows CIO Policy

The report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights contains major provisions that have been advocated by the CIO since its very inception.

Its principles have been approved by convention, have been advocated by international unions and have been enunciated by Pres. Philip Murray and other CIO officers.

GOV'T. MUS TAKE LEA

UNCLE SAM has a good job to do to protect civil rights—and he has plenty of power with which to wield his big stick against violators of the people's freedom.

That contention stands out sharply in the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

Difficulties of enforcement? Yes, plenty of them, the Committee admits. But it's pretty clear that in many cases Uncle hasn't been altogether vigorous in seeing justice done.

"The national government must take the lead in safeguarding the civil rights of all Americans," the Committee said. "We need more than protection of our rights against government; we need protection of our rights against private persons or groups seeking to undermine them."

The government, however, acts in what the Committee describes as the "climate of opinion" — and popular sentiment must be built in every way possible to condemn every type of violation of the citizen's rights.

THERE is a direct connection between ignorance and insecurity and prejudice and violation of civil rights, the Committee asserted.

The fear or insecurity which leads a person to prejudice thrives upon ignorance, but most prejudice cannot survive real understanding of the variation among people in any group, or the scientific findings "which establish the equality of groups and disprove racist nonsense.'

Attainment of full civil rights in the law can be a real blow at prejudice, the Committee suggested, for:

"The fewer the opportunities there are to use inequality in the law as a reinforcement of prejudice, the sooner prejudice will vanish."

In its report, the Committee got down to detail on various avenues open to federal and state governments to streng civil rights protection

BISHOP HAAS — RABBI GITTELSOHN — BISHOP SHERRILL

These three clergymen played an active part in the work of the Civil Rights Committee. Bishop Haas is in charge of the Catholic diocese of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Rabbi Gittelsohn heads the congregation at Rockville Center, L. I.; Bishop Sherill is presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The three were united on the crusade for real civil liberty.

THE HISTORY ISN'T PRETTY

MUCH of the real progress toward civil liberties in recent years can be attributed to the work of private organizations whose chief aim is the furtherance of freedom "To Secure These Rights" states in its chapter, "The Record: Short of the Goal."

Organized labor came in for special mention for its work in bringing the Negro into the community of workers. The report quotes Charles S. Johnson, who wrote in a recent survey of Negro progress: " . . . the biggest single forward surge of Negroes into the main stream of American life in the past 10 years has been their movement into the ranks of organized labor."

The awareness of discrimination by Americans is growing, the Committee finds, but on the whole the picture is not pretty.

FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE: Discrimination in government service was demonstrated in a study conducted by the National Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital. This group selected 40 pairs of Negroes and white government employes, matched according to age, sex, marital status, educational level, length of service, division in which inducted, job title and grade in which inducted.

After some time a check on promotions was made. The white workers, with a total of 22 years of service, had received 12 grade promotions; the Negroes, with a total service of 28 years, had received two promotions.

ARMED FORCES: " . . . the record shows that the members of several minorities, fighting and dying for the survival of the nation in which they met bitter prejudice, found that there was discrimination against them even as they fell in battle," the Committee reports. "Prejudice in any area is an ugly, undemocratic phenomenon; in the armed services, where all men run the risk of death, it is particularly repugnant."

The "lily white" practices of the military academies at West Point and Annapolis prompted the Committee to state: "because it means that our officers are trained in undemocratic environment and are denied the opportunity to learn at an early stage in their service careers that men of different races can work and fight together harmoniously."

LYNCHING: Last year 6 Negroes were lynched; no one has been punished for the crimes. "It is still possible," says the Committee, "for a mob to abduct and murder a person in some sections of the country with almost certain assurance of escaping punishment for the crime.

" . . . Frequently, state officials participate in the crime, actively or passively."

How To Get Copy Of The Report

The 178-page document, "To Secure These Rights," which is the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, may be obtained through the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. The price is $1.00.

Pres. Philip Murray, after the report was issued, declared: "The CIO will lend every effort to diffusing the contents of the report and the report itself to our membership and to the various community groups with which our people work every day in the year."

POLICE BRUTALITY: "Violent physical attacks on members of minority groups" have been widespread, the Committee states. Such illegal police activity can fall on any group—union organizers, Mexicans, Negroes, Jehovah's Witnesses. Most of such action reported by the Committee is centered in the South where there are many instances of police officers who become "trigger happy" around members of a minority group, as in the instance of eight Negro prisoners in Glynn County, Ga., killed by white guards as they allegedly attempted to escape.

COURT JUSTICE: Negroes, Mexicans and Indians may often find the doors of equal justice closed to them.

THE RIGHT TO VOTE: Although Negroes in the South are beginning to exercise their right to vote in increasing numbers, devices to bar the Negro increase and continually pop up to replace practices declared unconstitutional by the courts.

OPPORTUNITY: Too frequently minority groups are the last to be hired, the first to be fired, the Report finds. Although the wartime FEPC went far in eliminating such sorespots, Congress has failed to enact permanent legislation along these lines.

SEGREGATION: Minority groups are denied access to public places, are restricted in the area in which they can live, Japanese and Indians are denied property rights, Negroes suffer humiliation on buses and trains and are denied equal education through discriminatory state laws. While 18 states prohibit discrimination in public places, 20 states compel segregation in one way or another. Wherever state or local facilities are segregated, services for Negroes are almost always inferior, the committee found. This despite a Supreme Court ruling which requires equal facilities wherever they are separate.

Committee Recommendation

HERE are the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights:

"I. To strengthen the machinery for the protection of civil rights, the committee recommends:

"1. The reorganization of the Civil Rights Section of the Department of Justice to provide for:

"The establishment of regional offices;

"A substantial increase in its appropriation and staff to enable it to engage in more extensive research and to act more effectively to prevent civil rights violations;

"An increase in investigative action in the absence of complaints;

"The greater use of civil sanctions;

"Its elevation to the status of a full division in the Justice Department.

"3. The establishment by the State governments of law enforcement agencies comparable to the federal Civil Rights Section.

"4. The establishment of a permanent Commission on Civil Rights in the Executive Office of the President, preferably by Act of Congress;

"And the simultaneous creation of a Joint Standing Committee on Civil Rights in Congress.

"5. The establishment by the states of permanent commissions on civil rights to parallel the work of the federal commission at the state level.

"6. The increased professionalism of state and local police forces.

"II. To strengthen the right to safety and security of the person, the committee recommends:

"1. Enactment by Congress of new legislation to supplement Section 51 of Title 18 of the U. S. Code which would impose the same liability on one person as is now imposed by that statute on two or more persons.

"2. The amendment of Section 51 to remove the penalty provision which disqualifies persons convicted under the Act from holding public office.

"3. The amendment of Section 52 to increase the maximum penalties that may be imposed under it from a $1000 fine and a one-year prison term to $4000 fine and a 10-year prison term, thus bringing its penalty provisions into line with those in Section 51.

"4. The enactment by Congress of a new statute, to supplement Section 52, specifically directed against police brutality and related crimes.

"5. The enactment by Congress of an anti-lynching act.

"6. The enactment by Congress of a new criminal, statute on involuntary servitude, supplementing Section 443 and 444 of Title 18 of the U. S. Code.

"7. A review of our wartime evacuation and detention experience, looking toward the de-

BROPHY . . . .

Way to Industrial Peace

THE people of America "have a rightful and vital concern with a number of key decisions in the basic industries which hitherto have been made exclusively by industry itself."

An interview in the Christian Science Monitor quotes John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, to that effect in giving his explanation of the CIO's industry council plan.

JOHN BROPHY

Brophy said "labor was brought into participation with management in a degree during the war, and the plan carries this over into peacetime. The councils, which would do the economic planning for basic industry, would be composed of representatives of labor, government, agriculture and consumers.

"This was a novel suggestion for industrial relations," says the article, written by Frederick W. Carr. Brophy revealed the "idea was first enunciated by CIO Pres. Philip Murray" and the plan was re-indorsed at the Boston convention.

"The plan is receiving fresh attention," Brophy said. "But, it has not been fully understood. Too many people have thought of it as merely a program of union-management cooperation.

"Such cooperation is a fine thing. But the industry council plan goes beyond this. It is an attempt to bring about better planning in the interests of the commonwealth. It is the American way to achieve full industrial democracy by the parties at interest in the productive process. It is one of the steps toward full employment."

According to the article, Brophy outlined steps to be taken by an industry council.

First, there would be action on wage levels. Next, prices, which would be dealt with through the pricing machinery of the corporations themselves; then, production and employment levels, capital investment, technological changes and size and location of plants.

Governor Locks Ky. Stable After Rent Horse Skips

IN Louisville, it goes like this: "If meat goes up, you can eat chicken, but if your rent goes up, you pay it. You can't sleep in the park."

The 5% rise had been approved Sept. 17 by the five-man Louisville rent board — which includes three real estate men. U. S. Housing Expediter Frank Creedon okayed the deal as of Oct. 9. (Late last week, Creedon resigned to take a job in industry.)

The city's CIO Council protested, saying the board "represents real estate interests exclusively." The three realtors, Argyle Beeler, Lewis R. Long, and Joseph Ray, were silent to that charge and a similar one which followed from the AFL. Board Chairman James Stites, former State chief justice, declared neither he nor Board Member James P. Miller represented landlords.

The CIO and AFL demanded labor representation. Gov. Simeon Willis—after the rise had been put in effect and after many landlords sent supplementary bills for the additional rent for October—named two tenants to the board. The men are C. Saul Herzman, operators of three Army-surplus stores, and Dr. E. C. Humes, dentist.

Taxi Bias Hit By CIO Action

The Washington, D. C., CIO Council has won a victory against discrimination in taxis.

Two CIO women members—one a Negro—hailed a cab. After they entered, the driver ordered them out, saying "it is against the law to take mixed groups."

The women, advised by the council and its president, Henry Beitscher, protested to the Public Utilities Commission, demanding revocation of the driver's license. After a hearing, the PUC notified the CIO the driver had been suspended 15 days.

Issue Pamphlet For Auxiliary

A manual for "Mrs. CIO Housewife" describing the structure, work and aims of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries, has just been published by the CIO Dept. of Research & Education, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington 6, D. C.

Price 15c a copy, reduced rates for quantity orders.

The 35-page illustrated pamphlet, entitled "Build a Better Life", tells how to start an auxiliary, describes how it functions and explains the structure and main functions of the CWA-CIO.

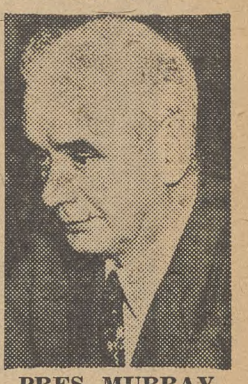
Model by-laws and the auxiliary pledge are also included.

MURRAY . . . .

Indorses Community Chest

AS local Community Chests began preparations for their annual contribution drive, scheduled to begin nationally Nov. 12, CIO Pres. Philip Murray urged CIO unions and members to cooperate wholeheartedly.

In a letter to H. J. Heinz II, chairman of the national campaign organization, Murray stated: "I am urging the unions, and through them, the members of the CIO to participate actively in the forthcoming Community Chest campaigns and to give generously not only of their dollars but of their time as board and committee members on a year-round basis.



PRES. MURRAY

"It is the policy of our organizaiton, representing 6,000,000 American working men and women of ing men and women of all races, colors and creeds, to give our fullest support to the financing and planning of such federated health and welfare services as those represented by Community Chests."

Irving Abramson, chairman of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee, says of the drive: "The CIO has as its policy the promotion and strengthening of health and welfare services throughout the nation and its communities. We further are dedicated to the principle of federated financing and planning of such social services and we are mindful that the Community Chest and Council movement is based on this principle.

"Therefore, we heartily back it."

In more than a score of Community Chest cities, industrial campaigns this year will be benefited by the services of full-time labor staff members.

CIO Industrial Union councils are all aiding. As they have for some years, particularly during the war, when labor gave willingly and in great quantities.

Recommendations of President's Committee

velopment of a policy which will prevent the abridgment of civil rights of any person or groups because of race or ancestry.

"8. Enactment by Congress of legislation establishing a procedure by which claims of evacuees for specific property and business losses resulting from the wartime evacuation can be promptly considered and settled.

"III. To strengthen the right to citizenship and its privileges, the Committee recommends:

"1. Action by the states or Congress to end poll taxes as a voting prerequisite.

"2. The enactment by Congress of a statute protecting the right of qualified persons to participate in federal primaries and elections against interference by public officers and private persons.

"3. The enactment by Congress of a statute protecting the right to qualify for, or participate in, federal or state primaries or elections against discriminatory action by state officers based on race or color, or depending on any other unreasonable classifications of persons for voting purposes.

"4. The enactment by Congress of legislation establishing local self-government for the District of Columbia; and the amendment of the Constitution to extend suffrage in presidential elections and representatives in Congress to District residents.

"5. The granting of suffrage by New Mexico and Arizona to their Indian citizens.

"6. The modification of the federal naturalization laws to permit the granting of citizenship without regard to the race, creed or national origin of applicants.

"7. The repeal by the states of laws discriminating against aliens who are ineligible for citizenship because of race, color or national origin.

(Note: any reference hereafter to segregation or discrimination means because of race, creed, color or national origin.)

"8. The enactment by Congress of legislation granting citizenship to the people of Guam and American Samoa.

"9. The enactment by Congress of legislation, followed by appropriate administrative action, to end immediately all discrimination and segregation based on race, color, creed or national origin, in the organization and activities of all branches of the Armed Service.

"10. The enactment by Congress of legislation providing that no member of the armed forces shall be subject to discrimination by any public authority or place of public accommodation, recreation, transportation or other service or business.

"IV. To strengthen the right to freedom of conscience and expression, the Committee recommends:

"1. The enactment by Congress and the state legislatures of legislation requiring all groups which attempt to influence public opinion, to disclose the pertinent facts about themselves through systematic registration procedures.

Action by Congress and the executive branch clarifying the loyalty obligations of federal employes, and establishing standards and procedures by which the civil rights of public workers may be scrupulously maintained.

"V. To strengthen the right to equality of opportunity, the committee recommends:

"1. In general:

"The elimination of segregation from American life.

"The conditioning by Congress of all federal grants-in-aid and other forms of federal assistance to public or private agencies for any purpose on the absence of discrimination and segregation.

"2. For employment:

"The enactment of a federal FEPC prohibiting all forms of discrimination in private employment.

"The enactment by the states of similar laws;

"The issuance by the President of a mandate against discrimination in government employment and the creation of adequate machinery to enforce this mandate.

"3. For education:

"Enactment by the state legislatures of fair educational practice laws for public and private educational institutions, prohibiting discrimination in the admission and treatment of students.

"4. For housing:

"The enactment by the states of laws outlawing restrictive covenants;

"Renewed court attack, with intervention by the Department of Justice, upon restrictive covenants.

"5. For health services:

"The enactment by the states of fair health statutes forbidding discrimination and segregation in the operation of public or private health facilities.

"6. For public services:

"The enactment by Congress of a law stating that discrimination and segregation in the rendering of all public services by the national government is contrary to public policy;

"The enactment by the states of similar laws:

"The enactment by Congress or by executive order of a unit in the federal Bureau of the Budget to review the execution of all government programs, and the expenditures of all government funds, for compliance with the policy of non-discrimination;

"The enactment by Congress of a law prohibiting discrimination or segregation in interstate transportation and all the facilities thereof, to apply against both public officers and the employes of private transportation companies;

"The enactment by the states of laws guaranteeing equal access to places of public accommodation, broadly defined, for all.

"7. For the District of Columbia:

"Prohibition of discrimination and segregation in all public or publicly-supported hospitals, parks, recreational facilities, housing projects, welfare agencies, penal institutions, and concessions on public property;

"The prohibition of segregation in the public school system;

"The establishment of a fair educational practice program directed against discrimination in the admission of students to private educational institutions;

"The establishment of a fair health practice program forbidding discrimination and segregation by public or private agencies with respect to the training of doctors and nurses, the admission of patients to hospitals, clinics, and similar institutions, and the right of doctors and nurses to practice in hospitals;

"The outlawing of restrictive covenants;

"Guaranteeing equal access to places of public accommodation, broadly defined, to all.

"8. The enactment by Congress of legislation ending segregation in the Panama Canal Zone.

"VI. To rally the American people to the support of a continuing program to strengthen civil rights, the committee recommends:

"A long term campaign of public education to inform the people of the civil rights to which they are entitled and which they owe to one another.

* * *

"As the committee concludes this report, we would remind ourselves that the future of the nation rests upon the character, the high principle of our people. Democracy, brotherhood, human rights—these are practical expressions of the eternal worth of every child of God. With His guidance and help, we can move forward toward a nobler social order in which there will be equal opportunity for all."

Wives Are Behind Men on Shipyard Picket Lines

By GLORIA CAPLAN

Photos by Nate Fein and Marion Hille

"WE'RE stickin' to the union."

That's what the women behind the men on the CIO Shipbuilding picket line at Bethlehem Steel's 10 shipyards tell you.

And the guy who's been on the picket line, rain or shine, day or night, for the past 133 days will tell you he couldn't have done it it out. She's seen savings evaporate, food, rent, fuel, etc.—and that hurts. Sometimes she does not see her husband all week. He's putting in close to 24 hours on union duties).

The chance of his getting hit on the head or hauled off to jail is ever-present; the police aren't friendly to men who strike against a big corporation.

And the company representative has been around to help things along. He knows that nothing can produce a scab quicker than a nagging wife. So the company representative has told her that her husband will be fired, he'll lose his seniority, or the yard will be shut down if the men don't get back to work.

MOST wives have withstood all this bombardment. Most feel very much like Mrs. Ben Siford (upper right photo) who says she doesn't want a scab for a husband. "I'd rather see my husband walk down the street and be called a man," she remarked. Siford is a burner at the Key Highway shipyard in Baltimore.

The Sifords have 11 children, 7 of whom are dependents. Gladys, age 4 (shown lying down), is ill with bronchitis. Doctor and medicine bills are paid by the union. Elizabeth, a telephone operator (seated left) is strongly CIO, would like her indpendent telephone union to go CIO. Also shown are Harriet, 3; Teresa, 10 and Cathrine, 14. Two Siford sons are also Bethlehem strikers.

New shoes for Patricia and Phyllis, paid for by the Union, were the first new apparel to enter the J. M. Marcantonio home (upper left photo) since the strike began. Their savings are exhausted, and they're having difficulty hanging on to the mortgage, but Mrs. Marcantonio told a "company man" three weeks ago: "Yes, I'd like to see him go back to work—but not as a scab."

Her husband has been with Bethlehem—first in the steel mills and now in the Patapsco (Baltimore) yard—for 28 years, and they remember life without a union very well. "The company man said my husband would lose his seniority," she said. "Why, Bethlehem has never worried about seniority before; I don't know why they should pretend to start now." Mr. Marcantonio has been working at odd jobs during the strike.

MR. AND MRS. Haywood Lawson (lower right) check a newspaper account of the strike for facts. Mrs. Lawson had to go to work, sending their 7-year-old daughter to her mother-in-law to live, during the strike. Her husband, a burner at the Patapsco shipyard, had to quit a job he had taken to help tide them over because it interfered with his union duties.

The Lawsons also remember life with Bethlehem without a contract. Immediately after the men at Patapsco won a contract last December, Mrs. Lawson said, her husband got a 20c hourly wage rise and discrimination died. "I've never seen any discrimination in a CIO union," he interjected. (As this picture was being taken, a 'phone call announced the 50th arrest of a picket in Baltimore. No arrests of "company boys" have been reported.)

Weekly Baltimore bill to maintain strikers and their families: $20,000. This pays for food, rent, and other family necessities, but does not include the heavy cost of bail necessitated by frequent arrests on any convenient charge.

Here is why mothers turn gray: Chris Flore, striking member of the Brooklyn, N. Y., local 13, was too mad to stay in bed. (lower left). He can't picket with a broken ankle, but he's shown here watching the line the day after a scab raced his car through the picket line and knocked him down. With Chris are two of his union brothers.

By THOMAS NOWELL

PARSON Jack Johnston, publisher of the notoriously anti-labor, anti-Negro and anti-liberal Columbus, Ga., Trumpet, which was recently cited as part of an unfair labor practice charge against an employer, is now openly soliciting Ku Klux Klan members.

Parson Jack, who on one hand denies he is an active member of the KKK, on the other hand says of the Columbus KKK chapter, "I am just as much the head of it as anyone else." Asked if he'd accept the post of chapter Cyclops, he replied: "I don't know. I think I could do more on the outside."

THIS IS HOW Parson Jack, who is not claimed by any orthodox religious groups, entered on the labor scene:

"By causing this distribution of The Trumpet, respondent (The Bibb Manufacturing Company) succeeded in bringing to the attention of all its employes threats of loss of employment, of social ostracism, of economic reprisals, as well as threats of physical coercion and violence if they should join the union."

Those words, written by Thomas S. Wilson, a trial examiner of the National Labor Relations Board, cut Parson Jack from a lush circulation contract with Bibb.

"It also brought to their (Bibb's) employes' attention appeals to race prejudice in an effort to thwart unionization as well as every other possible argument, true or false, including 'Parson Jack's' own peculiar idea of religion, tending towards that same result.

"It also had published promises of rewards and inducements, apparently authentically promised by the textile manufacturers, in the event the employes 'kept the CIO out of the south.'

"None of these things could the Bibb Manufacturing Company have done legitimately by itself in the same atmosphere of coercion and intimidation which The Trumpet successfully created. The respondent here is attempting to do by the device of an allegedly independent third party that which it could not legitimately do by itself.

"This pattern of what might be termed third party coercion because of the use of allegedly third parties as the coercive factor runs throughout the instant case . . ."

SUCH AN indictment would shame most men. But not Parson Jack. He found a new and lush source of revenue—The Klan. He announced that he has 100 members in the Columbus chapter. The announcement was made in Parson Jack's own Tabernacle, which was made in Parson Jack's own Tabernacle.

In reviving the Klan, Parson Jack has made liberal use of his son, John R. Johnston, who operates the West Georgia Detective Agency.

Meanwhile, 50,000 publicity sheets are being distributed in and around Columbus urging membership in the KKK. Parson Jack claims that he last participated in the mystic rites as a member of a Tennessee Klavern.

He joined the Columbus-Phenix City Ministerial Alliance last year, but according to Alliance President Frank Woodward, he attended only one meeting. The Trumpet owner claims to be "diametrically opposed" on certain alliance matters.

IN HIS FINDINGS, Examiner Wilson had this to say of The Trumpet and its owner:

"The Trumpet is a four page weekly paper, published by Parson Jack, whose real name apparently is E. C. Johnston. Besides being the editor of The Trumpet and another paper called the Columbus Tribune, Johnston also appears to be a minister . . .

"The Trumpet is anti-everything except 'Parson Jack's' personal interpretation of religion, the status quo, and the Southern textile manufacturers. The paper is viciously anti-union, although in the issues in evidence its attacks upon unionism are almost exclusively restricted to the Textile Workers and the CIO.

"Although the Trumpet disclaims being anti-union in almost every issue, claiming that its hatred is restricted to the textile union, the CIO and the Communists, which terms the paper uses indiscriminately and interchangeably, attacks upon the AFL in later issues prove this contention false.

"The Trumpet fought against the CIO campaign drive in the textile industry with every means at its command. The 19 issues in evidence prove conclusively that no propaganda, no matter how false, no lie no matter how easily disproved, was too base to be published if they were anti-union and anti-CIO. A more venal sheet is hard to imagine."

THE PAPER itself is illiterate, often unintelligible, ill informed, if not deliberately misinformed, and dishonest. Anything was fit to print so long as it was anti-union. The Trumpet utilized every conceivable propaganda device from fear, hatred, race discrimination, bias and prejudice to loyalty to country and to employer, to promises and inducements of better wages and better conditions purporting to come from the manufacturers, in order to prevent the textile employes from joining the union and to keep the union out of the South. All this propaganda purported to be solidly based on religion—'Parson Jack's' own personal variety thereof enunciated for the occasion and to fit the occasion."

Utility Union Officer Refuses To Sign Affidavit, is Ousted

SHORTLY after delegates to the CIO Utility Workers convention in Buffalo, N. Y., instructed their officers to sign non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act last week, the union's national executive board approved the ouster of Board Member James Daugherty of California. Daugherty had refused to sign.

The removal of Daugherty was recommended by a trial committee, which charged him with failure to comply with the instructions of the convention.

Daugherty told the convention he felt action requiring him to sign the affidavit would be a violation of his constitutional rights. He said that his "constituents" on the West Coast had requested him not to sign. He did not appear before the trial committee to defend his position, union officers reported.

While terming the T-H Act "vicious and anti-labor," the resolution adopted at the convention stated that compliance with the affidavits requirement was "absolutely essential to the continued existence and expansion" of the union. It ordered the removal of any national executive board member who refused to file an affidavit.

The 275 convention delegates endorsed the Marshall Plan for European aid, and pledged "unqualified support" of PAC and its objectives. Another resolution opposed the formation of a third party and reaffirmed the union's intention to follow the policies of PAC. State legislation restricting the activity of utility workers was soundly condemned, and the union pledged renewed efforts to obtain their repeal. Under Secretary of Labor David A. Morse, principal speaker at the convention, appealed for immediate aid to European countries, but pointed out that our assistance is dependent on the maintenance of a healthy economy at home. The speaker asked increased production, maintenance of "a reasonable balance in price-wage relationships and stability in industrial relations" to achieve a stable economy.

Other speakers included Allan Haywood, national CIO vice president and adviser to the Utility Workers; Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director at Buffalo; Rev. Cameron P. Hall, executive secretary of the Federal Council of Churches; and the Rt. Rev. John P. Boland of Buffalo. The benediction was offered by the Rev. Joseph F. Hammond.

PIER LABOR WILL MEET

Call for an all-Pacific conference of longshoremen and portside workers, scheduled for Honolulu at the end of November, has been sounded by Vincente Lombardo Toledano, president of the Latin-American Federation of Labor.

Invitations have been sent to unions in all nations along Pacific Ocean coastlines, Toledano announced. A Mexico City announcement said plans for the conference had been urged by the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union.

Invitations have been extended to the ILWU, Latin west coast countries, Australia, New Zealand, China, Japan, Korea, Soviet Union, Indo-China and Indonesia.

The parley has been called to "study economic problems and working conditions"

Telephone Workers To Sign Taft-Hartley Affidavits

OFFICERS and board members of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee decided last week to file "non-communist" affidavits with the National Labor Relations Board.

Action was taken at a board meeting in the Hotel Willard in Washington on Oct. 30, and the announcement was made by Allan S. Haywood, directing chairman of the TWOC. Haywood said that neither he nor Sec-Treas. Ted F. Silvey are constitutional officers of the committee, and hence will not sign the affidavits at this time.

The TWOC stated that it was announcing its intention to file the affidavits "for the information of telephone workers throughout the nation." The American Union of Telephone Workers, one of its affiliates, now has several pending before the Board.

"The TWOC will join with other national and international unions in the CIO, and with all organized labor, in fighting for the repeal of the oppressive and unjust Taft-Hartley act, and will do so in the traditional American methods of education and political activity," the statement said.

Haywood told a press conference that the TWOC has a membership of about 51,000, the bulk of it in the Association of Communications Equipment Workers, the American Union of Telephone Workers longlines, and a group in western Pennsylvania.

Several other groups appear ready to join TWOC in the near future, he said. He named specifically the United Telephone Employes of Oregon, the Traffic Union of Maryland, and the Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois.

Haywood revealed that the TWOC would call a wage conference early next year. In reply to a reporter's question, he said the "telephone workers certainly shall have to have a wage increase regardless of Congressional action on the price situation. He said phone workers' income has lagged behind other groups.

The Washington board meeting was scene of the formal affiliation of the Associations of Communications Equipment Workers to TWOC. Pres. Ernest Weaver and 3rd Vice-Pres. Norman Wolf were seated as ACEW representatives on the Board.

Weaver and John J. Moran of the AUTW are vice-chairmen of the Organizing Committee.

MARY POLANOWSKI

Unionist Crowned 'Career Girl'

BLONDE, blue-eyed Mary Polanowski, who is 5 ft., 3 ins., weighs 109 pounds, resembles June Allyson of the movies and is recording secretary of the Wilkes-Barre Local of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has been chosen "Miss Career Girl of 1947," by none other than Harry Conover, the model tycoon.

Miss Polanowski was selected from among 10 finalists at the Wyoming Valley Parade of Progress, a full-scale industrial and commercial exposition staged in Wilkes-Barre by the Wyoming Valley Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Born in Wilkes-Barre, she attended local public schools, and started working after school at the age of 14. She is presently employed as a Secretary in the advertising department of the Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader-Evening News. She enjoys writing and hopes to establish a career in that field. She has also shown an unusual flair for radio.

While in New York City at the Conover Career Girl School, she has appeared on the following radio programs: "Luncheon at Sardi's" — "The Margaret Arlan Program," and "The Jinx and Tex" Program. She was guest at a special luncheon at the Stork Club, in company with Margaret Kilgallen, Betty Crocker, Lily Dache, Margaret Arlen, Jinx Falkenburg, Connie Bannister, Tani Hunt, Jean Press, and Candy Jones, all outstanding New York "Career Girls."

She attended the United Nations in company with Alvaro Perez, columnist for 20 leading South American papers, and has been interviewed for a screen test. During her Good-Will tour, November 3-15, she will carry the greetings of the people of Wilkes-Barre and Wyoming Valley to the people of Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Buffalo.

Her fellow Guildsmen believe that the residents of these cities will say: "Conover sure can pick 'em."

Delay Talks With French

UNWILLINGNESS of the State Dept. and the Attorney General to allow two leading members of the French Confederation of Labor (the CGT) into the U. S. for more than two days has brought postponement of a meeting with CIO leaders.

The sessions of the French-American Labor Committee, originally scheduled in New York Oct. 28-29, will be held in Paris late in November after a meeting of the executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

State Dept. refusal to issue visas to two of the four French delegates—Pierre LeBrun and Henri Reynaud—was based on charges that they are Communists. Under a 1918 law, visas may not be issued to foreign Communists.

AFTER CIO protests that the two men presumably would not overthrow the American government during their short visit to the U. S., Atty.-Gen. Tom Clark agreed to issue a waiver and allow the men to enter this country. When the two French labor leaders found they could spend only two days here—and those only in the New York City area—they refused to make the trip.

A statement on the subject was issued later by Michael Ross, international affairs director for CIO, and Leon Jouhaux and George De La Marre, two other members of the French labor delegation who were already in this country. Jouhaux is a member of the French delegation at the UN.

ALL voiced "protest against this infringement of individual liberty and of trade union liberty" and announced the decision to hold the meetings in Paris.

Scheduled as CIO representatives at the New York meeting were Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and five CIO vice-presidents—Frank Rosenblum, Emil Rieve, Walter Reuther, Albert J. Fitzgerald, and Joseph Curran.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The Utility Workers of America held their Second Constitutional Convention last week in Buffalo, N. Y. A delegation of approximately 300 attended. The report showed a considerable increase in membership of this organization and sound finances.

A group of independent unions met with the officers of this organization and the writer, and they have declared their intention of affiliation with CIO. Plans are being worked out now and this decision is expected to affect favorably many thousands more workers. The decision of this group is based on the recognition that the utility workers of the nation must get together in one organization by and for the utility workers.

With the vicious onslaught now being made upon labor, independent unions are more vulnerable for attack.

The Executive Board of the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers, San Francisco, by a vote of 12 to 3 decided to recommend to their membership affiliation with Telephone Workers Organizing Committee—CIO. The three dissenters voted either to remain independent or in CWA.

A campaign is under way now following this decision, and Brother Murphy, the head of this organization, is leading this campaign. The Telephone Workers Organizing Committee now represents per capita tax payers in excess of 50,000 members, and others, including a group in Maryland, are now voting for affiliation. The columns of the CWA publication continue to vomit false claims to little or no effect.

Following the CIO convention recently held in Boston, Mass., increasing sentiment favoring our movement is growing through the nation. The high plane which the Convention attained and maintained is evidenced everywhere. Commendations from many sources are pouring in.

CIO and affiliated organizations must trim their sails to intensify organization as the most important task, and to intensify our activities in the political arena. Our people are aroused and determined to answer in a constitutional manner the unjust and vicious attacks on labor. Every opportunity to organize and to activize must be taken to make the CIO strong and buttress the democratic processes that are dear to every American.

Durkin on Board

Due to a typographical error the CIO News last week omitted the name of James H. Durkin, president of the CIO Office Workers, in listing members of the CIO executive board.

"Isn't She a Beaut?": That seems to be the general attitude of CIO Vice-President and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood who is opening the door of the Studebaker sedan presented to him at the CIO convention. The car was the gift of CIO regional directors and their staffs and of some international representatives of CIO unions. Looking on are, left to right, Adolph Germer, Haywood's assistant; Michael Mann, CIO Regional Director, Illinois; Francis Carmichael, CIO Regional Director, Massachusetts; CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Haywood, and CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

TAX RELIEF FOR HER

THE TWO persons pictured on this page would receive completely opposite treatment under the tax "reduction" plan offered to the 80th Congress.

On your right is Princess Barbara Hutton—Mdivani—Haugwitz-Reventlow — Grant — Troubetzkoy, "poor little rich girl" who inherited scads of 5 and 10-cent store money.

Babs has had three different titles from her four husbands. How much income she gets from her inheritance, we don't know.

Just below this is a typical American worker—we'll call him Joe Doakes. As an average worker, he's probably had only one wife, two kids and not a single title. He makes an average of $48.62 a week in take-home pay.

We picked these two pictures for contrast because of a new tax "reduction" plan—the last two were vetoed by Pres. Truman and the Congress upheld him. This one, just out, is from the House Ways and Means Citizen's Tax Advisory Committee. More detailed information on this appears on Page 3 of the CIO News.

This committee report is signed by nine committee members—and sharply denounced by the 10th, AFL Vice President Matthew Woll.

Here's what labor leaders say this "tax reduction" does for Babs—and doesn't do for Joe Doakes:

Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director: "Committee paid only lip service to 46,000,000 taxpayers whose net income is less than $5,000 . . . it gives tax relief to corporations and high-income individuals . . . it was exactly what was to be expected."

Woll: "Shifts the tax load from those more able to those less able to bear the burden."

'RIGHTS' REPORT IRKS D. C. GROUP

AS was to be expected, there were a number of attacks on the report of Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee.

Typical was that of the Federation of Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia, which passed—with one dissenting voice—a resolution condemning the report for its c r i t i c i s m of Washington.

The group declared that the major portions of the report dealt with the District (actually only a small portion dealt with it).

It declared that not a single member of the committee resided in Washington (actually, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, a member of the committee, has been a resident of the Washington area for 11 years; another member, Mrs. Sadie Alexander, attended public schools in the D. C., having been graduated from the old M st. High School; a third member of the committee, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., had family connections in Washington for more than 13 years; another member, Bishop Francis Haas, was stationed in Washington for a number of years as an official of the Nat'l. Catholic Welfare Conference.)

The federation was ardent in defense of the District's "accepted and traditional customs." Its retiring president made a defense of segregation.

Having adopted the resolution, the federation proceeded to refuse to seat a woman delegate on the basis some one said her "loyalty" was under question. Federation officers said an investigation would be made later.

THE following day, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, which is sponsoring a public speaking contest called the Voice of Democracy, announced it was unable to hold its finals in Washington schools. The reason: three Negroes were in the finals along with eight whites.

The Chamber said the D. C. Board of Education had informed it that the contest would be "contrary to Washington custom and practice." The chamber secured the All Souls Unitarian Church for the finals.

The contestants must deliver speeches based on the Bills of Rights of the American Constitution.

THE CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination announced it was preparing for distribution among unions and other organizations material to promote the ideals of the President's report.

The material will include, according to George L-P Weaver, director of the committee, film strips with sound, a series of posters, pamphlets, discussion kits, cartoons, features stories for labor and other papers, etc.

Weaver also announced that his committee is obtaining 10,000 copies of the Civil Rights Report. The method of distribution of the copies will be announced later.

Several Congressmen prepared bills to carry out the committee's recommendations.

David Lawrence's U. S. News, commenting on the Truman committee report, remarked:

"Recommendation of Mr. Wilson (Charles E. Wilson, Gen'l. Electric head, who chairmaned the committee) and his associates are drawing increasing support, as the dangers of extreme action are being pointed out."

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

November 3, 1947

Dear Mr. Carey:

The report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights is an important document, and I am confident that it will take its place among the great papers on Freedom.

Let me thank you with heartfelt appreciation for your service on this Committee, and for your share in the preparation of its report.

Very sincerely yours,

Harry Truman

From White House: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey last week received this letter from President Truman thanking him for his part in preparing the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. A complete summary of the report was published in the November 3 issue of The CIO NEWS. The CIO will issue pamphlets on the report.

State Dept. Firings Likened To 'Police State' Tactics

● Mr. X began working for the U. S. Government in February, 1942.

● Mr. X worked successively for the OPA, the WPB, the Foreign Economic Administration and the State Dept.

● Mr. X and his wife were visited in April, 1947, by the two agents. They asked the names of friends and their activities. Then, they showed the picture to the wife.

● Mr. X on June 23, 1947, was "severed" —fired—by the State Dept., which gave him not a single reason for the action.

Those blunt, stark basic facts were revealed last week in a case history of one of the 10 State Dept. firings of last summer. The case history was the exclusive "beat" of Bert Andrews, New York Herald Tribune correspondent, who said he omitted the victim's name because the victim feared "reprisals."

Andrews' revelations shocked even the most cynical of Washington observers, as did the State Dept.'s unequivocal refusal of an appeal from counsel for seven of the dismissed persons. The counsel are Thurman Arnold, former assistant attorney general and federal judge, who has been handling employer cases before the NLRB; Abe Fortas, former Undersecretary of the Interior, and Paul A. Porter, former OPA administrator. The three are law partners.

Typical of the reaction to the State Dept. action was that of the Philadelphia Inquirer, spokesman for the Republican party in Pennsylvania—"These fired employes might be absolutely innocent. State Dept. security; Government security, are important. Of greater importance is the security of sacred rights granted in our Constitution. Those cases should be reopened forthwith—and dealt with in the American way."

Andrews' article, which ran for nearly 10 columns in the Herald Tribune, listed these steps taken by this "Mr. X" after dismissal.

(a) Mr. X received a "hearing" (the quotation marks are Andrews') in July, 1947, before four State Dept. superiors. He was told it was not an appeal, that his case was closed. But, he was informed the law did not bar him from employment by some other government agency. (Andrews found from other sources that Mr. X had been fired as a bad security risk; he was not accused of disloyalty.)

(b) Mr. X denies he is a Communist; he says his only association with any agent of a foreign power was in the natural course of his work for the department.

(c) In an effort to obtain a hearing and learn just what were the charges against him, Mr. X offered to send additional information. The answer was "go ahead—we'll slap it in the file."

(d) To keep his reputation clear, he asked the right to resign; it was refused.

Andrews, who declared his major facts are undisputed —and by late last week no one had disputed them—said these were his source materials:

1. Mr. X's affidavit, given to persons interested in the case.
2. The transcript of the "hearing" listed in (a).
3. Another affidavit from Mr. X.
4. A paragraph from State Dept.'s official letter to associate of Mr. X.

Arnold, Fortas & Porter made public their letter to Marshall, after Acting Secretary of State Robert A. Lovett had refused their appeal.

The letter charged "unfairness and Un-Americanism" in the department's procedure followed in respect to dismissed persons, who were never told why they were fired.

Then, they declared: "In fact, the procedure is tragically analogous to the tactics employed in the police states dominated by Communists and Fascists and has no place in the American system, where standards of civil liberties, fair play and the inalienable principles of the Bill of Rights are the privilege of the humblest without regard to race, color or creed."

The letter reminded the Secretary that the Government was sponsoring the Freedom Train, on which "there is under guard the priceless documents which includes our cherished Bill of Rights. The guard is there, presumably, to prevent its physical defacement. But, in the cases of the individuals we represent, its meaning and spirit have been summarily defamed."

Lovett, in reply, said that the case was closed as far as the State Dept. was concerned (he claimed his decision was made under the McCarren rider to the 1947 department appropriations bill), but that the discharged men had the right to appeal to the Civil Service Commission on their eligibility to work—for any other Government agency.

Following that, it was announced that the case had been brought to the attention of Pres. Truman by Harold B. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission. Mitchell revealed that Truman had approved 18 nominations for membership on the Loyalty Review Board for Federal employes, which will pass on the results of investigations of the loyalty of government workers.

Then, Arnold, Fortas & Porter sent another letter to Lovett. It pointed out that "the department has told prospective employers, one of them a university, that it has a reasonable doubt that these men are good security risks.

"The publication of such accusations against members of the staff without specifications and accompanied by the statement that evidence will be withheld is unprecedented. It is idle to say these accusations are not an attack on the character of these individuals.

"We had not thought it was the duty of the department to pursue such men into private life with unproved accusations. But, if indeed the department has such a responsibility, the least protection which should be given is to give the accused individual opportunity to defend himself against these accusations and to be confronted with the witnesses who make them.

"We are not asking you to continue these men on your staff. We are only asking that they be given a hearing in an American way or else that they be permitted to resign."

★ ★ ★

Finally, last week, Marshall announced the department was standing pat on the issue.

He said the papers that cost the men their jobs were the secrets of other agencies of the government. "For this reason," he said, "the department determined that it could not give the employes a full statement of charges. Without charges, a true hearing was impossible."

When it can, he said, the department will give people written notice.

The final hope for Mr. X and the others now seems to be an appeal to the Loyalty Board.

"The purpose of such an appeal," Marshall said, "will be to permit the employe affirmatively to establish his loyalty."

'LIP SERVICE' TO THE NEEDY

NINE of the 10 members of the House Ways and Means Citizens' Tax Advisory Committee last week came forth with a plan which they said should:

(a) Reduce all personal income taxes; (b) make 40 other changes in the revenue code; (c) permit husbands and wives to halve their combined income in filing returns.

The report made no recommendation as to the manner to be used in reducing income taxes, not stating whether it should be done by percentage reductions in rates, higher personal exemptions or in some other fashion.

But, it declared that the reduction should apply to all "with due regard for the cost of living of those in the low income groups and for the needs of the balance of the country."

The report was sharply assailed by the 10th member of the committee, Matthew Woll, vice president of the AFL, and by Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director.

Woll declared the report "shifted the tax load from those more able to those less able to bear the burden."

Cowan said the plan "gives only lip service to the low-income people who are most vitally in need of tax relief."

The committee was appointed in June by Ways and Means Chairman Harold Knutson (R., Minn.). The chairman is Roswell Magill, former undersecretary of the Treasury. Cowan continued:

"THE report ran true to form. It was exactly what was to be expected from a 10-man committee which has nine members representing business interests, Wall St. and the railroads.

"The CIO testified before Ways and Means on July 10, 1947, shortly after the appointment of this committee. We said then that the membership of the group was carefully selected so as to produce tax recommendations that were in complete agreement with the views of Mr. Knutson and the majority of the House Ways and Means Committee.

"Mr. Magill and cohorts lived up to expectation. They came through with 46 structural tax changes, most all of which give tax relief to corporations and high income individuals. They paid only lip service to the interests of the 46,000,000 taxpayers whose net income is less than $5,000 a year. These 46,000,000 taxpayers constitute 96% of our income recipients, yet the only recommendation in the report affecting this group is that individual income taxes should be reduced 'with due regard for the cost of living of those in the lower income groups and for the individuals of the balance of the economy.'

"The committee made no specific recommendations on how individual income taxes should be reduced. Mr. Magill, who probably cannot number among his tax clients a single individual earning less than $5,000 a year, has expressed his opposition on many previous occasions to increasing personal exemptions, which is the most basic way to give tax relief to the needy.

"It is no wonder that the report of this Citizens Tax Advisory Committee advocates tax relief for the high-income individuals and for corporations and gives only lip service to the low-income people who are most vitally in need of tax relief."

HERE ARE the backgrounds and tax-thinking of the 10 members of the House Advisory Committee:

Chairman Roswell Foster Magill: law prof., Columbia U.; member legal firm Cravath, Swaine & Moore; former Undersecretary of Treasury; thinks "present tax rates tend to restrict and impede

Tough Road Ahead But

PAC SCORES MAJOR VICTORIES IN KY., IND.

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

LAST week's elections included a lot of things. They saw the end of an experiment in minority representation in the nation's largest city.

They saw the labor-backed Democratic Party stage a smashing comeback in Kentucky and Indiana.

But above all, last week's elections showed that (a) hard, down-to-earth work by PAC can bring results and (b) there's still a lot of hard, down-to-earth work to be done between now and November, 1948.

The major election results can be classified this way:

Major PAC Victories

Kentucky: The GOP cluttered the state with posters depicting the CIO-PAC as handcuffs on the Blue Grass residents. Kentuckians, good judges of horses, bourbon and politics, didn't fall for that. Result: The Democratic Party returned to the governorship by a majority as great as in the old days.

Indiana: Democratic and PAC workers didn't sit around "dreaming about the moonlight on Wabash." They got out and worked and worked and worked. Net result: Democrats won the mayorships in more than half the state's cities, including Indianapolis.

Mississippi: The people had had enough; they were sick and tired of the libel against the Southern people perpetrated for years in the U. S. Senate by Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.) and in the House by Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.). So, in an election to pick a successor to the late Bilbo, Rankin wound up a bad fifth. The winner: an unglamorous, soft-spoken judge.

Reverses for PAC

New York City: The voters ignored the pleas of such groups as PAC and such newspapers as the Herald Tribune and routed Proportional Representation by nearly 2 to 1. The margin of repeal, 349,721, was ironically almost identical with the margin by which PR was approved in 1936—367,769.

San Francisco: Golden Gaters were so intent on saving their beloved cable cars that they allowed a conservative Republican, Superior Judge Elmer E. Robinson, to nose out labor-backed U. S. Rep. Franck R. Havenner (D., Calif.) for mayor.

The bright side of the picture: Observers, noting S. F. has continually elected conservative mayors, believed the newly-formed Joint Labor Committee was well-established. (Note to tourists: S.F. voters overwhelmingly defeated a move, backed by incumbent Mayor Roger Lapham, to eliminate the famous cable cars.)

Detroit: While George Edwards (UAW) and Charles Edgecomb (UAW) were reelected, other candidates indorsed by the Wayne County CIO Council were beaten. They included Mayor Edward J. Jeffries (he was opposed by CIO in his last two tries, got a qualified OK this time), Stanley Novak, Rev. Charles A. Hill and Tracy Doll.

Moral Victory

Indiana 10th District: Here, PAC-backed Democrat Frank Hanley reduced the GOP majority from 24,000 to 10,000, losing 53,000 to 43,000 to Republican Ralph Harvey in a special Congressional election. In 1946, the late Rep. Raymond Springer carried the traditionally GOP districts, 70,969 to 44,807. All CIO unions campaigned actively for Hanley.

No PAC Stand

Philadelphia: Quaker City voters apparently decided they didn't mind the "corrupt, but contented" label tied onto their city by the rest of the Nation. Apparently, they also decided they could keep on drinking the city-supplied water which is the subject of many an off-color wisecrack.

Reelected was Mayor Bernard ("I'm a South Philly boy") Samuel, heir to the heritage of gang bosses Penrose, McNichol and Vare.

Defeated was handsome Richardson Dilworth, socialite attorney and Marine hero-veteran of two wars.

Around the Nation

As Jack Kroll, national PAC director, put it:

"The results mark a definite swing back to progressive government. It is a warning from American voters that the people expect Congress to act swiftly to end rising prices and profiteering through restoration of some form of price controls.

"It is an indication that the American people expect quick action from Congress on an equitable tax program with real relief for low-income families, a full-scale housing program and legislation to implement the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights."

The results in Kentucky and Indiana had the soothsayers babbling with excitement and induced GOP Nat'l chairman Brazilla Carroll Reece to hand out triple-talk instead of his customary double-talk.

Says he: "Naturally we would have been delighted if we had been able to retain the governorship of Kentucky, which we won in a photo finish in 1943, at a time when the Democrats were enjoying one of their typical family rows."

"But"—and get this, boys—babbled on B. Carroll, "the cold facts are that the Democratic reg-

Textile Workers End Dixie Differential

THE North-South wage differential in organized textile mills last week became a thing of the past.

The regional difference in pay, which as recently as last year meant an hourly wage of 55 to 65 cents for Southern textile workers compared with a Northern minimum of 80 cents, has long been a source of severe irritation to the CIO Textile Workers.

Today, as a result of region-wide settlements which narrowly headed off a strike set for last Thursday, Southern textile employes are on a par with their Northern brothers. The new Southern minimum jumped to 87 cents an hour. Northern minimums range from 85 to 95 cents an hour.

PATTERN for the mass agreements was set by the Dan River Co., Danville, Va., largest textile mills in the world, which became the first to agree to a 9% pay boost. By 5 A. M. of the strike date, according to George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the international union, the last chain of mills had fallen into line—the six Cone mills in Greensboro, N. C. The 5,000 employes in these mills now have an average wage of $1.11.

The uniform settlement affects 25,000 members of the CIO union and will ultimately affect an estimated 500,000 Southern textile employes, Baldanzi said. As union mills began winning the raise, unorganized mills rushed to provide a similar increase in an effort to stifle organizing efforts. Notable among the non-union concerns which granted the 9% hike was the American Thread Co., Dalton, Ga.

PURCHASING power of CIO Textile Workers will be increased by $19 million a year, the union stated. It estimated that the total yearly wage gain for both organized and unorganized Southern workers would run up to $110 million.

Earlier this year the union had won a 10% increase in the South. The new 9% boost equals this earlier increase in terms of dollars and cents, since the latter percentage is computed on a higher wage.

Almost all the new agreements include a "no-penalty" clause which prohibits the employer from filing damage suits under the Taft-Hartley Act for "wildcat" strikes.

Among the mill chains which are affected by the new pattern are: the Lowenstein chain, in the North, and South Carolina and Alabama, which employs about 6,000; the Erwin mills in North Carolina, employing 3,000; and the Marshall Field interests in Leeksville, Draper and Spray, N. C., with nine mills employing 5,000.

MERELY LIP SERVICE

We've always been of the opinion that you can't expect to get the breaks when the odds are nine to one against you.

That's why we weren't bowled over by the report of the Ways and Means Citizens Advisory Tax Committee. Nine of the committee members think along "big business" lines. The tenth represents labor.

The report was just about what we expected it would be—but that doesn't keep us from pointing out that it's pretty bad, from labor's point of view.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan E. Cowan stated the situation simply when he said the committee "paid only lip service" to persons earning less than $5,000 a year.

We don't have to use higher mathematics to figure out that the tax relief proposed by the committee is intended largely for 4 per cent of the people.

We don't need any statistics to convince us that most of those in the 4-per-cent group are doing fairly well for themselves, despite the high cost of living.

We're against the recommendations simply because they would do so much for those who don't need help and so little for those who do.

$9.60 WEEKLY GUARANTEED

Congress would have been ridiculed back in 1938 if it had passed a law which would eventually guarantee a minimum wage of $9.60 a week.

Yet the minimum wage law passed in 1938 does exactly that in terms of today's purchasing power.

Here's how it works:

The law sets a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour. Today 40 cents will buy only as much as 24 cents bought back in 1939. So the $16 guaranteed wage actually has shrunk to $9.60.

That should explain why the CIO so strongly favors increasing the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour.

The minimum would have to be boosted to 66 cents an hour for us to keep abreast of 1939 conditions, which weren't too good.

We believe 75 would be most reasonable—especially in view of the fat profits industry is piling up.

STINK BOMB AFFAIR

Stink bombs were used during an attempt to break up a Progressive Citizens of America-sponsored rally at Philadelphia's Independence Square.

Those responsible violated one of the basic rights guaranteed by our Constitution—the right of freedom of speech.

They did as much to undermine democracy as could have been done by any speaker at any rally.

Those who think they can preserve freedom for themselves by destroying the freedom of others are stupid.

(And we would have written the same editorial as this had the Philadelphia rally been sponsored by Gerald K. Smith,, the Daughters of the American Revolution or the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.)

Witch Hunting and Name Calling Are Expensive Luxuries the U. S. Can't Afford

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S TIME for hysterical witch hunting and name calling to stop.

Both are dirty, unsportsmanlike pastimes. Both are practiced by unreasonable men and women who substitute loud noise for sound judgment.

Those who express liberal viewpoints are too often called "damn Commies." Those who express conservative viewpoints are too often called "dirty Fascists."

And those who sit on the sidelines and listen become more confused or more nauseated as the farce goes on.

THE RECENT "investigation" of the movie industry was a disgrace — and the House Un-American Activities Committee should be soundly condemned for its actions.

The condemnation should be aimed at the tactics used by the Committee—not at the fact that a committee named by Congress decided to investigate an industry.

No group—judicial or legislative—should be permitted to serve as prosecutor, judge, jury and executioner. The Un-American Activities Committee assumed all of these roles.

No person should be required to testify about his own beliefs or acts unless given an ample opportunity to confront and cross-question those making accusations.

SOME OF THE nation's newspapers recently told an interesting — and disgusting — story about the discharge of a State Department employe.

He was fired for "security" reasons. Perhaps he should have been discharged. Perhaps the Department should be commended for getting rid of him.

But the man should have been told why he was fired. He should have been given a chance to question those who made charges against him. He should not have been declared guilty without having an opportunity to present his side of the case.

For all practical purposes, he has been branded a "disloyal" person. His economic future has been seriously endangered.

The State Department, which is attempting to establish democracy and civil rights abroad, cannot afford to indulge in such behavior at home.

SOME OF THE country's extreme right-wingers see a Communist under every bed—and too many of the extreme left-wingers see Fascists behind every move designed to block their pet projects.

One group is as bad as the other when it comes to name calling. And, curiously, each group wins converts for the other.

Right now the extreme rightists are in the saddle and are trying to run rough-shod over all who get in their way. Under the guise of patriotism or of "preserving the American way" they frequently violate the basic principles of Americanism and smear with their "red" brushes all who oppose them.

Some of them behave as though they had never heard of civil rights.

MANY PERSONS are becoming afraid to open their mouths and say what they really think. They're afraid some governmental agency will start probing into their private affairs or that they'll find their reputations have been irreparably smeared.

Movie moguls were strangely silent when they should have let the Un-American Activities Committeee have it with both barrels because of the indirect censorship of their industry by the Committee.

Some governmental employes are so afraid of what may happen to them and their jobs that they figuratively or literally look over their shoulders to see who's listening before expressing opinions on subjects that might be considered "too controversial."

It's an unhealthy situation.

GOVERNMENTAL agencies certainly have a right to discharge employes found guilty of treasonable or unpatriotic acts.

Congressional committees certainly have a right to probe into activities which appear to be detrimental to the public welfare.

Private citizens certainly have a right to express open criticism of the things they dislike and to brand as Communists those who are Communists and as Fascists those who are Fascists.

This is not intended as criticism of those who punish the guilty, those who seek to get at the facts or those who call things and persons by their correct names.

It is intended as criticism of those who harm the innocent, those who ignore the right to a full hearing and those who engage in indiscriminate name calling.

"LET'S MAKE THE SPECIAL SESSION ESPECIALLY GOOD - FOR US, EH CONGRESSMAN?"

Plan Year - Round Aid To Handicapped

Plans for a year-round program to obtain suitable employment for the physically handicapped were launched last week in Washington by a committee composed of some 100 representatives of labor, press and radio, professional and other national organizations called together by Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach.

The group was composed of members of the President's Committee on National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week which held a preliminary organization meeting prior to the observance of NEPH Week, Oct. 5-11.

John Brophy, director of Industrial Union Councils, attended the meeting, representing CIO President Philip Murray, who is a member of the President's Committee. Other CIO representatives on the committee include President Jacob Potofsky, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; President O. A. Knight, Oil Workers; President Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; President Walter Reuther, Auto Workers; and President L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers.

President Truman told the committee of his great interest in the development of a continuing program to spur employment of the handicapped.

They Didn't Like What 'Boss' Said

IT WAS New Year's Eve and the faithful gathered at the railway station to pay homage to their political boss.

He stood on the back platform of the train and beamed at his followers. Then he made one of the shortest inauguration speeches on record.

He said his one official act as mayor would be to rescind the invitation of his predecessor to a certain CIO union to hold its annual convention in "his" city.

Then he resigned, leaving the way open for one of his colleagues to come home from Congress and be appointed mayor.

THAT "ONE official act" lighted a spark that caused indignation to begin burning in a group of men who didn't like the way their union had been insulted.

The indignation was translated later into action that helped build a strong CIO movement in a city whose officials said they wouldn't tolerate the CIO.

The "insulted" union held its annual convention as planned—but without official welcome from city officials.

And the lives of four men were changed greatly by what had happened.

ONE OF THE four served as president of his local union, put in a stretch in the Navy and is now president of one of the international CIO unions.

One became a vice president of the same international union, went to work for the CIO and is now one of the best organizers and negotiators in the South.

The third became a public relations man and is now editor of a labor union newspaper.

The fourth, after completing his military service, became a CIO organizer and is now a CIO joint-board manager.

THE FOUR MEN fought many battles together.

All served on the same contract committee for several years.

All served as delegates to the same city Industrial Union Council — and one of them was head of the Council several years.

All served as local delegates to annual conventions of their international union.

All fought political candidates backed by the political boss.

MORE THAN seven years have passed since that night at the railway station. The political boss is still at the same old stand—but today he and his followers make no more remarks about "running the CIO out of town."

CIO members in "his" town no longer fear fierce beatings like those handed out in the early days. They have a solid organization and they know it.

THE MEN involved in this story?

The "boss" is Ed Crump, who runs politics in Memphis and throughout Tennessee.

The international union president is Harry Martin, new head of the American Newspaper Guild.

Pick Essay Winners

Essays of the two high school seniors who won the contest held by the Natl. Religion & Labor Foundation on "The Contribution of Trade Unions to Democracy," are printed in the NRLF's October bulletin, "Economic Justice."

The winners, Alison Davis of East Williston, N. Y., and Donnell Dean of Spartanburg, S. C., say some thoughtful and mature things in their essays, according to NRLF.

New Jersey Plant Owner Tells Rep. Hartley Where To Head In

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

Ever hear an employe talk like this!

"Court decisions won't keep workers, with real or fancied gripes, on the job. They will slow down; output will sag.

"Confidence between employer and union is impossible with threat of a suit lurking in the air.

"One fanatical, union-busting employer could sue constantly and jeopardize labor relations in a whole industry."

These arguments against one of the major provisions of the Taft-Hartley law, giving companies the right to sue unions, are those of Peter Fiory, head of the Textile Finishing Co., Paterson, N. J., and several other concerns. He advanced them in a debate with Rep. Fred A. Hartley, Jr., co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, on the subject: "Should Management Waive Its Right to Sue Unions?"

The debate is printed in an issue of Modern Industry, magazine for management. Here are some of the points Fiory makes:

- "As an employer, I am primarily interested in achieving production. I know that production records are made in the plant, and not in any court of law."
- "An employer, who seeks relief in the courts and not at the bargaining table, closes the door to a permanent cure of the causes of interruptions in production."
- "A union's full cooperation and wholehearted support must be obtained before an employer can successfully remedy or remove the reasons for costly work stoppages which may occur during the term of a contract. Unions in most cases are as anxious as employers to eliminate these stoppages."
- "Unions are here to stay. Unions have become an integral part of the American system of free enterprise."
- "The very broad right to sue unions under the Taft-Hartley Act affords . . . anti-union employers ample opportunity to harass the union continuously and seriously deplete its treasury."
- "The accomplishments which management and labor have achieved working together in the conference room these past years will be destroyed by employers not relinquishing the threat of suit. By waiving the right to sue, employers are again evidencing their good faith. With this threat removed, unions can be expected to continue to work with employers in a harmonious and peaceful fashion."

Denham's 4 M's

Address by Robt. N. Denham, NLRB general Counsel, before Natl. Metal Trades Association convention:

"I have always looked upon the structure of our Nation's industrial economy as one made up of what I choose to call the 4 M's:

"Money is an essential part of it; Management you cannot get along without; Machinery you must have if you are going to produce; but all three of these would be utterly valueless from a productive standpoint if there were not Men to do the work. No one of these four factors is any more important than the other."

Blimey, No!

The English government wants no part of a suggested Committee of the House of Commons on Un-British Activities, and apparently would just as soon see the U. S. maintain a monopoly on witch-hunts.

Suggestions for establishment of a British model of the current Thomas-Rankin group were brought up in the House by Sir Waldron Smithers, a Conservative from Orpington.

Herbert Morrison, Labor leader and Lord President of the Council, gave him a quick reply, according to accounts published in the London Daily Herald. His reply to the Smithers suggestion: "No, sir."

"The political parties can take care of the Communists," Morrison told Commons. "We are not afraid of them, and I don't see why Sir Waldron should be, or why he should exclude other subversive interests."

Pays To Advertise

The second of a series of large display ads inserted in 39 Wisconsin weekly papers with circulation in rural areas and placed by the Wisconsin State CIO, appeared last week.

The ad asks the question as to "How Can We Fight Monopolies?" and proceeds to point out that monopolies not only hold up prices but fight those who would lower them.

The ad cites the case of a wholesale meat co-op killed off because the packers threatened that if its retail store customers continued to buy beef and pork from the co-op packer, they would be cut off from purchases of sausage or poultry from the big packers.

ACCIDENT CHANCES ARE 1 IN 28, SO, OBEY PRECAUTIONS

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IF you are a worker, the chances are one in 28 that you'll be injured or killed on the job within a year.

And what's more, the chances are very high that it will be your own or a fellow worker's fault.

That, in essence, is what the National Safety Council in its 1947 edition of "Accident Facts" has to say on the subject of industrial accidents.

Last year, 16,500 workers were killed on the job; an additional 2,050,000 suffered disabling injuries. There's no way of computing the loss in terms of suffering by the bereaved or pain of the injured; but in dollars and cents terms it meant a loss of $1,100,000,000 to workers and industry, and in terms of productive time it meant about 280,000,000 man-days lost.

SADDEST factor in the story is that most of the accidents could have been avoided by simple precautionary measures. About one-fourth of the injuries are caused by careless handling of materials, tools and other equipment; one-fifth are caused by falls. Deaths occurred principally because of vehicles and falling objects.

"Often it's just a case of poor housekeeping in the plant," commented a spokesman for the U. S. Bureau of Labor Standards. "Take the case of J. B., who last February stepped on a pipe nipple in the plant, fell and gashed his head on a lathe frame. That was a matter of bad housekeeping. Neither the pipe nipple nor any other object should have been on the floor where they could be stepped on."

Feet, toes and legs take the biggest beating in industry, accounting for 26% of the compensated cases. Failure to wear safety shoes with steel toes was mostly responsible in such instances.

"One of our biggest problems," our Bureau of Labor Standards informant tells us, "is getting workers to wear safety shoes to work instead of 'Sunday shoes.' They don't cost any more, and recently shoe manufacturers have begun making them so that they don't look different than 'Sunday shoes.'"

LIFTING, carrying, moving or placing various materials is one of the leading sources of industrial injuries. These included such unsafe activities as lifting with bent back, lifting while standing in an awkward position or lifting with sudden motion. Placing hands in pinch points when setting materials down or using feet to block rolling materials were equally important factors.

Disabling eye injuries occur most frequently in mining foundry operations, and lumbering. Companies that had no plan to encourage or require workers to wear goggles suffered higher rates of injury to eyes than others.

There is the case, for instance, of C. C., a machinist, who removed his goggles in order to see better as he was grinding a chisel on a bench grinder. Steel particles lodged in his eye, resulting in injury. If he removed them because they kept getting foggy, he should have used anti-fogging solution. If his eyesight was poor, he should have had prescription-ground goggles.

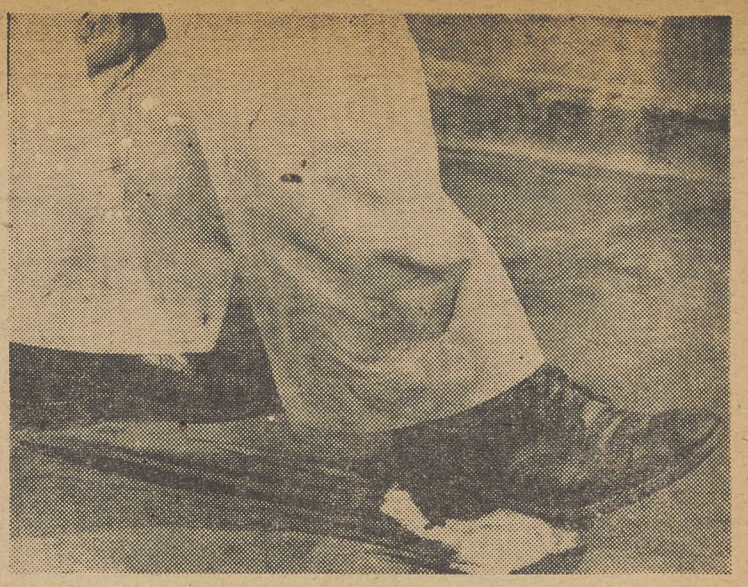
CHIEF causes of occupational accidents, according to the National Safety Council, are:

Handling objects	25%
Falls	19%
Falling objects	11%
Machinery	9%
Plant vehicles	8%
Hand tools	8%
Others	20%

Overwork, too, contributed to the number of casualties. Studies by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics show that work injuries increase with the number of hours worked. One plant had a disabling injury rate of 8.1 at 40 hours and a rate of 19.2 at 54 hours despite a good safety program.

Often, of course, accidents result from faulty equipment or unsafe design; that's the boss's fault, although a good union can see that that's corrected. But it's not the boss's fault when the worker has failed to wear gloves or other safety clothing, pulls trucks that should be pushed, or fails to label a hot casting "hot" before another worker unknowingly picks it up.

It's the worker's fault when he hasn't taken every precautionary measure possible to safeguard his own and his fellow workers' lives.



Bad Housekeeping: That's what industrial accidents authorities call this. Neither waste such as this nor any other object should have been on the floor where a worker could trip or slip on it.

Poor Grip: Accidents like the one above comprise a large part of the total number each year: Below: Falling objects, usually due to careless handling, account for 18% of the deaths due to industrial accidents.

CHILD LABOR TRAGEDY

Terry Lost His Hand And Interest in Art

IT is 2 a.m., and a 9-year-old hurries to the waterfront to meet her playmates—not to play, but to work.

Together, they await arrival of the shrimp boats. The fleet pulls in. The children go to work. They receive 15 cents for each bucket or pan they fill with headless shrimp.

And, now, for the story of Terry, who was only 15.

He said he was 18—and the boss asked no embarrassing questions. Terry wanted badly to be an artist, and the job would enable him to buy painting materials.

TWO days after Terry went to work, his right hand slipped under the knife of a power-driven corner-cutting machine. Terry lost three fingers—and his interest in school.

Terry's boss was fined $100 for employing a minor illegally. However, he kept Terry around—to sweep floors.

There's no end to the heart-rending stories to be found in the annals of the Children & Youth Employment Branch of the U. S. Labor Dept.—all illustrative of negligence on the part of adult citizens, who look on the sore-spots as a natural phenomenon; on the part of employers, whose concern for the dollar all too often has outweighed concern for the human being; and on the part of legislators, whose anxiety to show a "balanced budget" overshadowed their anxiety for a generation of healthy, educated youngsters.

There are laws—both federal and state—to prevent child labor, but about twice as many children 14 and 15 years of age are now at work as were working before the war.

In March 1947, about 1,790,000 children under 18 were working.

THE Federal law—the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act—affects only those industries whose goods are shipped across state borders. Child agricultural workers are covered by the law only on those hours when they are required by the state to be in school. Otherwise they may spend long hours crouching to pick cotton or straining to lift boxes of fruit—and yet be within the law.

Children under 18 in those industries affected by the law are forbidden to work in hazardous occupations such as explosives manufacturing, coal mining. Sixteen is the minimum age for manufacturing and mining (other than coal), while 14 is the minimum age for limited employment outside school hours.

ANOTHER Federal law, The Public Contracts Act, prohibits those industries producing goods for the government to hire children under 16.

Although child labor violations uncovered by Labor Dept. inspectors numbered over 7,000 last year, less—instead of more—attention will be given to stamping out the violations this year. Congressional "economy" last session slashed the Wages & Hours Division's budget so severely that 280 members of the staff have already had to be fired, among them the 9 child labor consultants attached to each of the regional offices of the Division.

Fewer inspectors will mean fewer establishments inspected each year, and a consequent spread of violations.

Greatest number of child labor violations have occurred in canneries, where children often have been found "peeling into mama's bucket." Paid piece work wages in non-union plants—instead of by the hour—the mother receives the pay for both.

OTHER low-paid industries, such as furniture manufacturing or woodworking also contribute a large share of the child-labor violations.

Employers convicted of the violations have ranged from multi-millionaire corporations to the small businessman. Included in the list of those convicted in recent years are many well-known manufacturing and merchandising concerns.

Highest fine ever assessed a child labor violator was $25,000.

Labor Dept. inspectors are often faced with the temptation to overlook certain violations. A mother pleads that the dimes and nickels her young ones bring home are not "extra;" the family is dependent on them for subsistence. It's not easy, the inspectors say, to take away a family's bread and butter in the name of the law.

Attentive Congressmen: Members of a House labor subcommittee are all ears as Russ Nixon, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Electrical Workers, compares the 40-cent pay minimum fixed by law with his estimate that Congress members are paid from $7 to $12 an hour. He was testifying, of course, for enactment of a 65-75c minimum wage law.

WAGE AND HOUR 'HEARINGS' TURN A DEAF EAR

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

COMPARED to the hopped-up dramatics of Rep. Thomas' Un-American Activities Committee, the minimum wage hearings being conducted by a sub-group of Rep. Hartley's House Labor Committee make pretty poor theater.

Rep. Sam McConnell (R., Pa.), an investment banker, who could pose for collar ads, chews thoughtfully on his tortoise shell glasses and gives the impression of a man who's trying to remember whether he turned off the gas stove.

Rep. Wint Smith (R., Kan.), a lawyer who definitely wouldn't be successful as a model, scratches his nose and stares with an expression of boredom at the witnesses. Rep. Tom Owens (R., Ill.), a "labor expert" for the American Bar Association, scratches notes on a pad and watches the testimony carefully.

This is the trio which has been hearing arguments on lifting the federal minimum wage from its present 40c level to 75c. It's obvious to the handful of spectators who sit at the back of the small committee room in the House Office Building that the proposal for a higher minimum wage—and even the basic Wage-Hour law—face heavy sailing during the next few months.

SOME labor legislative experts fear that the committee may propose a "meaningless" increase.

Last week, the first of a bevy of CIO witnesses appeared before the committee to argue the need for strengthening the law and increasing the minimum rate to 75c an hour. Some of their key points:

● William Pollock, secretary-treasurer of the Textile Workers: "You cannot have a free enterprise system in an area of paupers. Business needs customers. Customers made up of workers and their buying power comes from wages."

● Russ Nixon, legislative representative, Electrical Workers: "This committee has been told . . . that the present 40c minimum is 'inflationary.' If this . . . is inflationary, how do the Chamber of Commerce and the NAM justify their continued demand for tax relief for high incomes—the very incomes which remain to large extent in idle hoards?"

● CIO Maritime Committee: "The case . . . for extended coverage and for strengthened enforcement provisions is conclusive and we wholeheartedly support it. The average seaman today is a family man with all the obligations which accompany that status . . . He is deserving of an adequate minimum wage and of an American working standard in common with all American workers."

● Seth Levine, testifying for the Fishermen's Union: "There are approximately 10,000 on-shore fish workers in canneries, filleting plants, and reduction plants. Women predominate in the shoreside fish industries and minors are still used extensively. Yet, there is no federal legislation . . . for this industry. Wage and hour protection for these workers is necessary, feasible and long overdue."

QUESTIONING by Irving McCann, the committee's terrible-tempered witness (he used fists on the late Joseph Padway, late AFL counsel, during a hearing in Los Angeles last summer) is a possible tip-off to the committee's feelings. While quizzing Gen. Philip Fleming, federal works administrator and one-time Wage-Hour head, McCann tried three or four tacks which showed an interest in undercutting the law.

Wouldn't it be a fine idea to have different minimum pay rates in various sections of the country? McCann wanted to know. Wouldn't it be all right to remove from the law workers covered by union contracts? Wouldn't it be fine to put minimum wages on a sliding scale, rising and falling with the cost of living?

The Republican majority on the committee asks similar questions, and the defense comes only from two Democratic friends of labor, Rep. Madden (D., Ind.) and Rep. Klein (N. Y.).

One day, McCann remarked:

"The poor we have always with us."

There was a startled silence.

"Well," remarked McCann, "that's Scripture."

ONLY once has the committee GOP majority lost its calm, contented look. When Nixon compared Congressional wages to the minimum 40c wages, the Republicans rose in their wrath against damaging comparisons.

Nixon noted that Congressmen clear anywhere between $7 and $15 an hour, depending how much time they put on the job. McCann demanded that the figures be stricken from the record.

Rep. MacKinnon (R., Minn.) wanted the figures kept in the record, but he wanted it shown that he frequently works on weekends. Nixon, using some quick arithmetic, computed the Congressman's wage under those circumstances to be only about $6 an hour.

"I didn't know you were so touchy about this question, gentlemen," Nixon said. "I'm just trying to make you realize this thing in human terms."

He pointed out that the UE has raised minimum rates in its contract shops from a quarter an hour to 85c, but that the federal minimum of 40c was intended only as a "floor under poverty."

"Now even the minimum protection afforded by the 40c minimum has been allowed to melt away," but, he added, "some 30 million workers do not have even the guarantee of 40 cents and hour."

POLLOCK recalled that the employers had cried "wolf" when the original 40c minimum was proposed, but the dangers they had predicted have never materialized. Instead, the industry is making more profit than ever.

He said that textile union members wouldn't benefit directly from a higher minimum, since union minimum rates have jumped from 32.5c an hour in 1939 to a present 85c-95c level.

"But the unorganized and underpaid workers must be protected from the unscrupulous fringe of American employers who are exploiting these workers," Pollock testified.

"We want a minimum wage to protect fair-minded employers and to provide a constant flow of buying power for the American economy."

Testimony from the CIO maritime groups was aimed at winning wage-hour coverage for seamen and other groups which in the past have been excluded from the act's protection both as to hours and pay.

Economically Speaking:

Aid Plan Put First At Session; Profits, Prices, Tempers Rise

WITH the special session only one week away, the 80th Congress' Republican leadership decided that "one bite" aid for Europe wasn't enough.

So, it agreed with Pres. Truman that stopgap emergency aid should be acted on first, with a blueprinted Marshall Plan to be mulled over at the regular session in January.

Truman—wisely in the opinion of seasoned observers—decided to put foreign aid ahead of price legislation at the session. But, whatever action is taken on aid, it will have an inevitable effect on the price situation.

The GOP made its decision shortly after last week's elections and immediately after receiving the so-called Herter report. The report, written by a just-returned committee headed by Rep. Christian Herter (R., Mass.), expressed unanimous agreement that Western Europe's democracy is "gravely threatened."

"The slender remaining resources of these countries will not carry them many months more without disastrous shortages of food, fuel, and certain raw materials, as well as of the capital goods required to stimulate recovery," the report said.

Truman, at a press conference, indicated that price questions would be acted upon immediately after foreign aid is legislated.

While Congress prepared to gather (some members were already in Washington; others had their plane or train reservations; some had their autos at the garage being serviced up; one was riding horseback from the Pacific Coast), this was the general picture:

Auto profits: "Some dealers are making so much money they can't count it," the Wall Street Journal quotes a Chrysler official as saying. Example: One Cadillac model with a factory price of $4190 now brings the dealer $1005. In pre-war days, it was $3080 and $739. And, they're making big money on trade-ins, which before the war brought losses, trimming profits on new cars.

Dept. store profits: The New York Times reported that New York and Brooklyn department store sales rose in October to a new peak 38% over the corresponding month last year. The largest rise was 52.7%. And, this despite the fact October was the warmest October since who knows when.

Steel production (and profits): The Amer. Steel and Iron Inst. showed that shipments of 10 pricipal steel products in the first nine months of 1947 topped the total output for the full span of 1946. And this record performance, as the Times called it, was improved further during October, according to unofficial data, when domestic steel mills established new shipment marks with a peacetime record production of about 7,500,000 tons. In September, the shipments were 5,118,839 net tons.

National steel operations were at 97% of capacity.

Oil Profits: Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc. (that's a Standard outfit) estimated its net profit for the first nine months of 1947 at $66,000,000 after taxes and all charges. That compared with $36,000,000 last time. These figures do not include any equity in Standard Vacuum Oil Co., in which Soc-Vac has a 50% interest.

Sugar profits: Vertientes-Camaguey Sugar Co. showed a net profit of $5,082,486 for the fiscal year ended with September, compared with $2,962,419 the preceding year.

Liquor profits: Distillers Corp.—Seagrams, Ltd., showed consolidated net earnings, after taxes and all charges, of $43,112,502 for the fiscal year ended July 31. Last fiscal year, it was $24,530.122.

But—These profit figures "are not all that they seem,"—or at least that's what the Nat'l City Bank of New York thinks. The bank says the figures frequently reflect inventory profit and are "overstated" through inadequate estimates of replacement costs. The bank is downright worried about the fact the profit figures are "a subject of active—at times even bitter—controversy."

However, consumers — and particularly housewives — also saw something bitterly controversial in:

Food prices: Porterhouse steak, officially graded "good" — third best in the American Meat Institute's ratings—was selling for 79c and more a pound. Large eggs were 77c. Butter was 85c (during the fight to end OPA, anti-OPAers expressed pious worry that butter was selling on the black market for 80c a pound.)

NAM solution: The Nat'l Association of Manufacturers, expressing surprise that "prices are not even higher than they are now," urged increased production to cut prices. (The CIO has been urging that for a long, long time.)

The future: U. S. News says: "The way things shape up for months just ahead — prices of many goods will be marked up. Food will stay high. Autos are likely to cost a little more. So will clothing, food, many other things. Production seems assured at a high level well into 1948."

Wishful thinking?: Some observers believed the implied trend of last week's elections, in some places at least, together with the Gallup poll showing a sharp rise in Truman's popularity, just might induce Congress to do something serious about prices, despite its previous record.

Strip for Congress: These twin girls tried to prove to a Congressional committee on prices at Atlanta that in 1939 a girl could buy a complete outfit for $14.32, but her 1947 twin would have to stop with her slip. If she dressed like her 1939 twin, she would have to spend $23.13 at present prices.

No Idle Thought

According to U. S. News: "Employment totalled 59,204,000 in October, up 332,000 from September. A decline is normal at this period of the year. The labor shortage is seen in unemployment totals, which dropped to 1,687,000 in October from 1,912,000 in September and 2,096,000 in August. Unemployment is at its lowest mark since the war."

On the Co-op, Labor Front

A SATURDAY morning farmer-labor cooperative market to be held on three lots provided by Goodyear Rubber Workers Local 131 was announced last week by the Los Angeles CIO Council. The first sale was scheduled for Nov. 8 from 9 a. m. until supplies were gone.

Local unions furnished volunteer workers to prepare the lots for the market and the Goodyear workers had a crew of clerks ready to help farmers sell their products.

William Belton, co-op committeeman, said the Los Angeles market was working with the previous week, in coordinating arrangements with farmers and in pooling purchases. Prices at both markets will be identical, as they will be pegged to prices on the wholesale market.

Leaflets notifying workers of the money-saving market were distributed to all CIO plants in the south and southeast areas of Los Angeles.

* * *

A WAY to help union members make their dollars go further is being tried out by CIO Auto Workers Local 248 in Milwaukee, Wis., through an arrangement made with the Consumers' Cooperative Store.

Workers employed at Allis-Chalmers were given lists of 19 items which they could buy in case lots at reductions ranging from 15 to 25%, and were notified that orders could be placed with the union by Tuesday night of each week for pick-up at the Co-op Store Thursdays and Fridays.

The local plans to extend the plan if it works successfully, and is now trying to make arrangements through the Co-op for ordering large shipments of pountry for Thanksgiving and Christmas, to be sold at reduced prices.

* * *

UNITED Auto Workers in Racine and Kenosha, Wis., have joined the list of unions selling non-perishable goods at reduced prices to union members. At is first sale, the Racine UAW District Council sold $2,000 worth of canned and packaged goods and potatoes.

UAW Local 72 in Kenosha has been selling large supplies of non-perishable groceries to members on a number of occasions in past weeks. The Local has worked largely through the Midland Cooperative Wholesale.

Montana Farmers Union Says What Hurts Labor Hurts Us

"ANYTHING that hurts labor . . . hurts the farmers," the Montana Farmers Union has declared in a resolution lashing out at the Taft-Hartley Act and its sponsors.

The resolution, passed by the state convention at Great Falls, said there "can be no prosperity for the American farmer unless there is simultaneously good times for the city workers."

The T-H law, it said, was written by the "worst enemies of labor and therefore of the farmer and of the American people generally." The resolution condemned the T-H law as "vicious, un-American and unconstitutional" and a danger to workers, farmers and small businessmen.

"We call for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act in its entirely," the Montana Farmers Union said.

CIO Aides Married By CIO Aide

A full-fledged CIO wedding took place in New York last week when CIO Research Director Kermit Eby performed the marriage ceremony of Robert A. Levin, educational director for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, to Kay James Warburg, also with the ACW.

Mr. Eby is an ordained minister of the Church of the Brethren.

Hard Knocks

Elmo Roper, commenting in the New York Herald Tribune on the Fortune Magazine "Consumer Outlook" poll, said the public was asked this key question:

Compared with six months ago, are you finding it harder, easier, or about the same to make both ends meet?

The answers:

	Total %
Harder	57.7
Easier	5.6
Same	32.9
Express no opinion	3.8

CIO Participates In Education Meet

Representatives of a number of CIO unions were among the 200 labor delegates who attended the eighth annual Midwest Workers Conference sponsored by the American Labor Education Service last week-end at Highland Park, Ill.

Main theme "Economic, Political and Social Developments Confronting Unions Today."

George Guernsey, assistant CIO education director, was in charge of the workshop on use of films, records and other educational mediums Svend Godfredsen, CIO Packinghouse Workers Educational Director, was co-chairman with Agnes M. Douty of the Georgia Workers Education Service of a session on Labor's Community Relations.

Homer Ayres, Farm Equipment Workers, led the panel on Improving Farmer-Labor Relations.

CIO unions represented included Auto, Transport Service, Office & Professional, Packinghouse, Farm Equipment and Telephone Workers.

Eastern Textile To Seek Rise

"Substantial wage increases" will be sought by 80,000 CIO Textile workers in 142 eastern wollen and worsted mills.

Contracts with the 102 mills will expire Feb. 1. About 250 union delegates met in Boston last week to draw up plans for the wage drive. A similar meeting of Textile workers in the Midwest and Pacific Coast regions will be held in Chicago Nov. 15.

Farmer-Labor Meeting: To promote understanding of each other's problems, more than 10,000 Ottumwa, Ia., workers and farmers turned out for a 2-day celebration. Talking things over are (l. to r.) Tilford Dudley of CIO-PAC, Pres. Charles Stiles of the Ottumwa Milk Producers Cooperative, Dan Collins of the Iowa Farmers Union and Chief Steward Ed Filliman of Local 1, CIO Packinghouse Workers. (Federated Pictures).

Amalgamated Seeks Rise For 150,000

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has presented demands for a 15-cent-an-hour wage increase, a second week's paid vacation and Election Day as an additional holiday to the Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the U.S.A. on behalf of 150,000 workers.

The union demands were presented to an industry-wide conference by a union delegation headed by President Jacob S. Potofsky.

Basis of the wage demand was the constant rise in living costs, Potofsky pointed out, stating that the 12½-cent-an-hour increase won by the clothing workers a year ago had been nullified by mounting prices with the result that "we are worse off than before."

Potofsky quoted figures from an address by Pres. Truman which showed that food costs had soared 40% and that the over all cost of living had risen 23% since midyear 1946. The Amalgamated president head emphasized that the proposed wage rise on present wage scales would be much less than the price rise during the past year.

In support of the demand for a second week's paid vacation, the Amalgamated delegation quoted a survey by the National Industrial Conference Board showing that a two week's vacation or more is prevalent in 94% of the plants surveyed, union and non-union alike.

Victory Encourages PAC Workers in Kentucky

THE victory of PAC-endorsed gubernatorial candidate Rep. Earl C. Clements last week lent encouragement to CIO members in Kentucky, who two days previously had pledged to step up their political activity and to throw 10,000 block workers into the 1948 election campaigns.

(The Republican candidate had focused his campaign primarily upon the CIO's support of Clements and Clements' opposition to the Taft-Hartley Law. The latter's victory, therefore, was interpreted in many quarters as a victory for labor and indicative of popular resentment against the T-H law.)

Holding its 8th annual convention in Paducah, Nov. 1-2, the Kentucky State CIO Council was assured by its principal speaker, Sen. Alben W. Barkley, that he is "firmly convinced that those who originally sponsored the Taft-Hartley Act had in their minds, if not to destroy labor, to make it difficult to exist."

The Senate minority leader, when introduced by State CIO President Al Whitehouse, was presented with a tie on which was inscribed: "Repeal the Taft-Hartley Act."

Delegates cheered loudly as Barkley promised: "I will wear this to the opening session, and I will walk over to the Republican side and show it to Bob Taft."

John Brophy, national director of CIO Councils, in his convention address, stated that the T-H Act is "only one of many important issues labor is facing. We must take a militant stand against rising prices and for aid to Europe.

"Strong congressional action to control prices is the only means of halting inflation," he said.

A strong resolution urging that prices be rolled back and controlled and that rationing be reinstated was unanimously adopted. Also approved by the convention was a resolution supporting the Marshall Plan for aid to Europe.

Whitehouse was re-elected to his 8th consecutive term as head of the state CIO council.

'Infamous'

"THERE must be something wrong in this great country of ours when decent, honest, loyal American citizens are forced by a body of legislators to sign this infamous affidavit."

With those words, Thomas R. Andert, chairman of the CIO Optical & Instrument Organizing Committee, notified the NLRB he was signing the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit under protest.

Pointing out he is a Catholic and a veteran of World War I whose two sons enlisted in World War II, Andert declared in a letter: "The NLRB, the Congress, and anyone else who might be interested, could have very easily and quickly found that I am not a Communist and do not believe in their contemptible teachings, in fact I am on the 'S' list or purge list of the Communist Party.

"Despite that fact, I consider many Communists more honorable than many of the people, be they statesmen or otherwise, who by the passage of this law have made it necessary for me to humiliate myself in the signing of this affidavit."

Ask Voluntary Gifts For Needy Kids

A world-wide appeal for voluntary contributions to provide needy children everywhere with food, clothes and medical care is made in an illustrated pamphlet just issued by the United Nations Appeal for Children, Lake Success, N. Y. Copies of the pamphlet will be sent free upon request.

The UN appeal urges everyone who can to "Give One Day for the Children of the World." Labor groups are asked to place the appeal on their agenda so that members may suggest how their particular group can participate

Textile Profits

Textile stocks paid their investors a 6.6% profit in the first quarter of 1947, a higher rate than in any other of America's 21 major industry groups, the FTC and the SEC jointly announced.

2 Unions Sponsor Football On Radio

Iowa gridiron battles are being piped to radio audiences this year over station KXEL, courtesy of two CIO locals as part of a public service program.

Sponsors are Local 46, Packinghouse Workers and Local 838, Auto Workers.

A total of eight 1-minute spots mention high prices, community service of organized labor, the history of the CIO, anti-labor laws and the need for their repeal, etc. In addition, a 3-minute neighborly talk is given by a different member of the locals between halves.

During the Iowa-Indiana game Oct. 18, which ended in a 13-13 tie, the announcer said: "Right now it looks bad for the people; high prices are doing some mighty effective blocking. But the CIO has faith in the people, and together we yell, 'Hold that line, hold that line against higher and higher prices.'"

WAGE HIKES END CANADIAN WALKOUT

THE seven-week cross-continent Canadian packinghouse strike ended last week as 15,000 workers returned with a 7 to 10-cent hourly increase and the prospect of a further arbitration award.

First of the three strike-bound companies to settle was Swift Canadian, which signed an agreement for a 10-cent hourly raise with geographic adjustments of from one and one-half to three cents an hour. Other benefits included strengthening of union security and inclusion of a sick and accident plan.

The settlement at Canada Packers and Burns netted the strikers a seven cents an hour down payment and the assurance of an arbitration award of somewhere between the seven cents and the union's original demand of 17 cents. The arbitrator will also rule on the other demands.

In the event that the union's gains following the arbitrator's award exceed 10 cents, it is expected that the Swift contract will be reopened in order to bring wages there in line with the other two companies.

The prolonged strike had been characterized by police interference, according to the union, which resulted in the arrest of some 250 pickets.

THE two-month strike conducted by Packinghouse Workers Local 351 in Wells, Minn., against the Musser Packing Co., poultry processing firm, has been settled.

Workers walked out Sept. 15 after trying for months to get the company to sign a contract.

The strike received wide publicity in September when John Musser, who liked to call himself the "Duck and Goose King of America," allegedly ran his car into Mrs. Frank Kriz, wife of the local union president, as she was walking on the picket line.

The company agreed, under the terms of the settlement, to reinstate Kriz, whose firing provoked the strike, and to grant the workers a 5-cent hourly wage increase.

In addition, the Musser Co. agreed to a wage survey of 11 plants to be made by Feb. 1, 1948, promising to pay its employes as much or more than the average wage paid by the 11 companies.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

One of the first attempts under the Taft-Hartley Act to take away our bargaining rights and de-certify the union was made by some employes of the Staples-Smith Displays of Brooklyn, resulting in a victory for the CIO and maintenance of the bargaining rights by a substantial majority in an election.

The gubernatorial election in Kentucky has great significance. The CIO-backed candidate, Congressman Earle C. Clements, who voted against the Taft-Hartley Act, defeated the Republican candidate, State Attorney General Eldon S. Dummit, who had declared himself for the Taft-Hartley Act.

Organized labor responded and supported Rep. Clements in this smashing victory. In addition to that, voters elected the full slate of the PAC-CIO-backed candidates to the Louisville Council. The forces of organized labor united in this campaign and are to be congratulated on this achievement. The previous governor was a Republican.

The defeat of Congressman John E. Rankin in Mississippi, who was going to "out-Bilbo Bilbo" is significant of the awakening of truly democratic forces everywhere.

Sub-Regional Director Tillotson of Erie, Pa., telegraphs: "Demoats elected mayor, won majority control of Erie city hall and school oard, upsetting Republican control since 1931. Couple hundred PAC vorkers and 125 cars made defeat of Republican Taft-Hartley supporters possible. Titusville, Pa., defeated Republican mayor and elected Democrat."

The failure of the 80th Congress to do anything constructive for ne people of the nation, the vicious attacks upon labor, the passage f the Taft-Hartley Act which was done deliberately to protect the oaring profits of a few, and the constant rise in the cost of living, re causing the common people everywhere, inspired by the program f CIO and PAC, to show their resentment to this "big-business—bigrofit" Congress.

The writer addressed the American Newspaper Guild executive oard in New York on November 2. Members of this organization are lert to the necessity for intensified political action, realizing as they lo that the bargaining table conferences are being impaired, and their nterest as well as the workers everywhere jeopardized by the Tafts nd the Hartleys, and we must intensify our activity in the political ield to eliminate these undemocratic obstacles.

A. F. Hartung, CIO Regional Director, Portland, Oregon, was lected vice-president of the International Woodworkers of America. Al is an old-time lumberjack, highly respected in the IWA and has served our movement well in Oregon. We have selected to act as Regional Director in his place, Chester Dusten, who had much experience in the movement and will serve the CIO well in that State.

Harry Sayre was chosen as president of the United Paperworkers of America, and Frank Grasso as secretary-treasurer.

In reply to the many inquiries the writer is receiving about the present given to him at Boston, the car is rolling along fine.

PAC SCORES MAJOR VICTORIES

istration in Kentucky exceeds the Republican by about 150,000 and that in two gubernatorial elections preceding 1943 the Democrats won by majorities of 117,083 in 1939 and 95,158 in 1935.

"Keeping these facts in mind, it will be realized that in Kentucky Republicans made a showing yesterday which justifies real hopes that the electoral vote of that State may be cast for the Republican President to be elected in 1948."

The GOP's master of logic did not mention the fact that the Democrats enjoyed almost equally as large a registration lead in 1943; and, after handing out 2 plus 2 equals 5 statement, he was too much out of breath to comment on Indiana.

The Democrats also ousted the entire Republican City Council in Louisville.

William B. Taylor, CIO Regional Director at Louisville, pointed out that the "Republicans proclaimed the Taft-Hartley Act and PAC as the election issues. But, Rep. Earle C. Clements (D., Ky.), who was elected Governor, welcomed the support of PAC and was ably backed by Sen. Alben W. Barkley (D., Ky.). Apparently the people of Kentucky have had enough."

In Congress, Clements voted against the Taft-Hartley Law and voted to uphold President Truman's veto. His opponent was Eldon S. Dummit. Democrats won all State jobs at stake and gained in the Assembly.

INDIANA—The Hoosier swing to the Democrats was nothing short of phenomenal. For several years back, the state has been producing such Republican victors as Sen. Homer Capehart. Last week, more than half the major cities swung over to the Democrats, who were bulwarked by PAC wrokers.

Key results were registered in Indianapolis, where Al Feeney, former great at Notre Dame under Knute Rockne, ousted a Republican Mayor by 8000 votes; Muncie, which the GOP had controlled for nine years; New Castle, Anderson, Evansville, Fort Wayne, just to mention a few of the 25 cities which went over to the Democrats and where PAC was on the alert. And, don't forget the 10th District.

MISSISSIPPI — John Cornelius Stennis, 46 and a rural judge, was the victor over Rankin and five others in the race to succeed Bilbo.

Though Stennis is a self-styled conservative, he was backed by liberals. PAC is a small body in Mississippi, but lent a helping hand. According to the Associated Press, Stennis' "restrained campaign avoided the raw issue of 'white supremacy' and stressed agricultural and industrial development of the state."

Second to Stennis was Rep. William Colmer, who defended the Taft-Hartley law; third was Forrest Jackson, counsel for Bilbo in the fight against graft charges; fourth was Paul B. Johnson, Jr., Marine veteran and son of the former Governor; fifth was Rankin and sixth was the only Republican, L. C. Collins (the AP said "he ran for the exercise"), who got only 508 votes.

Most of Rankin's approximately 24,000 votes came from his own Congressional district, but even there, Stennis led Rankin in four of 10 counties. Stennis had more than 50,000 votes.

Other key elections:

New Jersey

Constitution: The State adopted its new charter by a vote of better than 3 to 1. The CIO helped write the charter, which contains many guarantees of civil liberties and collective bargaining rights. This was in sharp contrast to two years ago, when another proposed constitution was overwhelmingly licked.

Paterson: Michael deVita, 35-year-old former Army captain, rode into office with strong PAC support. DeVita, who won fame in the war by carrying a key message from Gen. Eisenhower concerning the Normandy invasion, beat Mayor William P. Furrey by 10,000 votes.

In Camden, however, a labor-backed incumbent senator fell and CIO candidates failed in bids for the Legislature.

In Mercer (Trenton), one of two PAC-indorsed legislative candidates won.

Pennsylvania

Philadelphia: Samuel's victory carried in with him his entire ticket. The lone Democratic member of the Council of 22 also lost out.

PAC made no indorsement for mayor, mainly because Dilworth had represented employers against the Steelworkers, the Newspaper Guild and other unions and because it felt the political machine back of Samuel has ignored the interests of the people for many years.

However, individual indorsements were given Samuel by the AFL Bartenders, the AFL Teamsters, the CIO Transport Workers (on a split board vote) and William Leader, head of Branch 1, Hosiery Workers.

Dilworth received the highest vote of any Democratic candidate for mayor.

Mayors: The Democrats made a net gain of eight mayors in 28 contests. Included were those in Erie and Allentown. The latter was most pleasing, since the United Labor Committee that backed Philip Storch in his unsuccessful campaign for Congress against Franklin Lichtenwalder stayed together and contributed to the victory. Lichtenwalder campaigned for the defeated incumbent mayor.

In Harrisburg, the State capital, traditionally Republican, a Democrat came within an ace of beating a Republican for mayor.

Allegheny County: In this steel, coal and electrical manufacturing-conscious area (Pittsburgh is its heart), the Democratic organization of Mayor David Lawrence (no kin to the U. S. Newser) swept the GOP out of its last two county jobs, one of which had been held since 1928, and took solid control of Pittsburgh.

PAC was extremely active.

Ohio

Cleveland: Mayor Burke returned to office with the highest majority in the city's history.

Cincinnati: PR retained by a vote of 81,000 to 73,000. Charter candidates (Democrats and independent Republicans, including Robert A. Taft's liberal brother, Charles) in lead for majority of council seats as tally is being pushed. Rollin Everett, editor of CIO Cincinnati Sun, in sixth place on first count, with nine places at stake. AFL leader Harry Proctor in 7th place.

Dayton: CIO-backed ticket of Charles Sims, CIO council head, and Josef McLin, businessman, defeated for council by about 2 to 1.

Other cities: Big Democratic victory in Warren, where Harold Smith carried in an entire new slate; Democrats held own in Canton and Elyria; lost in Akron and Youngstown.

Congress: In Ohio's 4th District, Democrat Joseph B. Quatman caused a political surprise when he cut the normal Republican majority down from 25,000 to about 6000. The election, held to fill a Congressional vacancy caused by resignation, went to William M. McCulloch.

California

Republicans gained three seats in the legislature in bye-elections. Democratic party split aided Republicans.

Massachusetts

Boston: The Boston Teachers' Alliance, a new group, scored a clean sweep in the school board elections, defeating Clement A. Norton, who as board chairman last spring opposed teachers' pay raises.

New York

Major aftermath of the defeat of PR seemed to be that though the Democratic Party has strengthened its position by its sweeping victory in the PR fight and in a number of up-State town elections, it faces a serious loss of balance from the American Labor Party and the Liberal power.

The ALP and LP, which have often backed Democratic candidates, were reported considering a sharp break with that party. The Republican leadership also seemed in for the same fate. Gov. Dewey announced he had voted for PR repeal.

New York City Mayor O'Dwyer took no position on PR.

In the 14th New York Congressional District, Brooklyn Abraham J. Multer (D. and L.) was elected to Congress over Jacob J. Lefkowitz (R.) and Victor Rabinowitz (ALP). Multer had a plurality of nearly 27,000. He succeeds Leo J. Rayfiel, named U. S. District judge. Another Congressman, Benjamin J. Rabin (D. and L.) defeated Justice J. Edward Lumbar (R. and ALP) for the New York Supreme Court, by a majority of 181,000.

* * *

Did the election show a trend? Have the voters had enough of the Republicans? Did high prices play a major part, as one Kentucky Republican lamented? Well, here are three observations:

George Gallup, pollster: "Although local issues are always a factor in such voting, when taken together the five elections (Kentucky, the three Congressional votes and the 8th Pennsylvania of September) indicate an increased Democratic strength of about 5 percentage points since 1946." He made this comparison:

PERCENT REPUBLICAN
	1946	1947	Loss
Ohio 4th	59.2	55.3	—3.9
Indiana 10th	61.2	55.3	—6.0
N. Y. 14th	5.0	16.4	—8.6
KENTUCKY
	1943	1947
Governor	50.8	42.1	—8.7

"Independent" New York Times: "National Vote Is Held Check to Republican Trend of '46; Contests called too scattered for a sure guidepost to an actual reversal of the force that gained Congress control."

Republican New York Herald Tribune: "Leaders Find Few Election Clews to 1948; Democrats hail Kentucky victory, Republicans maintain lead in house."

Cissie Patterson's Washington Times Herald (you know who Cissie is): "The election results around the country were mixed and it seems impossible to us to detect any national trend in them, or any strong indication of how things will go in the 1948 Presidential battle.

"All that we can infer from the returns is that the Republicans cannot safely count on a push-over next year, and had better put up their strongest possible candidate and do a great deal of hard work if they want to win."

As Ky. GOP Goes So Goes Taft?

Sen. J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), new chairman of the Democratic Nat'l Committee, is not given to making extravagant claims. So, in commenting on the Democratic victory in Kentucky, he contented himself with this:

"On Oct. 15, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.) predicted a Republican victory in Kentucky and said the election would 'reflect to a large degree which party will elect a President in 1948.'

"He (Taft) added:

"'As Kentucky goes, largely goes the Nation'."

This Is Not First Time

Big story of the week 10 years ago was the election of 11 mayors and burgesses in cities and towns of western Pennsylvania, who not only had CIO backing but in many cases were actual members of CIO unions.

In additions some 30 other CIO-backed candidates were elected to city and town councils, school boards and other offices.

C. D. Scully, actively supported by the CIO Steelworkers, was elected Pittsburgh's mayor by a 30,000 majority.

In Clairton and Duquesne, two CIO Steel local presidents —John Mullen and Elmer J. Maloy, were elected mayors of their respective towns, and in Aliquippa, Paul Normile, Steel local president, and Peter Haubrer, union committeeman, were elected to the city council.

Union forces also won sweeping victories in Ambridge, Homestead and a score of other industrial towns in western Pennsylvania.

"Senator Circle is disgraced. In his last speech two words agreed with the union."

CHICAGO THREATENED BY RENT SQUEEZE

The nation's tenants breathed a temporary sigh of relief last week as the new acting rent expediter, Tighe Woods, tossed out the first hot potato thrown to him — a recommended 15% rent increase for the Chicago area.

Woods said his rejection of the Chicago rent advisory board's proposal was based on the board's failure to substantiate its case. He pointed out, however, that this does not prohibit any future recommendation that is "appropriately substantiated."

The housing expediter advised local boards to hold public hearings before making their recommendations. No hearings were held in Chicago, where the board consists of an insurance executive, three real estate representatives, an attorney, a department store president, a YMCA secretary, a labor representative and a member whose occupation was not listed.

Woods possibly was deterred by the protests of organized labor and other groups. Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired the expediter, and Sec. Michael Mann of the Chicago CIO Council called on affiliates not only to protest to Woods but also to local government officials and the board.

Although the 15-line letter which contained the proposal described the board's decision as "unanimous," it was later learned that three members of the board had not voted. One of the three resigned upon learning of the group's action.

This is the first proposed rent boost of this size for one of the country's largest cities, and is being watched for an indication of Woods' attitude toward subsequent recommendations to increase rents elsewhere. Only about 10% of the local boards have submitted their recommendations.

THREE factors are contributing to general optimism that Woods will turn down the recommendation if it is tossed back to him with "substantiating evidence":

- The regional rent administrator in Chicago, Oscar G. Abern, stated that he would have recommended rejection of the rent increase had he been given the opportunity.
- Woods, who formerly was OPA rent administrator for the Chicago area, is personally familiar with the local situation.
- The Chicago city council sent an urgent resolution to Woods, asking him not to act on the issue until the council had had time to "look into this matter thoroughly."

The housing expediter's office, under the stewardship of Frank Creedon, who resigned last week, had previously approved a 5% increase for the Louisville area and a 10% boost for Klamath Falls, Oregon.

The recommendations of the Chicago and Louisville boards—both composed almost exclusively of real estate and business men—served to focus attention on the character of rent boards throughout the country.

THE membership of the Danville, Va., rent board was challenged last week when the CIO Textile Workers urged Gov. William M. Tuck to make the board more representative of a textile community and called housing expediter Wood's attention to the representation on the 5-man board, which included:

- the president of the largest real estate firm in the town.
- a vice president of a bank with large real estate holdings.
- a merchant who owns a number of houses.
- a well-to-do farmer, who owns several farms and has other business interests.
- an insurance salesman.

The communication to the Governor, signed by Lewis Conn, TWUA Joint Board Manager in Danville, proposed the addition of five persons to the body—a CIO representative, an AFL representative and three well-known local ministers.

DISCONTENT with the Detroit advisory board also appeared to be in the offing. An article in the Wage Earner, Detroit newspaper, indicated that the 37-man board appointed by Republican Gov. Kim Sigler wasn't constituted to give tenants a break.

The three CIO representatives on the board resigned when the board voted to conduct a hearing on a new rent policy during the week of the CIO Auto Workers convention in Atlantic City. Only other labor representative in this highly industrial city was an AFL spokesman, who died recently.

The article described seven of the board members listed "neutral" as follows:

"Among the 'veterans' and 'housewives,' who were classified as 'neutrals' when the board was being formed are: George D. Lyle, chairman of the board; Mrs. Edith Carew; Mrs. Mary Streit; Miss M. M. Harriman, and Arthur W. Grieg.

"Lyle is president of the Detroit Steel Fabricating Co. During and after World War II, he went to Washington to protest against controls of any kind.

"Mrs. Carew is an executive officer of the Wayne County Republican Committee. Mrs. Streit is vice-president of the City Lumber Co. Miss Harriman is secretary and manager of the Detroit and Michigan Property Owners Association. On at least one occasion she picketed OPA. Grieg is an architect for The Michigan Securities Co.

"Two other 'neutrals,' identified only as 'attorney' and 'publisher,' respectively, are Edward Bensoce and Frank Januszewski. Benscoe is an executive of the Greater Detroit Property Owners and Tax Payers Association, who testified before the Congressional investigating committee last week that he is 'against rent control.'

"Januszewski edits and publishes the Polish Daily News, regarded as Hamtramck's 'conservative' Polish paper.

"Included among those who admit they are for the landlords are: Kenneth Draper, president of the Detroit Real Estate Board; Eugene Lewis, president of the Industrial National Bank; Earl Heenan, vice-president of the Detroit Securities Co.; Carl Wells, an executive of the Homer Warren & Co., realtors."

Five New Films Available

FIVE new 16 mm sound films useful particularly for political action work have been purchased for rental to CIO affiliates, according to George Guernsey, assistant education director of the CIO.

The new films are:

1. How to Elect Our Representatives, 10 minutes, rental $2. This was made for high school use, with the central figure a girl just turned 21 and is good for broad non-partisan registration drives.

2. People's Charter, 15 minutes, rental $1.50. This first United Nations film, features representatives of "Big Four" and shows the part of the peoples of the world played in shaping the UN.

3. Challenge of Housing, 10 minutes, rental $1. Produced by the Natl. Film Board of Canada, movie shows what one government is doing to provide homes for low and middle income groups. The film can be used to good purpose when combined with a discussion of the records of congressmen on housing and rent control.

4. There Were Three Men, 10-minute color cartoon, rental $3. Produced by the Cooperative League of the USA, this picture shows the experiences of Ike and Mike (a farmer and an industrial worker) and their relations with the industrialist G. K. Booble which give rise to the organization of cooperatives.

5. Round Trip, 20 minutes, rental $3. Produced by Twentieth Century Fund. This deals with problems of foreign trade, showing how the sound exchange of goods among all nations will help build a healthy world economy.

Requests for rentals of these films should be sent at least two weeks in advance of date showing, with an alternate date given for one month later. If a film is required for a specific meeting give three choices. Send order to George Guernsey, Film Division, CIO, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington 6, D. C.

$ for them, $ for PAC: That big smile on the little dynamo's face is because PAC is just becoming richer by $100. Hugh Gammon, seated, member of the Textile Workers, and Chairman for that group in Lafayette, Ga., is receiving $50 from Cecil Watts. Leonard Montgomery, with $50 in his hand, looks on. Watts and Montgomery received $1750 and $2250 in awards from the Linwood Cotton Mill here, after the management was found guilty of unfair labor practices in denying the men work because they were Textile members.

CHEMICAL UNION PROTEST BRINGS 6 HOLIDAYS

A threat by the CIO Chemical Workers to send a motorcade to Washington, D. C., as part of a protest has brought a settlement with Carbide & Carbon Corp., Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The union had accused C. & C. of refusal to bargain in good faith. The company, after the threat, agreed to a union proposal for six paid holidays retroactive to the first of the year. C. &. C. is a major atomic project.

Discussion of other demands, including sick leave and wage increases, was postponed until after a collective bargaining election which will also include some craft unions among the 2500 workers.

The union said that if the tactics practiced by the company didn't cease after the election, plans for the motorcade will be resumed. The union has repeatedly asked the Atomic Energy Commission to establish some kind of labor standards on private employers at Oak Ridge so that vital atomic energy work can be continued without interruption.

Arrest 4 Pickets

Four CIO Electrical Workers pickets were arrested last week as police attempted to disperse a crowd of 100 pickets and onlookers at the Eastern Air Device Corp., Brooklyn. The strike is two weeks old.

NLRB Rulings Affect CIO

THE Nat'l. Labor Relations Board last week (a) ruled against the CIO Steelworkers, petitioner in a representation case and (b) decided that all unions must comply fully with the non-Communist and financial filing provisions of the Taft-Hartley law if they want to preserve existing bargaining rights when their present contracts expire.

The Steelworkers' decision also was made under the non-Communist affidavit provisions. USA officers have refused to sign the affidavits.

The other ruling affected the CIO Retail Clerks. It said the union had not signed the affidavits.

At the same time, the NLRB granted a petition by the Int'l. Association of Machinists (independent), which has complied with the affidavit provisions.

As the CIO News went to press, the NLRB announced that it had denied a place on the ballot to the CIO Nat'l Maritime Union and Local 65, Wholesale and Warehouse Union. Both had failed to sign non-Communists affidavits.

Our Responsibility:

This little European girl like millions of her brothers and sisters gratefully munches a piece of bread. Whether these children and their parents get food to keep them from further suffering and starvation depends largely on the 80th Congress which reconvenes this week to act on aid abroad and inflation at home. In speaking of the world's needy, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said: "We must help them to clothe and feed themselves, not merely as a gesture of humanitarianism but also because we must recognize that hunger in any part of the world is a threat to the peace and security of all the world."

(See story on Pages 2, 6 and 7.)

OPEN CONGRESS WITH A '?'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE 80th Congress came back to town this week to wrestle with some of the weightiest peacetime problems of the century—inflation at home, starvation and economic crisis abroad.

What the 80th will do about the problems was a completely unsolved question.

Pres. Truman, faced with the need of sending a message to the special session, saw leaders of labor, agriculture and industry last week. Among his callers were CIO Pres. Murray and AFL Pres. Green.

The GOP majority in Congress —which had shown little enthusiasm for the special session— was raising lots of questions about the size of our foreign aid program. And Republican spokesmen, looking out at a nation angered by jumping living costs, were seeking to convince a doubting public that the GOP wasn't to blame for weakening OPA controls some 15 months ago.

With confusion and disagreement on handling of the major problems, it seems unlikely that any real action will be taken for the next several weeks.

CIO—through a letter from Pres. Murray to every member of the House and Senate—offered a program designed to set the domestic economy on an even keel so that a foreign aid campaign would have better chance of success.

Murray's letter (see text on page seven) suggested a four-point legislative plan to help get the nation out of its current economic mess. It recommended:

1. Re-establishment of price control and rationing of food, clothing and other necessities of life.

2. A tax program on excess profits and profits from speculation.

3. Elimination of margins which help lead to speculative buying of grains on commodity exchanges.

4. An all-out attack upon monopoly and the artificial "scarcity for profit" which monopolistic practices bring about.

"This fight against hunger and privation at home is part and parcel of the urgent struggle against hunger throughout the world," Murray wrote to the Congressmen and Senators.

And to prove what every housewife already knows, the U. S. Dept. of Labor announced last week that the cost of living had zoomed to another all-time high between mid-August and mid-September. Retail prices on a select list of consumer goods and services have jumped 23% since OPA controls were abandoned in June, 1946.

While the six-week special session is limited to problems of price control and foreign aid, a list of problems big enough to stagger the best of Congresses is awaiting some sort of action.

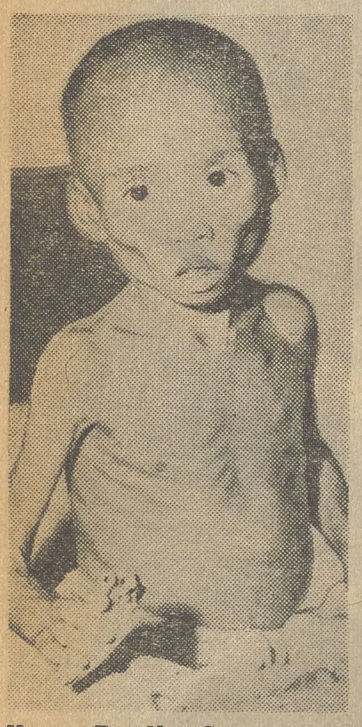
Housing: Demands for passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner long range housing bill are growing insistently stronger. Veterans groups, which in the past had kept a luke-warm attitude towards government housing programs, have been feeling stronger criticism from their members over the present do-nothing situation.

Minimum Wages: CIO witnesses have been appearing before a sub-group of the House Labor Committee with demands for a 75c minimum. The subcommittee has shown no great enthusiasm, but picked up its its ears on numerous occasions when business lobbyists urged down-the-line weakening of the wage-hour law.

Taft-Hartley: Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.) has announced he'll seek "strengthening" of the T-H law through a ban on industry-wide bargaining, but neither Sen. Taft nor Sen. Ball look with favor on such a move during election year.

Social Security: Rising living costs have made a joke out of social security payments—which at best gave none too much buying power.

Civil Rights: Pres. Truman's Report on Civil Rights called for a sweeping legislative program—passage on an anti-polltax bill, anti-lynching legislation, antidiscrimination bills, strengthened civil rights statutes, etc. But J. P. Thomas' unAmerican Activities Committee has hinted it will seek legislation to curb existing liberties.



Near Death: Congress must also vote aid for China if the lives of thousands of Chinese children are to be saved. This little boy was found on a Hengyang street.

Kefauver To Run; Crump 'agin' Him

Rep. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) has announced he will run for U. S. Senator in 1948 —and was immediately denounced by Tennessee Political Boss Ed Crump.

Crump, commenting on the announcement of the liberal Representative, declared: "The New York headquarters of CIO no doubt told him to announce early. Personally, I'd as soon vote for Rep. Vito Marcantonio as vote for Kefauver."

(Note from CIO: No, we didn't, Boss.)

The term of Sen. Tom Stewart (D., Tenn.) runs out in 1949, so he must decide whether he will run again in 1948. Crump and other Democratic leaders have not stated their stand on Stewart.

End of Strike: Putting an end to their long, sometimes rugged, walkout which lasted almost 20 weeks, these members of Local 33 of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, vote to accept terms of the agreement reached by union and company representatives. The workers are employed at Bethlehem Steel's Sparrow's Point shipyard, Maryland. Strikers at all Bethlehem ship plants won a 12-cent an hour increase and the contract was extended to include salaried workers.

Hillman Homes Begun

GROUND-BREAKING ceremonies were scheduled to held Saturday, Nov. 15 at 2 p.m., at the Sidney Hillman Housing Development on the lower East Side in honor of the late president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. The development will provide cooperative apartments for 800 families.

Tentatively known as the East River Apartments, the Sidney Hillman housing project will cover four blocks on Grand Street from Willett to Lewis, and two blocks from Grand to Delancey. The overall project includes the Amalgamated Dwellings, a cooperative enterprise established by the clothing workers' union in 1930 and housing 235 families. Ultimately, it is hoped that the Hillman project will extend for ten blocks on Grand Street to the East River.

Mayor O'Dwyer was scheduled to break ground at Willett and Grand Streets where Unit No. 1 of the project will be erected. The first and second units have already been subscribed, according to ACW President Jacob S. Potofsky, and Abraham Kazan, president of the Amalgamated Housing Corporation and vice president of the East River Apartments. There is still some space open, they said, in Unit No. 3.

CIO Candidates Capture Town

A tight-knit CIO-PAC organization in the mining community of Leadville, Colorado, (population, 7,000) succeeded in placing in office an almost 100% CIO city government.

All candidates endorsed by the local PAC were elected. Included were the new mayor, Walter F. O'Brien, a former State Senator, and six city councilmen. Five of the councilmen are members of the CIO Mine Mill and Smelter Workers.

Commented Michael Livoda, CIO regional director: "This again proves to us that if we organize ourselves in the organization on the basis of PAC under the leadership and honest efforts of those who form the membership, we can do a good job in bringing the government back to the people."

SHIP GETS 12c RISE AS STRIKE ENDS

THE CIO Shipyard Workers' strike, which had tied up nine Bethlehem Steel Co. shipyards for 136 days, came to an end last week as workers in each yard ratified terms of an agreement providing a 12c hourly increase.

The strike was the longest of any this year, having begun three days before the Taft-Hartley Act was passed by Congress over the President's veto June 29.

Not covered by the master agreement is the company's Patapsco ship dismantling yard which employes 900 workers. Disagreement here centers around the wage issue, union officials stated.

In addition to the wage increase, which applies to incentive workers as well as to those paid by the hour, the company agreed, in accompanying letters, to rehire all employes who had been on the payroll on June 25, date of the contract's expiration, without prejudice or discrimination. The union agreed to act without prejudice toward those who had returned to work during the strike.

The strike period will not be considered by the company an interruption of service and will be used in computing vacations and seniority. Employes who have not yet taken vacations will be permitted to do so in accordance with the terms of the old contract, since the new vacation clause is not effective until Jan. 1.

As soon as the union qualifies under the Taft-Hartley Act, maintenance of membership will apply. The union also stated that the contract has been extended to include a number of employes not previously covered by the contract, among them the salaried workers.

The return to work of the 22,000 strikers was accompanied by only one incident at the Key Highway Yard in Baltimore, where 1500 workers were turned away at the gates with the company explanation that there was "no work," a union spokesman claimed.

Another aftermath of the long strike was the sentencing on the day the workers returned to work of three Baltimore strikers to jail terms and fines by Criminal Court Judge Abner Sayler. Convicted of "disorderly conduct and assault," one was sentenced to 30 days in jail plus a $100 fine. The other two were given 10 days in jail and a $50 fine. These cases plus 30 others will be appealed by the union. Eager policemen had arrested a total of 54 strikers in the Baltimore area. Thirteen of the cases were dismissed.

Settlement with Bethlehem leaves idle only the U. S. Steel's Federal Shipyard, Kearny, N. J. H. Ross Colwell, regional director of the U. S. Conciliation Service, said that all differences except wording and one clause had been ironed out.

The walkout at its height affected some 70,000 workers in shipyards on the East and Gulf Coasts. The number decreased as individual companies settled, leaving only Bethlehem and Federal to weather the entire strike period.

CIO Indorses Ebasco Strike

President Philip Murray gave the indorsement of the CIO to the strike of the United Office and Professional Workers against Ebasco Services, New York City, a subsidiary of Electric Bond & Share Company, and called on international affiliates for financial support for the strikers.

The Electric Bond & Share Company is reputed to be one of the world's largest public utility companies. Murray's letter to affiliated CIO Unions said, in part:

"The United Office and Professional Workers of America and its members have been engaged in a strike for more than ten weeks at the main office of the Ebasco Services, Inc., a subsidiary of Electric Bond Share Company. Ebasco Services is one of the nation's key technical and engineering design offices.

"The CIO has endorsed this strike as of vital importance in the organization of the workers in this important field. The spirit of the strikers is magnificent. The time has now arrived to show that our whole movement is in support of this endeavor to bring about decent collective bargaining with the Ebasco Services.

"Mail checks to UOPWA Vice-Pres. Lewis Allan Berne at 1860 Broadway, New York, New York. I urge that you act promptly on this."

REUTHER WINS UAW CONTROL

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PRES. WALTER REUTHER and his supporters won a commanding majority of the officer and international executive board posts at the 11th annual convention of the CIO Auto Workers last week in Atlantic City.

These were the highlights of the huge UAW* parley at Convention Hall:

1. Reuther, elected by a margin of 124 votes 18 months ago, won reelection by a vote of 5593.036 to 1558.437.

2. George Addes, secretary-treasurer of UAW for 12 years, was defeated by a Reuther supporter, Emil Mazey, by a vote of 4833.384 to 2599.447.

3. R. J. Thomas, former head of the union who was defeated for the presidency last year by Reuther, failed of reelection for vice president, being defeated by Richard Gosser, 5053.650 to 2025.-883.

4. The Reuther forces made a clean sweep of the four officers when the other incumbent vice president, Richard T. Leonard, ran second in a three-man race, receiving 1579 votes to 4921 for John W. Livingston, St. Louis, and 508 for Sheldon Tappes, Ford Local 600.

5. The Reuther group won 14 out of the 18 regional directorships to achieve an 18 to 4 lead among the officers and board. (The directors are chosen by roll-call votes of delegates from their respective regions.)

6. The convention by a wide margin approved the action of its board majority in signing the non-communist affidavits (the press gallery was widely apart in its guesses on the size of this vote, taken by a show of hands. The majority said 3 to 1; some said 10 to 1; others 7 to 1; some 5 to 1; a number 2 to 1, and one by a close margin; however, all said the motion passed.)

7. Reuther, commenting in his keynote address on reports of a possible secessionist movement among a few of his opponents, declared "basically and fundamentally, the UAW is anchored firmly in the structure of CIO under the leadership of Philip Murray. No one has the power from within or without to split UAW-CIO." Addes, after his defeat, declared: "The devotion which I have always felt for our union is not lessened; on the contrary, more than ever this is my union."

8. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, addressing the convention, indorsed Reuther for reelection: "I have no words that can flow from me that would provide adequate appreciation for the splendid support that little redhead (pointing to Reuther) has given Phil Murray." He praised the other officers, but said his praise did not constitute an indorsement of them.

(Before the convention, Reuther's group comprised only 7 of the 22 board members and officers on most issues.)

Elections occupied most of the convention's time on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. As the CIO News went to press, the convention was considering resolutions and policy matters.

*Pres. Reuther, in introducing CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray to the convention, said: "There has been going on in this CIO family for almost two years an argument as to whether or not the UAW is the biggest CIO union or the Steelworkers is. As your president, I am unwilling to compromise that. I ask the president of the Steelworkers to at least compromise one thing: While he won't admit that the UAW is the biggest union in the CIO, I hope he will admit that we are the noisiest union in the CIO."

SMILE OF VICTORY: REUTHER IS CARRIED ON ADHERENTS' SHOULDERS

Murray and Politics

The convention hall was well covered with posters urging votes for various candidates when the first test vote came on Sunday, the opening day. That test was on a minority report backed by Reuther adherents, which called for election of the four officers on the third day of the convention (Tuesday) and election of board members on the fifth day (Thursday). The majority report favored the fifth and seventh days. The minority won, 3 to 1.

Murray mentioned the elections in his speech on Monday, when he remarked: "I had a lot of advice last night and this morning from a lot of people. I swear to the good Lord that had I accepted the advice of everyone who came around to see me I would have submitted to you the greatest mess of tripe that was ever submitted to a convention."

Of the incumbent officers, he remarked:

Reuther: "Walter Reuther was elected a year ago last March. I took his little right hand in mine and I patted his red locks—Walter, that is not meant in the sense that some of the boys are going to take that—and I said, 'Walter, I am going to support you.' He said: 'Phil, I am going to support you.' And he did and I did. I have no words that would provide adequate appreciation for the splendid support that little redhead has given Phil Murray."

Thomas: "There is old R. J. He makes his mistakes, yes. He has a big heart. Sometimes a little mischievous, but nevertheless not a bad guy."

Addes: "I would regard myself as an ingrate if I did not tell this as I see it. I think George Addes is a man of integrity. He has certain outstanding qualities."

Leonard: (Murray did not mention Leonard in his address. After a question at a press conference, he sent a telegram to Leonard, which was read to the convention, and which said: "I inadvertently did not mention your splendid contribution to the success of your organization.")

In the portion of his speech concerning the elections, Murray declared: "I wish to God it were possible to take out of your union all of the power politics and all of the power caucuses that you have . . . I am told that some people from outside your union organization are trying to interfere and create division. I don't think there is a living soul anywhere in the U. S.—and I don't care who he is—or a union anywhere in the U. S.—or a leader of a union anywhere in the U. S. who can create destructive division within the UAW."

Nominated against Reuther were Joseph A. deVito, Local 45, Cleveland Fisher, a steward, and Eddie Murphy, of the miscellaneous section of Local 205, Detroit Amalgamated.

DeVito, who said he had served in World War II for several years as an enlistee, accused Reuther of "red-baiting" and said that Reuther's tactics might lead to a third world war.

Murphy asked that no demonstration be put on in support of him.

DeVito received 303.824 votes; Murphy got 35.761; delegates carrying 1218.852 votes abstained; 344.390 were absent.

Reuther's nomination set off the first of five old-fashioned snake-dancing demonstrations, in which delegates waved banners and placards, shouted, sang, banged tables and paraded up to and across the stage. The demonstrations were put on by the supporters of Reuther-Mazey-Gosser-Livingston and by supporters of Addes.

The rollcalls each lasted nearly four hours.

Addes: No Ill Will

After his defeat, Addes went to the platform microphone and declared:

"This is a new experience for me. Today, I stand before you under circumstances which differ from those which existed at the first 10 conventions of our union.

"For 12 long, difficult and trying years it has been my privilege to serve as secretary-treasurer. In a few hours, I will be relieved of those responsibilities and you would rightfully consider me a hypocrite if I were to say it meant nothing to me. Of course it does.

"But I say with all the sincerity of my being that the devotion which I have always felt for our union is not lessened by my defeat. On the contrary, more than ever this is my union; more than ever, are the trials and the reverses and the sacrifices of our members, my trials, my reverses and my sacrifices.

"Our union has always been a fighting union and we must let nothing change that. I believe that I have been a fighting member and I pledge to you that I will let nothing change that either. To Brother Mazey I say, 'You have my sincerest wishes for a successful administration.' To those delegates who voted against me I say, 'I bear you not the slightest ill will. You did your duty as you saw it.' To the delegates who voted for me I say, 'I am supremely proud of your manifestation of trust and confidence in me.'

"May God bless you."

Reuther, in reply, said: "On be-

HAUNTING REFRAIN

The stupid words that men speak often come back to haunt them.

If you don't believe it, just ask some of our Congressmen about words they uttered when they were killing OPA. They'd like to forget—but ask them, anyhow.

Ask them if they really didn't know (deep down inside) that prices would do a bit of skyrocketing if price control was removed prematurely.

And—just for the heck of it—ask them why it was that CIO leaders called the turn on what would happen while they, themselves, missed the boat so badly.

They probably will squirm a bit—and some of them may claim that their "kill-OPA" statements were misinterpreted.

We bring this painful matter up for discussion here because Congress goes back into session this week to consider a foreign aid program.

Our contention is that this country must help Western Europe get back on it feet and that, by all means, we must do what we can to prevent starvation abroad.

Our helping Europe, however, can throw our domestic economy into worse shape than it is now unless certain safeguards are taken.

The CIO maintains that price control and rationing are two of the necessary safeguards.

The lawmakers who killed OPA and the groups which encouraged them to do so will start chanting the same old refrain if a proposal to reinstitute rationing and price control is brought up in Congress—as it should be.

If you want to know what that haunting refrain sounds like, turn to Pages 6 and 7 of this issue of the CIO News. Printed there are the words which, if you like, you can sing to the tune of High Prices Blues.

DYING DIFFERENTIAL

The CIO has been whittling away for a long time at the North-South pay rate differential.

It lopped off a penny here and two cents there. It eliminated the differential in some industries and narrowed the gap in others. Progress was slow—but progress was made.

The CIO announced when it opened its Southern drive last year that one of its objectives was to bring the pay of Southern workers up to the level of pay in other parts of the Nation.

The skeptics said it couldn't be done—or that it would take years and years to complete the job. They said it might be done in some industries, but that the textile industry would be the big hold-out.

That's why we're delighted to point out that the Textile Workers Union of America has brought the pay of its Dixie members to a par with textile pay in the North and East.

A 9% pay hike on Nov. 6 turned the trick. It also added about $19 millions annually to the income of its Southern members.

Congressmen, Don't Play Politics With This Crisis!

By ALLAN L. SWIM

FATE has dumped a lot of tragic problems right into the lap of the Congress that reconvenes today.

They are problems nearly as serious as the war which created them—a war which caused men to lay petty partisan politics aside and work together for a common cause.

The cause was the establishment of peace—peace that did not come with the end of conflict on bloody battlefields.

The job is far from completed. That's why President Truman called Congress back onto session.

PEACE and hunger do not travel hand in hand. Congressmen should remember this as they start considering what this country can do to aid Europe.

Food alone will not assure democracy in those countries which want political self determination. Those inclined to think that money alone will solve all problems should never forget this.

Naturally food is of primary importance. So is money, which will buy food and finance industrial equipment.

But they—food and money—are not enough.

MUCH of the world, to put it bluntly, is in a hell of a mess!

It needs guidance as much as it needs food for the shrinking bellies of its people. It needs the kind of guidance that comes from the setting of good examples.

Congress should always bear in mind that hungry, disillusioned men and women are more convinced by performances than by promises.

It's difficult to sell the American form of government to Europeans who want real democracy but know that we disfranchize many of our own citizens.

Those abroad who have read the record of our civil rights violations wonder why we complain so bitterly about infringement on the human rights of those who live outside our borders.

Those in other nations who have read about our Taft-Hartley Act and the beating of union organizers in the South must be a bit skeptical about the claims of our political leaders that the U. S. wants a free, democratic trade union movement.

Most of us believe we have the best government and the best country in the world—but do those with whom we must deal abroad share our views?

OUR foreign problems create a serious domestic problem—what to do about living costs.

They've been increasing steadily for a long time, and there is every indication that a real European aid program would cause them to go even higher.

The pinch on the average wage-earner is too tight. Present inflation threatens our future.

If price control and rationing are necessary to prevent a worse crisis, they should be imposed—even if we dislike the idea of governmental control over commodities.

YES, our problems are serious—and the temptation to play partisan politics with them will be great.

Some men, no doubt, will try to make political hay for '48 out of the food shortage of '47.

The greedy, no doubt, will attempt to take advantage of the crisis to line their pockets and their bank vaults with silver.

But, unless the game on Capitol Hill is played carefully and patriotically by a majority of our lawmakers, the present Congress may go down in history as the one which muffed an apportunity to establish peace and was largely responsible for a major depression.

"Poor dear, only one more year until election day."

Murray's Views On U. S. System

(Following is a statement prepared by Pres. Murray for the influential national newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, on how free enterprise should function to help the American people.)

By PHILIP MURRAY

The best way to preserve the American system of democracy and free enterprise is to make that system work better than it ever has before.

Let us admit, first, that there have been many abuses of the system. Then let us take practical steps to secure remedies.

The real and immediate danger to our country lies more in the economic than the political portion of the so-called "American system," because there is where we find the greatest abuses.

Too many men have taken "free enterprise" to mean freedom to exploit and profiteer. Through the creation of monopolies, the control of patents, and the building of huge industrial empires, a comparatively few men have been able to eliminate much of the competition that is needed to keep the nation on an even keel.

ANY competitive system of enterprise will die unless it remains reasonably free from domination by men of great wealth and power. There is nothing wrong with bigness itself, and we must have great wealth if this country is to prosper. But we cannot afford to have our wealth distributed improperly, so that a few have much and many have little.

Our political system needs to be improved so that important decisions are made by a majority of the people.

Two steps in this direction would be elimination of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting and revision of the rules which sharply limit participation in some state primary elections.

We must never get into the habit of thinking that something is best for us today merely because it served us reasonably well years ago. Our ability to meet changing times, to adopt new techniques to find substitutes for depleted resources and to use our knowledge to obtain new and better things has made our nation great.

We should never become so hidebound conservative that we refuse to accept progress.

It is well to remember that radical changes in political systems usually occur when economic systems function badly. It is during periods of hunger and depression that nations swing far to the left or right.

Survey Problems Of Working Mothers

A survey of the problems of working mothers is being planned by the New York Women's Trade Union League with the aid of the Natl. Opinion Research Center. Volunteers will be used in taking the poll.

The League's survey will be aimed at finding the extent of the need of mothers for day care of their children. They will be asked such questions as how many hours each day they have to be away from their children, and whether they need all-day or after-school child care centers.

Here's One Way To Assure Defeat

THIS is the story of four persons who didn't win smashing victories.

One is a former school teacher, an active member of the Congregational Church and the wife of the Ohio CIO director of education.

One is a Presbyterian minister—a Negro who formerly was professor of sociology at a Southern college.

The third is a college professor—a man who served in two wars and is a reserve officer in the Navy.

The fourth is an attorney who is keenly interested in educational problems.

Together they went down in defeat.

EARLY this fall the four filed notice of their intention to run for election as members of the Columbus, Ohio, Board of Education.

But, so it turned out, these four weren't favored by the Columbus powers-that-be. The Ohio CIO Council Radio Department prepared a program script which tells the story as follows:

"Well, the newspapers didn't like it—the Chamber of Commerce didn't like it—and the Ohio Association of Trade Executives didn't like it. And so the smear was on. The kick-off came in a special story published by the Columbus iDspatch. There were not tangible charges of Communism directed against the four candidates. No, that's much too crude, and then there is always the danger of libel action."

THE Dispatch story said, "Very little is known about the group . . . except that they are holding regular meetings at a church on West 1th Ave."

Then the point was made that during an effort to obtain a legislative probe of alleged Communism in Ohio colleges some student groups supposedly tainted by radical ideas met at the same 11th Ave. church.

"Don't you see how neatly the impression was left in the minds of the public that the four were Communists or Communist sympathizers?" asked the CIO radio writer.

"The ordinary reader left the story with the impression that the four candidates were dangerous radicals who had formed a diabolical plot to seize the school system and teach our children frightening heresay."

NEXT step in the campaign, said the CIO writer, came when Mrs. Gladys Gordon, executive secretary of the Ohio Federation of Republican Women's Clubs, made a speech in which she charged the four candidates were Communists.

The candidates presented Mrs. Gordon with proof that her statement was false and, the CIO writer said, Mrs. Gordon issued a complete retraction.

"The Columbus newspapers were aware of this retraction," the CIO writer said. "They knew the facts, and yet not one word of this story appeared in their editions."

THEN those opposing the four candidates changed their tactics, pinning their hopes on a rumor campaign.

"It was private word of mouth now," the script writer said. "It was insidious rumor set off here and there. It was quiet whispering from one ear to another—'They're Communists—they're Communists.'

"And the assault was effective. Citizens over the city were bewildered by the dozens of rumors, murmurs and whisperings. Many innocent citizens were taken in by this propaganda drive."

THE newspapers cut loose again—but they made no specific charges against specific people.

Finally the bewildered candidates submitted a statement to the Columbus newspapers, categorically denying the charges made against them.

The statement was not printed in Columbus.

The newspapers said they never carried news about the candidates on the day before an election.

And on election day the four candidates were defeated.

Anthracite Area Judge Is Red In the Face Over T-H Affidavits

LACKAWANNA County, Pa., is rich in anthracite coal and union traditions. Scores of thousands of miners have educated their children to be loyal to the mine union or to other unions.

But, last week, out of Scranton, Lackawanna's main city, came an anti-Labor court decision that left many a Lackawannan, both resident and emigrant, shaking their heads in shock.

Members of the CIO American Communications Association, have been on strike against Radio Station WGBI. They have been picketing that station and one of its chief advertisers, the Globe Store.

The station and the store entered the county court to seek an injunction limiting or barring ACA picketing.

The case came up before Judge Will Leach.

THE Taft-Hartley law was cited by the employers' attorneys, though the court is a state court and though Pennsylvania has a rather stringent state law which might be called at least a Small Taft-Hartley.

The Taft-Hartley Law provides that certain officers of international and local unions, if they wish to use the services of the Nat'l Labor Relations Board, must sign non-Communist affidavits and file financial information.

There is a means of penalizing a person for a false affidavit, but the law does not say union officers must sign the affidavit or sign financial reports.

THOSE facts have been explained carefully to their clients by labor and management attorneys. (The ACA has refused to sign the affidavit.)

That's why Judge Leach's 14-page ruling last week was so startling. For, in his ruling, Leach wrote:

"A strike under the guidance of any union unwilling to declare its allegiance to the U. S. should be enjoined."

Leach's decision, which consisted mostly of a diatribe against Moscow and the Communist Party, against ACA in particular and unions in general, called for issuance of an injunction against picketing of the Globe Store and drastic curbing of picketing of the station itself.

"The Soviet government," he stated, "is an enemy of the United States and has organizations working herein trying to overthrow that government. The officers of the defendant union will not even take oath that its members are not adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, which is part of the definition of treason given by the Constitution of the United States."

FOLLOWING a prolonged description of life in the Soviet, which he compared to a "termite den" the Judge continued:

"The strike being directed by an organization that does not qualify as a bargaining agent under the laws of the U. S. is illegal and the actions of the defendants in pursuance of its objectives are illegal."

(The largest union in the Scranton and Lackawanna area, John L. Lewis' AFL United Mine Workers, has refused to sign the non-Communist affidavit.)

Allan L. Swim, CIO publicity director, requested that the Saturday Evening Post give the CIO "equal space" to answer an article by J. Mack Swigert, law partner of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), defending the Taft-Hartley law.

In reply, Ben Hibbs, editor of the Post, wrote Swim:

"We do not consider the Post as a forum type publication which must always devote equal space to both sides of any topic. We frankly take sides on many important questions, and we believe that to be our right—just as most American publications, including the labor press, take sides.

"You labor union publicity people succeeded in tying the ridiculous 'slave labor' tag on the Taft-Hartley law and getting it thus identified on the front page of practically every newspaper in the country. We believed it was high time that some publication answer these accusations in a dignified and fair-minded way, and we believe the Swigert article did that."

Hibbs wound up by suggesting that Swim write a letter to the editor—about 400 words. (The Swigert article ran several thousand words.)

OFFICIAL U. S. DATA ON PRICE INCREASE

Here are figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics which show how much prices of articles that everybody needs have risen since the repeal of OPA. The index figure of 100 is for the 1935-39 period.

	June, 1946	August, 1947	Increase
Meat, poultry, fish.....	134.0	228.4	70.4%
Dairy products	147.8	183.8	24.4%
Eggs	147.1	212.3	44.3%
Apparel	157.2	185.9	18.3%
House furnishing	156.1	184.2	18%

Rising prices since June, 1946, last effective period for OPA, have set record after record. Just last week, the fourth monthly record in a row was set.

I ACCUSE!

Rep. Louis C. Rabaut (D., Mich.): "I rise to extend my sympathies to the American people. I say you have my sympathy for what has taken place here thus far in scuttling OPA extension and I fully realize that your disgust at what has taken place is equal to the resentment that now is mine. The values of the savings, the bonds, the insurance policies, the allotments of the GI's and the benefits to old-age pensioners are all drastically reduced by the action of this House. In a word, the general welfare of the Nation has been relegated to the proverbial ashcan."

Out of Mouths Of Control Foes

IN JUNE, 1946, OPA was killed, to all intents and purposes.

Now, with Congress reassembled for a special session on prices and foreign aid, the CIO NEWS reprints remarks of OPA-opponents made during the debate and afterwards:

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.): "Prices somewhat higher than normal tend to increase production. We certainly should not force such a reduction of prices as to interfere with more production."

(From U. S. News of Nov. 7, 1947: "Production is still climbing." U. S. News chart showed that factory production index for Spring 1946 was 155; for the third quarter of 1947 it was 187½.)

Rep. Edward O. McCowen (R., O.): "Let us make the break now, and then let the price-control act die its natural death. There will be confusion for a few months . . . then confusion will end, prices will be stabilized and production will be normal and sufficient."

Rep. John Taber (R., N. Y.): "OPA at the present time is the chief promoter of inflation."

Rep. Henry Larcade (D., La.): OPA "was run in a high-handed, dictatorial and discriminating manner, treating not only the members of Congress but the people of the country as a whole with disdain, disrespect and discourtesy."

Rep. Reid F. Murray (R., Wis.): "I do not want to vote for any more money for OPA and thus increase the dangers of starvation. . . . Chester Bowles (then OPA chief) and the other agencies are there to keep businessmen from making a profit."

Rep. Jessie Sumner (R., Ill.): "Subsidies (then part of the Administration's price program) are just OPA's black-market way of concealing the fact the cost of living is going up and up and your money is buying less and less and less."

(According to Government figures, you have to pay $1.65 now for what you paid $1.00 in 1938.)

Rep. William Lemke (R., N. D.): "Today the question is should the OPA be liquidated—abolished? My answer is that it should never have been created. It is an un-American, illegitimate child. It was born of foreign parentage."

Rep. Carl T. Curtis (R., Neb.): "OPA is a sham and a fraud. It is one of the prime causes of inflation."

Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.): "The qualification for a job in OPA is to know Prof. Frankfurter, and to be close to Frankfurter."

(Felix Frankfurter, a Supreme Court Justice, has been sharply criticized for joining with the more conservative judges in recent rulings.)

Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R., Wis.): "OPA is like that famous bird, the whiffenpoof. As it flies it always looks behind."

Rep. Frank Carlson (R., Kan.) (now Governor of Kansas and a member of the House Tax Advisory Committee, whose recent report has been attacked by CIO as favoring the higher brackets): "Everyone familiar with production of and marketing of meat products must be convinced that OPA is fully responsible for lack of meat on the counters. It is practically impossible for a housewife to buy a piece of meat."

(In Washington last week, chain stores were selling "U. S. Commercial grade" porterhouse steak for 59c a pound. U. S. Commercial is fourth in the Americen Meat Institute's rating of beef grades: (a) prime; (b) choice; (c) good; (d) Commercial; (e) utility; (f) bull; (g) cannon-cutter.)

Reps. Frederick C. Smith (R., O.) and Howard H. Buffett (R., Neb.): "OPA . . . this economic narcotic."

That's how some of the Congressmen who helped make prices what they are today, were talking back in 1946. And here's how some of the forces behind them were talking:

D. K. Howe, pres., Amer. Butter Inst.: "50% of all butter is going into the black market and selling for 80c or more a pound."

(Last week, butter was 85c a pound in Washington; it had gone above $1.00 in September, 1947, until a buyers' strike ended the upward trend.)

NAM: ". . . prices will be fair and reasonable to all."

(One witness before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report—a mother — said her year-old child had never had any whole milk because the price was so high.)

Again, NAM: "OPA means low production; low production means black markets; black markets mean needlessly high prices."

And . . . "The members of NAM have no intention of rocking the inflation boat—now or at any other time."

And . . . "Remove price controls—this is the way you can get the goods you want at prices you can afford to pay."

(A survey by the conservative Cleveland Press said "Many of the most earnest mothers insisted that for months they have not had money to replace clothing and household necessities. If this is a prosperous era, these people say generally: 'give us a depression'.")

And, then, there are outside-Congress statements galore by Sen. Taft, including these

On campaign tour, Sept. 22, 1947: "Obviously, these (high) prices are the result of the policies of the Administration which has controlled the Congress for the last 14 years."

(On June 12, 1946, the Senate passed the Taft Cost - Plus Amendment, which, according to the Democratic Natl. Committee, "cut the heart out of the price control bill. It provided that manufacturers and processors should receive prices based on their 1941 price levels, plus any subsequent increases in cost. 1941 was the highest profit year of any." This Democratic statement was issued before the boom year of 1947.)

Taft, before publishers, April 25, 1947: "The general price level, as I see it, is not above the wage level and the present price situation constitutes no tremendous emergency."

Taft, on July 25, 1947: "We can eat something else (he said that again in September). The law of supply and demand will keep a kind of ceiling on—if prices are too high buy less."

Finally, it will be well for all to keep a special eye and a special ear in this session on:

Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott (R., Mich.), who offered the amendment which limited OPA's extension nine months rather than a year.

Again Wolcott: Offered and won an amendment which required item-by-item, cost-plus pricing for producers, processors and distributors for every commodity. (Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.) said this would "double the cost of living").

And, again Wolcott: "To discontinue agricultural subsidies after Jan. 1, 1947." Opponents said this would "rob food from the stomachs of the poor."

Rep. John M. Flannagan (D., Va.): Offered and won an amendment to discontinue meat subsidies.

Rep. Ed. Gossett (D., Tex.): Offered and won an amendment to remove price controls as soon as production of any commodity reached the 1940-41 level. Opponents said this would set up a false standard for decontrol, in that it would consider only production, but not demand, which has increased many times.

And keep a very special eye and very special ear on—

CIO Stood Firm For Keeping OPA

IN STRIKING contrast to the statements of many Senators and Congressmen that appear on this page, the CIO was unequivocally opposed to killing OPA.

The CIO registered its opposition to all crippling amendments. Its leaders issued warnings that inflation would follow if OPA were killed.

Not only did they testify before Congressional committees against the crippling amendments but delegation after delegation of CIO members visited the Capitol to protest the emasculation of the law. Here are some of the highlights of the fight:

CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a personal message to CIO members printed on Page 1 of the CIO News March 4, 1946, stated:

"Members of the CIO must join with millions of other Americans in repelling attacks on price control. If price ceilings are destroyed and inflation results it is the worker who will suffer first.

"With the same persistence and energy that has marked our historic fight for wage increases we must now resist the attacks of the profiteers on price control."

The CIO executive board, meeting in March, 1946, warned that the Nat'l. Association of Manufacturers and the real estate and other lobbies were working through a coalition of Republicans and reactionary southern Democrats to eliminate price control.

President Murray in April wired all CIO unions:

"The House of Representatives has just killed price control and destroyed wage increases we won through painful struggle. If the Senate and the President cannot check this drive, the country is faced with dangerous inflation.

"The House majority betrayed the American people by passing a series of crippling amendments which will send the cost of living sky-high."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey testified later in April before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee after the House had passed crippling OPA amendments:

"Some business organizations are willing to gamble with our economic welfare to gain additional profits at the expense of the whole nation."

The CIO views were echoed in June by a number of top-government officials including Chester Bowles, then Economic Stabilization Director and former OPA head, who asserted:

"With a good price control bill, free of dangerous compromise and corner-cutting, we can maintain relatively stable prices and rents during the coming months. We can buckle down as a united nation to the tremendous task of stepping up civilian production to levels far above the peacetime record . . .

"But with a weakened price control bill, hampered by compromising amendments or without adequate appropriations or subsidy funds, the cost of living is bound to move upward at an increasing tempo . . . There is no question that tens of millions of people would suffer needlessly — businessmen a well as farmers, white collar workers and factory workers."

Secy. of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach said:

"Renewal of the nation's safeguards against inflation will enable us to go forward to levels of production which will help assure real long-range prosperity for all groups.

"Without these safeguards, I fear that industry may move into a new cycle of wage demands and work stoppages, which will do irreparable harm to our reconversion efforts."

OPA Administrator Paul Porter warned:

"Let's look at the situation which would face a typical American family next year if the Congress were to take off all controls now, or if, as a result of weakening amendments, the whole structure of controls should collapse. Let us examine the budget of a family which is spending $2,500 a year and see what would happen to it if the inflation approached 40% in the next 12 months . . .

"At the year's end our typical family would have to spend at the rate of $250 more a year for food, $150 more for clothing, $250 more for rent, and $300 more for miscellaneous goods and services, if it were to maintain its standard of living. What had cost $2,500 when the year began would cost $3,450 at its close."

Late in June, 1946, when the Senate gave its endorsement to a compromise bill worked out by the joint House-Senate conference committee and sent it along to the White House, Murray said:

"The proposed bill amounts to a repeal of price control, and it would thereby mark the beginning of inflation."

President Truman late in July signed the bill with reluctance. He said:

"I had hoped for a bill under which the government could, with full confidence, assure the people that prices would remain generally stable in the last few critical months of the transition to a free economy.

"The bill falls far short of that hope. I am advised, however, that it is the best bill that Congress will now pass."

MURRAY TO CONGRESS

TEXT of CIO Pres. Murray's letter to all members of Congress follows:

"The American people are today greeting with fervent prayer the news that Congress is scheduled to reconvene in special session. Theirs is a prayer that this session may take constructive and immediate action in the grave crisis which produced the emergency call.

"At home American families face with despair the specter of uncontrolled food prices carrying necessities of life beyond the grasp of the people. They face a threat of rent gouge in a period of critical housing shortage. They are overwhelmed by a picture of record profits while the savings of the common people are depleted.

"When individual meat packing companies double and triple their net income in a single year, when the textile industry is earning more than in any previous period in its history—all this while the American people are compelled to feed their families on less than adequate meat rations because of high price levels and are compelled to curtail their clothing purchases for the same reason—then we are entitled to look to Congress for courageous action and not for the farcical procedure of widespread hearings to discover whether the cost of living has gone up.

"IN THE name of common humanity, in the name of the children whose diets are affected by current food costs, in the name of the housewives whose living budgets have been slashed, I urge that you exercise your leadership in Congress for the immediate institution of clear and strong measures to set and hold prices at a point within the reach of the American people by:

"(1) Re-establishing price control and rationing of food, clothing, and other necessities of life.

"(2) Instituting a tax program to recapture speculative and excess profits.

"(3) Eliminating margins on the grain exchanges.

"(4) Conducting an all-out attack upon monopoy and its attendant artificial curtailment of production, creation of scarcity for profit, artificial spiraling of prices and general strangulation of our economy.

"This fight against hunger and privation at home is part and parcel of the urgent struggle against hunger throughout the world. Needy people everywhere deserve and must be given relief. We must help them to feed and clothe themselves, not merely as a gesture of humanitarianism but also because we must recognize that hunger in any part of the world is a threat to the peace and security of all the world.

"These people must be helped freely, ungrudgingly, without discrimination and without attempt to use their need and our aid as means of coercing free but needy people in the exercise of their rights of independence and self-government or to fan the flames of civil warfare.

"The American people are fully prepared to support their leaders in a fight at home and abroad against the enemies of all the world: hunger, cold, homelessness, and privation. We cannot win this fight on one front alone. If we undertake to furnish relief abroad and fail to control our domestic price levels, then every dollar which we elect to use for aid abroad may result in the actual delivery of only 50c worth of food abroad.

"With all the sincerity at my command, I urge and plead that all parties in Congress and all groups within all parties set aside their political differences in a common endeavor rising above party politics to reduce living costs at home immediately and to deliver food to starving people abroad immediately."

I CONFESS!

Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R., Neb.): "Taft! Taft! Everybody is always talking about what Taft has done to the OPA.

"I'm the fellow that knocked out meat control, and I've done more to that bill than anybody else."

HEY, KIDS; NO UNION LABEL: A stock advertisement of Gene Autry's "blue jeans" calls to attention a lot of labels, but fails to mention that the union label is missing. The cowboy singer-film-radio-rodeo star whose income is reputed to be $250,000 annually receives royalties from western-style overalls manufactured under sweatshop conditions. Wages to workers who produce the Autry-autographed product average about $20 a week.

Workers Strike Over Low Pay At Gene Autry Jeans Plant

HENRY RABUN

RAZZLE - DAZZLE posters and newspaper ads scream: "Buy a pair of Gene Autry blue jeans and you'll get a colored picture of the famous cowboy singer and his horse."

Workers who manufacture the Autry jeans at Waco, Texas, reply: "Visit the factory where Gene's jeans are made and you'll get an uncolored picture of some of the worst sweatshop conditions in the garment trade."

Since October 14 approximately 200 workers, the majority of whom are 'teen-age girls or widowed mothers, have been on recognition strike against J. M. Wood Manufacturing Co., where the Autry garments are manufactured. Members of CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers struck after weeks of futile efforts to talk with the stubborn management.

Autry received a full report of the strike causes from a worker committee. The strikers asked Autry to use his influence with management in an attempt to improve wages and working conditions in the Wood shop.

Autry replied that he had no influence on management policy. He added that he received "only a small royalty" from the product which sells under his autograph.

The workers who manufacture the western-style overall also receive only a small return off the finished product, according to ACWA Int'l. Rep. George Lambert. Under the speed-up, a worker is fortunate to earn $19 or $20 a week under the 50c an hour scale. Working conditions are on the same low level with wages.

A 10c an hour raise last June slowed the ACWA's campaign to organize the Wood plant, but the drive hit high gear in late summer when the management cut wages back to the original 50c.

CAN'T AFFORD AUTRY JEANS: Mrs. Addie Payne, Waco widow, cannot afford to buy her children the high-priced Gene Autry blue jeans on the $20 a week salary she receives for producing the western overalls. She has been on strike since October 14 at the J. M. Wood Manufacturing Co. in Waco, which manufactures the cowboy pants endorsed by the western movie actor.

Carey Off For WFTU

THE issue of foreign aid to Europe will be placed on the agenda of the World Federation of Trade Unions when the nine-man WFTU executive bureau opens its sessions in Paris Nov. 18.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who will be present at the sessions, said the CIO delegation would bring up the question—even though it had not previously been placed on the discussion list—since "it certainly is the most important subject facing us there."

Representing CIO will be Carey; Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, a vice-president of the WFTU, Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs; and Elmer Cope, Steel union official who is now in Paris serving as a WFTU assistant secretary-general. John Abt, general counsel of the clothing union, will accompany the group as an adviser to Rosenblum.

In a press conference just before he left for Europe, Carey said that he had no intention of "engaging in an ideological discussion with anybody."

HE denied published reports that the CIO would ram Marshall plan endorsement down the throats of the bureau members on threat of CIO's quitting the world labor organization, and Soviet claims that the aid-Europe program is a "Wall St. proposal."

The WFTU bureau comprises Rosenblum and representatives of labor union groups in the Soviet, England, France, Italy Netherlands, Latin America and China.

Carey cited the CIO convention resolution and Pres. Murray's convention addresses to indicate that American labor wants no undemocratic interference in the affairs of nations receiving our economic assistance. He noted that the Harriman report—to which he was one of the contributors—specifically pointed to the need for a non-interference policy.

"If there's interference, then that's something that's not in the Marshall program and we'll fight it," Carey told the Washington press conference.

CIO, Carey said, might prove of real assistance in interpreting the aid-Europe plan for labor movements on the Continent and clear up possible misconceptions as to its nature and intentions.

The WFTU, he pointed out, has been more successful than the United Nations in reaching harmonious agreement on troublesome questions, and the CIO has "an unbroken record" of winning acceptance of its viewpoints.

Carey, in answer to questions—scoffed at charges that the WFTU is Russian-dominated. He pointed out that same criticism could presumably be made of the United Nations, since the Soviet is well represented in that organization. He expressed hope that "in my lifetime" the AFL would get away from its propaganda position and affiliate with the WFTU.

The CIO representatives will meet with the French Confederation of Labor at the close of the bureau meeting. The get-to-gether, originally scheduled for New York, was postponed when the government refused to let two of the French delegates into the country for more than 72 hours—all of them to be spent in the New York city area.

Food for Thought: William Belton (left) has been arrested on charges that he was operating a CIO farmers' cooperative without a license. Morris Boyle (right), president of Rubber Workers' Local 131, continued to operate the market after Belton was seized on complaints of grocery interests.

Arrest Fails To Halt Co-op

A MANAGER of a non-profit farmers' market, operated in Los Angeles by the CIO, has been arrested upon complaint of grocery interests.

The market was under the direction of William Belton, who was arrested last week on a charge of "operating a market without a license." He was released under $200 bail. Morris Boyle, president of the Goodyear Rubber Workers' Local 131, took over after Belton's arrest.

Belton had applied for apermit, but said he was told that on the grocers' protest farmers would have to obey the rule which says they must move their trucks every 30 seconds at the cooperative. CIO officials say they have not observed such a procedure at grocers' markets.

Belton said the market was opened without a permit because the CIO did not want fresh food to spoil.

Judge Stanley Moffatt, of the San Antonio township court, refused to issue an injunction against the market, declaring that it "was strange that there was so much concern about the CIO."

Union Researcher Sees Steel Companies Endangering Plans To Aid Europe

OTIS Brubaker, research director of the United Steelworkers, told the government's top economic group last week, the refusal of some important steel makers to expand their plant has already put them in opposition to "requests for aid from the western European countries."

Brubaker asked the Council of Economic Advisers to advise Pres. Truman on the need for a labor-industry-government conference to draw up a joint program for steel expansion.

Noting that the USA-CIO had made such a suggestion when he appeared before the Martin subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee two months ago, the steel union official said:

"This course of action is even more urgent at this time because the developments in western European countries have intensified the need and demand for American steel capacity expansion."

THE union research officer voiced conviction that the steel industry's refusal to expand its capacity is prompted by "considerations which reflect normal, conservative investment and business practices."

"The need however, is national and even international," Brubaker told the Council. "It affects all of our people—not just the investors and businessmen. Every branch of government, therefore, must offer its support to an expansion program."

The steel industry should expand so as to produce at least ten million tons more a year than the 91.2 million ton capacity which it listed at the beginning of the year, Brubaker said.

The steel industry's attitude springs from several factors, in part the desire to sell only finished steel for export so that it can make better and more profitable use of its facilities, and its "real fear" of the future, he declared.

"The union has been strongly urged to take a similar selfish or narrow approach to the foreign aid requests or run the risk of accentuation of the unemployment and sporadic employment which have been characteristic of our steel fabricating industry membership for many months.

"THUS, world needs for steel make some immediate action on the capacity problem even more imperative because it is unreasonable to expect that a union's leadership can, over a protracted period of time, urge a course of action which may mean unemployment for its people."

Brubaker said there were no indications that the Martin subcommittee has acted or taken under consideration the union's earlier suggestions for output expansion.

"Failure to move rapidly in this matter is extremely unfortunate, particularly so since the full impact of the export program for foreign aid is now becoming known," he commented.

"It now becomes even more imperative that there be expansion immediately."

Latimer Preparing Pension Plan For CIO Steelworkers

MURRAY W. Latimer, research director of the recently completed President's Guaranteed Wage Study, has been retained by the CIO Steelworkers to prepare a welfare plan for U. S. Steel in cooperation with the company.

The Steelworkers and U. S. Steel agreed last April that such a survey should be made. The study was to be completed in November, but the time has been extended.

Latimer, who is also former chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, has formed an industrial relations consulting firm under his own name in Washington.

LATIMER

Prior to his appointment as chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, Latimer was an executive of Industrial Relations Counselors, Inc., of New York, where he helped to set up the pension and welfare programs of numerous companies. He is the author of the two-volume work, "Industrial Pension Systems in the U. S. and Canada," and a companion volume, "Trade Union Pension Systems in the U. S. and Canada."

In 1934 and 1935, as chairman of a special committee of the President's Committee on Economic Security, he directed the preparation of titles I, II, and VIII of the original Social Security Act.

In 1937 Latimer aided in negotiating the agreement between railroad managers and railroad labor organizations under the terms of which litigation contesting the constitutionality of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 was dropped.

In 1943, Latimer was assigned to the State Department as chief executive officer of its emergency office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation Operations.

Latimer was born in Clinton, Miss., on January 6, 1901, and was educated at Mississippi College, Harvard and Columbia. Before entering his business and government career, he was a supervisor of research in the Bureau of Business Research of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

Brophy Will Go To UN Parley

DIRECTOR of CIO Councils John Brophy will represent the CIO as one of the non-governmental advisers to the U. S. Delegation at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment which will convene in Havana, Cuba, Nov. 21. Some 50 to 60 countries will take part in the meeting.

Purpose of the conference is to decide upon the draft charter of the International Trade Organization drawn up at Geneva, Switzerland, April-August, 1947, to promote a balanced and expanding world economy by assuring a large and steadily growing volume of real income and effective demand, and by increasing production, consumption, and exchange of goods.

One section of the charter of particular interest to labor is the section dealing with full employment, in which it is made clear that avoidance of unemployment is not only the domestic concern of each individual country, but is also essential for realizing the purposes and objectives of ITO.

YWCA To Conduct Union Day, Nov. 20

YOUNG women in some 200 towns and cities will observe Thursday, Nov. 20, as Union Day, an event sponsored by the YWCA National Industrial Council to promote the interest and understanding of women in the union movement.

Forums, panels, dramatic sketches, movies and quiz programs, based on current topics, are being planned with the cooperation of local union leaders.

Discussions will be focused on the rising cost of living, as the worker's No. 1 economic problem, the Taft-Hartley law, women's wages and hours, the question of equal pay for women and the need for more women to enter labor unions.

"Training and using workers leadership has been an important part of the YWCA work for nearly half a century," said Marlvene Kerchman of Gary, Ind., chairman of the YW's Industrial Council. "Members of labor unions have been serving on YWCA committees and boards for years."

NMU Calls Parley Of Maritime Unions

A national conference of maritime unions, called together by the CIO Maritime Union, was scheduled to convene this week.

Participants in the meeting, which is designed to cement political and economic cooperation among CIO, AFL and independent maritime unions, will tackle the following problems:

- Combatting the Taft-Hartley Act unitedly.
- Mobilizing a united front of all maritime unions in support of the December wage reviews.
- A program to defend and maintain hiring halls and attempt unified demands for 1948 contracts.

The invitation to attend the joint parley was turned down by the AFL's Seafarers Intl. Union, which blasted the CIO call as an "effort to control the waterfront."

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Regional Director Powers Hapgood, Indianapolis, Ind., writes:

"In Muncie, Indiana, on Friday, Oct. 31, an election was held by the Indiana State Department of Labor at the Kaiser Plating Company. The election results were: CIO LIU 1322—26 votes, AFL Metal Polishers—6 votes, No union—5 votes.

"This is the first election of its kind in Indiana. While the State Department of Labor has conducted yes-and-no votes before, it is the first time it has ever consented to conduct an election when two unions were on the ballot. They conducted the election in spite of the protest of the Chamber of Commerce and the N.A.M. because of the fact that these organizations are trying to force unions to come under the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Great credit for the success of this election is due to Jack Reed, president of the Delaware County Industrial Union Council. He is the one who started the ball rolling at this little plant, and he was assisted on several occasions, both in talking to the workers and in negotiating with the company for recognition, by Field Representative H. L. McNamara."

In a recent vote taken amongst the telephone workers (traffic) in Maryland, in which the names of four organizations were on the ballot—TWOC-CIO, AFL, Independent and CWA—CIO received by far the largest vote, CWA and AFL both having been eliminated. The workers are voting now on yes or no for CIO. And the march continues!

A splendid meeting was held by the telephone workers in Parkersburg, W. Va., on Sunday, Nov. 9, and one of the TWOC Vice Chairmen, Jack Moran, addressed the meeting. Plans were laid for intensified statewide activity. They adopted their name in democratic fashion and are now known as West Virginia Telephone Workers Affiliated with TWOC-CIO.

In the utility field, an independent group employed by the Duquesne Light & Power Co. has declared itself in favor of affiliation with CIO, and the president of the organization, Brother George Muller, is conducting a campaign amongst his membership. It is anticipated that it will be a victory for CIO affiliation. The writer met with the officers of this group in Pittsburgh and plans were laid there with Regional Director Federoff to push the campaign forward.

The Auto Workers last week held a convention in Atlantic City. The writer visited there on Sunday, Nov. 9, in company with President Murray, who made a stirring and splendid address which was received with great enthusiasm by the officers and delegates. At this writing, the following officers have been elected for the ensuing term: Walter Reuther, President; Emil Mazey, Secretary-Treasurer; and Richard Gosser and Jack Livingston, Vice Presidents. The assembled convention is determined to reject and resist any attempt of interference with their union by those who may seek to do so. The auto workers can be counted upon to protect their great organization anywhere.

Steelworkers Win Election, But T-H Forces Strike

EMPLOYES of the Consolidated Vultee plant in Nashville, Tenn., went on strike last week in an effort to win the recognition denied them by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The strikers are seeking recognition of the CIO Steelworkers as their bargaining agent. The Steelworkers won by a margin of two to one in a Nat'l. Labor Relations Board election held two days before the T-H Law went into effect. The plant employs 1907 workers.

Previously the company had a contract with the Intl. Association of Machinists, which expired last March. Prior to the contract's expiration a number of employes approached the Steelworkers, expressing dissatisfaction with their present union and asking to be organized by the CIO union. Soon after the company was notified of the CIO majority, it renewed its IAM contract for another year.

Petitioned by the Steelworkers for an election, the NLRB ruled that the existing contract was no bar and ordered the election which resulted in a CIO victory.

Consolidated Vultee, however, relying on the knowledge that the NLRB under the T-H Act could not certify a union which had refused to sign the non-communist affidavits, ignored the majority vote.

Frank Donner, assistant CIO counsel, explained that the majority in the plant has no means of enforcing its right to recognition under the T-H Law except to strike.

Minnesota CIO Holds Convention

Among the main convention speakers were National CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll, Minneapolis Mayor Hubert Humphries, Rep. John A Blatnik (D., Minn.), CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman and Adolph Germer, assistant national CIO organizational director.

The State Council's program for the coming year, as embodied in its resolutions, paralleled exactly that adopted by the National CIO. It included a call for price control and rationing; a fight for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law; and non-political aid to war devastated countries.

Support of the CIO-PAC was reaffirmed by the delegates, who set Dec. 1 as the deadline for completion of the PAC voluntary contribution drive. The drive to register Minnesota voters will begin Jan. 1, and committees of block workers are to be organized by May 1.

Textile Victor Without NLRB

THE CIO Textile Workers, which won a 9% wage increase for its Southern members following a strike threat, is paying dividends.

Just a few days after the wage victory was announced, the Whitfield Spinning Co., Dalton, Ga., announced it would recognize Textile without an NLRB election.

It was the first time in Georgia where such recognition was secured from a textile mill.

The textile wage victory wiped out the North-South wage differential. The minimum hourly pay was raised to 87 cents and the average pay to $1.11 per hour. The former minimum was 80 cents and the average 97 cents.

Prelate's Speech Out in Pamphlet

"I Belong Here"—the dramatic address delivered by Catholic Archbishop Richard J. Cushing of Boston to the CIO convention—has been published in pamphlet form.

"I cannot see how any man in his right mind, certainly how any American with the slightest comprehension of Christianity, can complain about those objectives" which the CIO has set out for American labor, the Archbishop told the convention.

Pres. Murray described the talk as a "masterpiece of logic . . . a remarkable address, a great tribute to labor coming from the heart and soul of a great man—one of us."

Copies of Archbishop Cushing's address may be obtained from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl. N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Rates—5 cents a copy, 100 for $4, 500 for $17.50, 1,000 for $30.

Labor Elects 2 In Cincinnati

THE political machine of Sen. Robert A. Taft took a jarring defeat in Cincinnati when two labor men were declared elected to City Council.

The labor men are Rollin H. Everett, editor of the CIO weekly, The Sun, elected two years ago, and Harry D. Proctor, head of the AFL Painters District Council.

They won in the face of a campaign by the Republican organization, which included an attempt to abolish proportional representation.

The Charter coalition, including Everett and Proctor, of independent Republicans and Democrats, will go into office Jan. 1, the first time in 14 years the Charter Committee has had a majority.

All five men in the majority, Albert D. Cash, Democrat; Charles P. Taft, Liberal brother of Sen. Taft, and Republican independent in local politics; Edward N. Waldvogel, Democrat; Everett and Proctor, were endorsed by the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council.

Taft is a brother of Sen. Taft, but has been a leader of the good government efforts of the Charter Committee since it was founded over 20 years ago.

PR was saved in the election.

Affidavits

The following CIO unions have voted to file non-Communist affidavits and financial affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Law:

Woodworkers, Brewery, Playthings, Textile, Amalgamated, Shipbuilders, Rubber, Paper, Utility, Telephone Organizing Committee, Auto, Glass, Oil, Optical Instrument Org. Com., Newspaper Guild. The Hosiery Workers, who are applying for a charter with the CIO, have also signed.

MURRAY INDORSES REUTHER

half of the union and officers, I wish to thank Brother Addes for the very splendid statement and the very solid attitude he has shown as a trade unionist."

"Brother Addes, I thank you for your position."

The convention then gave a unanimous, standing vote of thanks to Addes.

In addition to Gosser and Thomas, Norman Matthews, co-director of UAW Region 1, Detroit, was nominated, but declined, Gerber in favor of Livingston.

Leonard, after his defeat was officially certified, declared:

"May I extend my congratulations to Bros. Livingston and Reuther?

"It seems to me that victory or defeat in the same degree of humility. They are both a mandate. Defeat demands that a man go back and to try again. Victory insists that he fulfill the promises of his campaign.

"I think I should tell you that I have been promoted. I am going, not downstairs, but upstairs, to work at De Soto. By my work you shall know me to be a loyal soldier of the UAW."

Affidavits Debate

Previous to the convention, Reuther had notified the NLRB that the UAW officers and board, in a telegraphic poll, had approved signing of the affidavits. But, the following day, Thomas announced he had refused to sign.

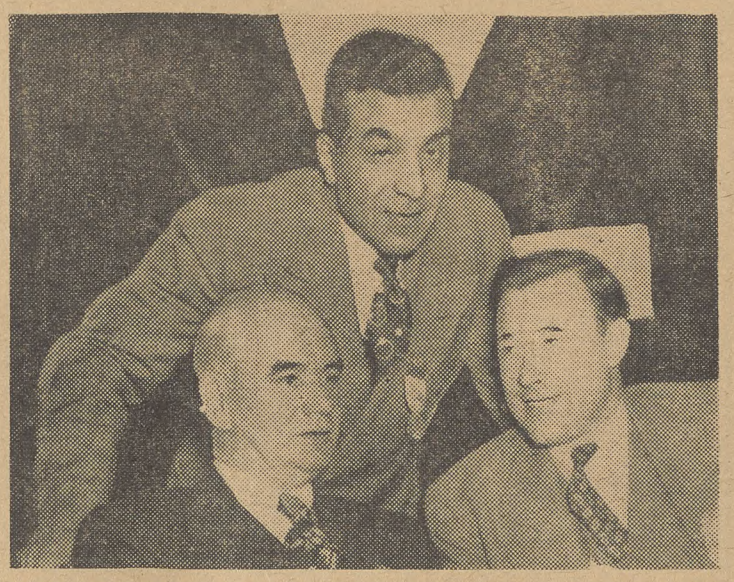
The convention had the choice of two resolutions. The majority, backed by Addes, Thomas and Leonard, assailed the T-H Act and carried an injunction against the officers and board signing.

The minority also denounced the law, but urged signing. Both resolutions pledged a full-dress fight for repeal of the law.

In his address, made two hours before the T-H resolutions were offered, Murray stated:

"There are many misunderstandings as to what the attitude of the CIO is with regard to filing and qualifying before NLRB."

He listed the steps taken by the CIO board in July, which (a) charged counsel of each union with making an analysis of the law and (b) notified each union it must make up its own mind as to filing or qualifying. He said that "due to many misunderstandings, the Boston CIO convention stated that any union which for good, sound and substantial reasons believed that its interests would best be protected by filing and qualifying, should feel free to do so." In other words, he stated that "our affiliates are sovereign, autonomous unions."



CIO PRES. MURRAY, ADDES, REUTHER

Timely

When a delegate at the Auto Workers' convention moved that every incumbent officer and every candidate for office —approximately 48 in all— should have 20 minutes to speak on the Taft-Hartley affidavit resolution, one wag at the press table figured out the time this might take.

The time: 16 hours.

(P. S. The motion was overwhelmingly defeated.)

When the debate opened, Roy G. England, Local 200, Windsor, Canada, Ford, chairman of the committee, called on Leo Fenster, Local 45, to present the majority position.

Excerpts from highlights of the debate:

Fenster: "What have we bought in T-H? Will it protect us? Or will it wreck us? This is a pig in the poke. Do we fall into the trap?

"Don't let's sell out the birthright that is the UAW."

Willoughby Abner, Local 734, Chicago Amalgamated, who presented the minority resolution: "The question here is not the Taft-Hartley Act as a whole. It is a question of demagoguery vs. common sense.

"We are accused of a sellout. In 1943, the NAM called for a speed-up. The international officers opposed it. The people who now get up and cry 'militant action' and 'no sellout' were the ones who were then backing the NAM."

He was interrupted by cries of "what about Murray?"

"Well, all right," said Abner, "what about him? I was at the CIO convention. I wish to point out Murray's position was a purely personal one. I also point out he said that as to filing, that time and circumstances are always matters of importance. Now, time and circumstances have made it mandatory for us to sign."

Thomas: "Perhaps I should challenge Reuther to a debate on this issue. In my opinion, it won't solve a single problem for us. Ask GM workers in Detroit and Flint if they had a Wagner Act or T-H or anything else to protect them in any way when they organized their plant.

"T-H was written by management against you. Can't you understand that?

"I signed a loyalty pledge during the war on the NLRB, but management also signed.

"Do workers think that if the T-H law is signed it is going to organize their plant? It is, like hell.

"I predict I will be back in future conventions and will be able, if this motion passes, to say 'I told you so.'"

Mazey: "The issue before us is simply this, while we are fighting to repeal T-H, while we are testing the various phases of this act in court, how best can we maintain the membership that we now have and how best can we get more members so through intelligent political action we can repeal this act?

"Are you going to say to workers: 'It is just too bad, fellows, you can't have a union, you can't have an organization to protect your wages, to protect your hours, to protect your families; you are the lost sheep, you are going to have to make a sacrifice."

Reuther: "I would be very happy to accept the challenge to debate Brother Thomas on the assumption—and I might add, in capital letters, the HOPE—that he will be a candidate against me."

Livingston: "We can prove to our membership by using the board that the act is no good; that it is dangerous and detrimental to our union."

Addes: "I, like Brother Thomas, signed an affidavit during the war.

"They did not adopt T-H to make it easy for you to organize; they adopted it not only to make it difficult to organize, but in order that they might help the employer destroy us.

"There is no assurance, whatsoever, that we can hold a single election."

Leonard: "This is not an issue that can or should be decided on the basis of right-wing or left-wing, because proponents of the legislation are set up to clip both our wings.

"I ask you, in all common sense, how do you expect, through the medium of collaboration with the boss' board, to repeal the law?"

Bob Fitzsimmons, Local 506, San Diego Amalgamated: "Any man who talks in favor of not signing these affidavits is a potential murderer, because it means the death of my local union."

Harold Christoffel, Local 248, West Allis, Wis., Allis Chalmers: "We have heard a lot of crocodile tears shed for Allis-Chalmers Local. The elected delegates will speak for Local 248. We rise for the majority report because we feel that is the only way to fight this law."

Then the minority report was adopted by a show of hands. A motion for a roll call vote fell far short of the necessary seconding by 500 delegates out of the more than 1700 present.

Asks Annual Wage

In addition to discussing UAW officers and the T-H affidavits, Murray, in his address, said:

"I arrived on the platform just at the time you had under consideration a resolution on wages, a resolution which sort of touched the very heart of many of the difficulties which confront American workers.

"Now why do people, why does the man and woman who may work in an office, a shop a mine or a factory, or in the field ask for an annual wage? They ask for it because it portends a form of economic security for not only the individual employed in the plant, the mine, the factory, the office and the field, but it offers protection to the members of that man's family as well.

"I am hoping in the course of the next few months, at least, before our next negotiations get under way, that much material of great value will have been put together by our CIO Full Employment Committee that will provide certain definite guideposts for many of our International Unions in the collective bargaining conferences which are bound to ensue in the course of the early part of next year.

"We must do more than mutter, we must do more than pass resolutions in mighty labor conventions such as this. We must work —we must work just as diligently for the repeal of T-H in 1948 as the NAM worked for its passage in 1947. That, of course, necessitates the organization of your forces politically."

Harmony

The official CIO Auto Workers' convention band—that of the Local 16, American Federation of Musicians, AFL—played "A 'Feudin' and A 'Fussin'" just before the convention opened.

Reuther on Profits

Reuther in his keynote, said:

"A year ago, the much-criticized —from business—Nathan report was wrong, and history and the facts that have developed since it was published prove that it was wrong. But it was not wrong on the side which the NAM said it was wrong on. Instead of American industry making $15,000,000,000 in profits after taxation, American industry in the first half of 1947, on an annual basis, made $17,500,000,000 in profits, after taxes,—two and a half million more than the CIO Nathan report said.

"And let us look at General Motors—good old General Motors. In the second quarter of 1947—this is not ancient history—the second quarter of 1947 G.M. made 142,000,000 in profits before taxes in those three months.

"G. M. in the second quarter of 1947 could have reduced the price of every car they sold by $250 and they still would have had enough in the $142,000,000 in profits left over, to have a return of 8% on their investment during that quarter. And yet they blame us for the high price of cars.

"The best way to guarantee to have your ice box filled with good food is to see the ballot box is filled with good votes on election day. And our people have to learn that. We have to mobilize for an all-out political fight in 1948.

"I say the weakness in our Union is the factional fight amongst the top leadership. I don't want to go into that story because I think we came here to pound out a positive program of action. I brought it along, the propaganda. There is a paper shortage in America since this propaganda campaign was launched, this kind of propaganda, millions of copies, full-page ads, magazines about the 'Bosses' Boy, so-and-so sold out to the employer, so-and-so did this. I am not going to bother you with all that trash; I am going to put it in the furnace where it ought to belong."

At a press conference just before the convention opened Reuther said he was convinced John L. Lewis, head of the AFL Miners, through his daughter, Kathryn, had poured "hundreds of thousands" of dollars into a left-wing campaign to defeat Reuther.

He charged a "certain man" (he did not identify him) high in the the UAW had a "personal meeting" with Miss Lewis.

Buick Quartet Popular with UAW

The Local 599 (Flint Buick) quartet was one of the popular features of the Auto Workers' convention. In fact, the quartet was retained for the entire week by unanimous vote of the delegates.

The quartet sang spiritual arrangements of "Solidarity, Forever" and "We Shall not Be Moved." The feature number, however, was "There'll Be a Jubilee When the Union Sets Us Free from Taft-Hart-ley," Members of the quartet, all workers in the plant, are: Harry Wofford, Archie Hawkins, Joe Tate and James Hatton. Mac Allen is their manager.

No Boos, Please

Walter Reuther, Auto Workers' president, received tumultuous applause when he urged delegates not to boo speakers.

Reuther declared: "Let us respect the other fellow's point of view. No matter how much we disagree with him, let him talk, so that when you want to have your say, he will give you the same courtesy."

Addes Reports 900,000 In Union

THE CIO United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement workers of America is at its peacetime membership peak, the convention report of Sec.-Treas. Goerge F. Addes revealed.

Addes' report, printed and distributed to the delegates at Atlantic City, showed that the dues-paying members for the 12-month period preceding the convention averaged 792,502.

Addes further remarked that by "adding to the average of recent months the number of workers who for one reason or another are not required to pay dues, it may be conservatively estimated that the membership of our union is in excess of 900,000."

The report also showed that the UAW's financial position had been considerably improved in the past year. The general fund had increased $276,313 from $391,837 to $668,150. The strike fund is $652,809, compared with nothing a year ago.

The financial tables in the report cover 38 pages. Of the union's invested securities, $10,000 are in Dominion of Canada bonds.

Real Estate Interests Say

Be Patient, You'll Get Hand-me-Down Home

By GLORIA CAPLAN

ALTHOUGH more than a million-and-a-half tenants have already "volunteered" to pay up to 15% more rent under the 1947 federal rent law, the Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards last week started winding up for the final pitch with which it hopes to strike out rent controls.

The NAREB's new onslaught was blueprinted in a "five year plan" adopted in convention in San Francisco and is intended to eliminate rent controls altogether by next spring. To finance its "greatly enlarged" public relations program the NAREB is exacting an additional $5 in dues from its members.

Meanwhile, Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) threatened to back the scuttling of rent controls after March 1 if the Federal Housing Expediter's "present policy" continues.

"Now that the power has been taken away from local boards by (Tighe E.) Woods there is nothing they can do about local conditions," he said. Rent control has fallen into "bureaucratic hands here in Washington," he charged, instead of remaining lodged in the hands of local boards.

McCarthy's complaint was based on the fact that the Expediter, who must pass on all local board recommendations, has failed to approve every proposed rent hike the real estate-packed boards have sent him.

McCarthy is vice chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Housing, which has been conducting hearings around the country for the past month.

All witnesses agreed there is a severe housing shortage. The slugfests centered around the issue of public housing vs. the "hand-me-down" theory.

Exponents of the "hand-me-down" theory, under which the real estate interests are operating now, would continue to let private interests "solve" the problem by providing housing for the wealthy and permitting the rich men's units to trickle down gradually to the low-income groups.

Everywhere the congressional investigators went, the "hand-me-down" theory was attacked by spokesmen for the middle or low-income groups.

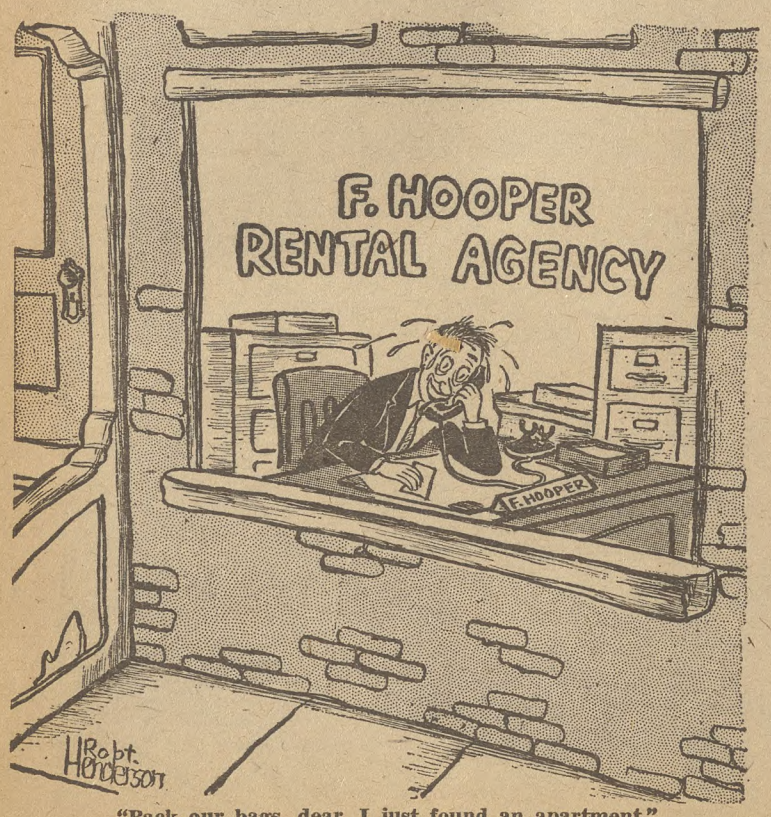
Homes For Rich

In Chicago, for instance, they were told by Michael Mann, CIO regional director, that 41.2% of the new rental units going up in Chicago were built to cost from $7500 to $12,750; 16.3% cost $20,750 or more.

"You don't need a crystal ball to see that the low-income groups will never be able to house themselves under the best of these cost conditions," he said. "It must be obvious to all that the new building has slipped completely out of the hands of the families who need it most—the middle and lower income groups."

Despite persistent testimony to the contrary in city after city, the committee's chairman, Rep. Ralph A. Gamble (R., N. Y.), stated in New York that he had found "an appreciable easing in the housing shortage."

But the majority of witnesses, spokesmen for veterans, Negroes, labor, women's organizations — called for public housing as provided in the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill. These were the people to whom Senator McCarthy referred as "the public housing lobby"—the most "vicious" lobby that he has run up against.



"Pack our bags, dear, I just found an apartment."

Boss Thinks A 40c Minimum Is Form Of Dictatorship

FOUND—a man who believes the government shouldn't stop your boss from paying you less than 40c an hour.

He's Tyre Taylor, general counsel of the Southern States Industrial Council (that's a southern, regional kind of employers' association) and he offered as a serious suggestion to a House Labor sub-committee last week that the 40c minimum wage and the 40-hour week maximum straight-time pay provision be knocked out of the law.

A law requiring the employer to pay at least 40c an hour and overtime after 40 hours a week looks like dictatorship to Taylor. He said it means the "elimination of managerial discretion—as is indeed already proposed in pending FEPC legislation—and requiring employers to hire."

The spokesman for southern industry maintained that the Wage-Hour law—which was adopted in 1938—was a break with American tradition and was part of the "leftist, New Deal program" foisted upon the people by an agitator named Roosevelt.

TAYLOR'S testimony was presented to a sub-group of Rep. Hartley's House Labor Committee which has been conducting hearings on the future fate of the wage-hour law. Throughout the week the committee heard numerous spokesmen for CIO unions underscore the need for broadening the law to cover more workers and to increase the minimum hourly rate to 75c.

At Atlantic City, N. J., meanwhile, the auto workers convention called for a flat dollar-an-hour minimum. That idea was also presented to the committee by Patrick McDonough, president of an Oakland, Calif., steel fabricating firm.

Martin Kyne, executive secretary of the CIO Retail & Wholesale union, said that millions of store workers who are not protected by union contracts get substandard wages. He asked for an amendment to extend the law to all workers whose activities "affect" interstate commerce.

Pres. Joseph Fadling of the Woodworkers said that powerful forces in the country seek to reduce labor to the status of "a mere commodity."

Pres. Donald Henderson of the Food & Tobacco Workers said:

"No one in Congress and very few businessmen will openly admit that the Wage-Hour Act is to be abolished. Like the sponsors of the Taft-Hartley Act, they claim to be doing it for the good of the workers and the country as a whole."

Sol Barkin, Textile Workers research expert, summed up the CIO arguments. With several thousand words and a bevy of statistics, Barkin undertook to meet all possible employer criticisms of a minimum wage raise.

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in a statement filed with the committee, warned sharply against efforts to tear down workers' living standards.

"Let us make no mistake," he said. "The attack on the Act is part of a concerted campaign to return the American people to the sweatshop and to operate our economy by the laws of the jungle."

PRICE CRISIS FAILS TO SWAY THE GOP

High Prices:

We're All Up To Here In Them

MAYBE the boys were trying to get in their last licks before Congress did something about high prices and the economic situation, but, boy, were things astronomical last week!

There were such signs as these:

The Government found that between mid-August and mid-September, food prices (retail, that is) were 40% above June, 1946, last effective OPA period . . .

American Woolen Co., Inc., declared an extra dividend of $2, in addition to the regular $1.50 . . .

The profits of the petroleum industry were 62% over the comparable 1946 period . . .

THE New York Times noted that the suit trade, ignoring the possibility of price curbs, was stocking up with spring "new looks" . . .

William L. Batt, SKF president, took a gander at the newspaper industry and reckoned that newspapers were in the midst of the greatest boom since 1929 . . .

The Natl. Tax Equality Association demanded that tax exemptions affecting cooperatives be repealed . . .

The N. Y. Stock Exchange's prexy, Emil Schram, proposed a reduction in the capital gains tax to 10% . . .

Textiles, Inc., reported a net income of $3,617,187 in the year to Sept. 30, compared with $2,121,631 same time last year (that's a 75% increase) . . .

Many airlines sought a fare increase . . .

Margarine stocks went fast as butter hovered near 90c . . .

AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. reported it had "Sold American" at a rate that netted $8,256,000 in the third quarter of 1947. No comparison was made with last year . . .

Cotton prices were up 5 to 23 points . . .

Pullman, Inc., revealed its net income for first nine months, 1947, was $5,651,304, compared to $1,862,373 last time (that's a 203% rise). Recently, the Government granted Pullman a fare increase . . .

Ohrbach's, large operator of specialty shops in New York City and Newark, N. J., announced consolidated net sales of $34,346,365 in the fiscal year ended July 1, compared with $30,200,403 last time, or a rise of 13.7% . . .

Blaming "recent increases in the prices of fats and oils from which soaps are made," Procter & Gamble raised prices 6% for the second time in less than a month. Duz goes up 2c a package, the large Ivory bar 1c . . .

BUSINESS loans, swelled by a growing demand for working capital and higher inventory costs, were at the highest level in history—$14,152,000,000 . . .

The Commerce Dept. estimated that the average home in 1948 will cost $6,315 to build, compared with $4,800 in 1925 . . .

Food stores did 8% more business in October than in September, which increases, together with the rise in food costs, caused a decline in sales at eating and drinking places, clothing stores and jewelry establishments . . .

Using 1935 through 1939 as a base of 100, magazine advertising rates were at 331 in September according to the industry "bible," Printers' Ink. For instance, it costs $16,600 for a single—yes single—black and white page in Life.

* * *

All this happened and then Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), demanding a new excess profits tax, estimated that profits—which were at the rate of $17,500,000,000 a year in the first half of this year—now were at the rate of $19,000,000,000.

Ten of Thirteen Akron Council Seats Won By PAC Supported Candidates

"BOTH Republicans and Democrats admitted that the result was a smashing victory for the political forces of organized labor in Akron—one of the most significant they have ever registered."

Thus did the Akron Beacon Journal, one of the Knight papers, analyze the results of the Rubber City's municipal election.

The sweeping character of the victory for the Akron PAC can be seen in the results. Labor indorsed 11 candidates for city council and 10 of them won. Labor indorsed Judge Charles M. Kelly, presiding judge of the municipal court, for reelection. Kelly won.

While there was no formal indorsement for mayor, the Beacon Journal said "labor's hand was also plainly seen" in the reelection of Mayor Charles E. Slusser, Republican. "Slusser has been a good mayor," says the paper, "The unionists realized it and many worked actively in his behalf. Labor's backing, along with that of diverse other groups which recognized Slusser's superior qualifications, gave him a deserved victory."

Of the 13-man council, 10 are Democrats, of whom nine are CIO members, one is pro-labor. The other three are Republicans. The Democrats are Charles Madden, Edward Erickson, Edward O. Flowers, Francis G. Greissing, John A. Head, Leo L. Laney, Leo L. Berg, Ed Day, Ralph F. Turner and John Poda.

The defeated Democratic candidate for mayor was State Rep. Fred Harter. According to Paul M. Fessenden, executive-secretary of the CIO Council of Akron, Harter "was a hand-picked candidate by those forces who are reactionary Democrats and anti-labor Democrats."

The Beacon Journal remarked that "Organized labor has for the first time shown that it can influence enough votes to be a decisive factor in municipal affairs."

But, The Beacon Journal wasn't pleased, by any means. It was O. K. for labor to back Slusser, but as to other candidates the paper said bitterly, "if labor is going to run this city politically, we pray that its leaders may gain a sense of responsibility!" (Labor thinks it won because the voters recognized responsibility.)

Young Democrats' Convention Asks For Immediate Repeal of T-H

THE national convention of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, with a membership of more than a million, recently demanded immediate repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The labor resolution adopted by the convention also called for a 75-cent minimum wage, a FEPC act, creation of a Labor Extention Service in the Dept. of Labor, expansion of Social Security, compulsory health insurance, return of the conciliation agency to the Secretary of Labor, and elimination of world-wide unfair labor standards through the International Labor Organization.

(The CIO works through the World Federation of Trade Union, the AFL belongs to I.L.O.)

The labor resolution embodied the recommendations of the Ohio Young Democrats but as presented to the convention did not call for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

A Minnesota delegate took the convention floor to demand that the resolution include the request for the repeal of the T-H Act. The resolution was then passed by the convention which included strong delegations from the following Southern states, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Texas, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina and Arkansas.

The convention recommended legislation to curb the cost of living and recommended that Congress expand public housing, continue rent control beyond March 1, 1948, and initiate a drive to bring down housing costs.

Other resolutions ratified the Marshall Plan, condemned the "false economy of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress" and recommended restoration of adequate funds to government agencies.

New officers are from the South, East and West. Roy G. Baker, 33-year-old lawyer of Sherman, Tex., was elected president, defeating Henry King Lowman, Ashland, Ky. Baker, a former Texas State representative and a Democratic National Committeeman, succeeds Joe C. Carr, Nashville, Tenn., who had served six years.

Other officers are Mrs. Theodore Hansen, Long Beach, Calif., vice-president; Miss Angelica R. Parisi, New York City, secretary and Hoover Taft, Greenville N. C., treasurer.

T-H TESTS PENSIONS

IS it legal for a company to refuse to bargain over pension plans?

That question was placed before the Natl. Labor Relations Board last week in a precedent-making case involving the CIO Steelworkers and Inland Steel Co.

An earlier intermediate report filed by a Labor Board trial examiner, had ruled in favor of the union and said that a company commits an unfair labor practice when it refuses to bargain the question.

The case is the first to involve pension-bargaining to come before the Labor Board, either before or since passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Frank Donner, assistant counsel for USA-CIO, told the five-man Labor Board that bargaining over pension agreements had not been banned by the T-H Law. He noted that a proposal for such a ban, which had been included in the House version of the law, had been knocked out when it came into Senate-House conference committee last spring.

Donner argued that compulsory retirement for age—at Inland it's 65 years—is a term and condition of work, and therefore subject to bargaining.

Reinstatement of some 242 employes who were discharged at the retirement age between April and September 1946 was also asked by the union, so that they may share in whatever pension benefits are eventually won by USA-CIO.

He Doesn't Need A Horoscope

The CIO News received some free, undeserved and unrequested advertising last week from Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.)—of all people.

Ball, who was a prime mover for the Taft-Hartley act, was queried by United Press on his reactions to Pres. Truman's economic program placed before Congress on the opening day of the special session.

Said the Minnesota Senator: "I read the whole program last week in The CIO News."

Actually, Sen. Ball was wrong (not the first time, said a cynical CIO News staff member). What he read in last week's CIO News was Pres. Murray's four-point program for Congressional action. Pres. Truman's program, 10 points in all, covered several subjects not mentioned by the CIO president.

Steel Again Bans Signing

The 41-man board of the CIO Steelworkers, meeting last week in Pittsburgh, voted unanimously to continue a policy of not signing the Natl. Labor Relations Board's non-Communist affidavits.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who is also president of the Steelworkers, announced that the board confined its discussions to the Taft-Hartley Law and "the whole situation was reviewed at great length."

TRUMAN'S PROGRAM MAKES REPUBLICAN JITTERS

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

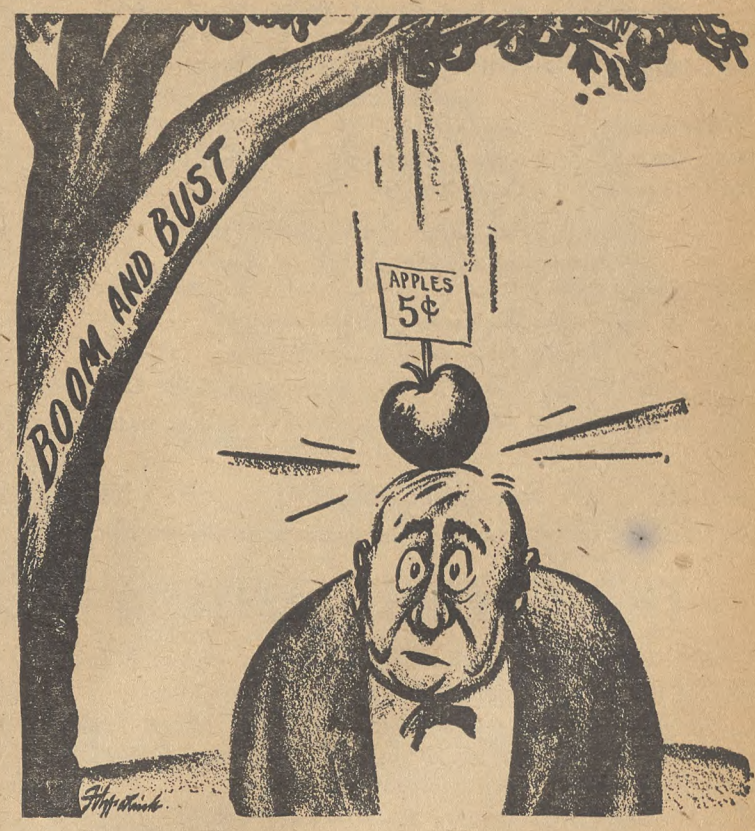
LEADERS of the Republican party, still badly shaken by President Truman's flashy open-field running in his message to the special session of Congress, have scheduled without enthusiasm a series of committee hearings on economic controls to fight inflation.

Washington agreed that the President scored a heavy political victory in his demand for a 10-point program to stabilize the national economy and put a rein on runaway prices.

Included among the President's requests were the immediate restoration of consumer credit controls, extension of export controls, encouragement of grain-saving practices and extension of a strengthened rent control law.

At the same time, he asked for authority to put in effect when he feels necessary a system of price controls on scarce products; wage controls in industries producing those goods; allocation of scarce materials which basically affect the cost of living; consumer rationing of similar products; plans for marketing meat with a maximum saving of grain feed; and continued federal controls over freight train equipment.

The message did not call for immediate starting of price controls and rationing on all goods; nor did it answer the question of whether these controls can be successful only on some commodities while others are left on the free market.



—Fitzpatrick, St. Louis Dispatch

Remember 1929?

BUT the week's developments did make crystal-clear that neither of the two parties wants to be labeled as the "party of inflation" when the crucial 1948 elections roll around.

Whether the 80th Congress will vote the President his requested authority for power is a matter of doubt. Similarly, there are major questions as to when and how the President would make use of such a grant of power to act against high prices.

Republican leaders expressed private fear that the President had made an impressive first-down by asking Congress for powers it would not give. He would then be in a position to place the blame for rising prices on the GOP and its election standard-bearers next year.

EVEN some of the Congress' most conservative members—who have never hesitated to kick labor where it hurts the most—pulled out fancy words to condemn not only price controls but wage controls as well, in the hope of killing the entire economic package offered by Truman.

CIO Pres. Murray, who had sent to members of Congress a four-point economic program, withheld comment pending a meeting with the CIO's nine vice-presidents on Dec. 2.

Some GOP critics of the President's program tried hard to label it as a "CIO program." But the facts show many points of difference.

Murray's letter to Congress asked for re-establishment of price controls, and rationing of food, clothing and other necessities; elimination of margins on buying of grain (to curb speculation on basic food products); a tax program to deal with excess and speculative profits; and a strong attack upon monopoly.

Those last two points—profits taxes and anti-monopoly program—were not included by the President in his recommendations to Congress.

SEN. ROBERT TAFT took to the radio a few hours after the President's message and, in a voice that scarcely disguised his fury, denounced the price program as one of "reaction."

He cried out against "sugar-coating" of a pill which he said is actually OPA all over again, charged "regimentation," "politics" and "police state" methods.

That last reference was to Truman's comment a few weeks ago that price controls are a frequent feature of police state activities. The President's remark — considered as a political blunder in view of his later espousal of a price control program—was tossed back at him with regularity by GOP Congressmen.

Truman's message showed clearly the manner in which the country is spiralling into inflation. He said that a housewife buying food for her family must now spend $10 for what cost her $7.50 in mid-1946, when OPA was strangled.

Wholesale prices of textiles have jumped 32% in the same 18 months, the President reminded Congress; metals are up 36%; and building materials are up 42%. Retail prices will soon reflect these tremendous jumps.

The present weakened rent control law, President Truman said, had permitted a rise in the average rent of 15% a month—and most American families simply do not have enough money to absorb 12% yearly rise in dwelling expenses, he warned.

MOST of the Truman speech was devoted to domestic issues. Another message, laying before Congress the administration's requests for Marshall Plan aid, is scheduled for the next couple of weeks.

He did ask for a $592 million stop-gap aid program for France, Italy and Austria to prevent immediate break-down of the economic systems in those countries pending Marshall Plan action; and it appeared likely that that re-

JUST WHAT THEY WANTED

Seven 'Fired' State Dept. Aides Allowed To Resign Positions

THE State Dept., in a complete reversal of its previous stand, has agreed to allow seven dismissed employes to resign so that their records will be clear for other employment.

The seven, whose identities have not been revealed, were never told why they were fired and were refused a hearing. They engaged the law firm of Thurman Arnold, former assistant attorney general; Abe Fortas, former Undersecretary of the Interior, and Paul Porter, former OPA chief. The attorneys requested that the seven be allowed to resign. The department at first refused to allow such a procedure and maintained its position that the persons had been fired as "bad risks."

A few days before the reversal by the State Dept., these events occurred:

1. Pres. Truman promised that there would be no "witch hunts" in the removal of disloyal and subversive employes from Government posts. His announcement came after the first meeting of his new Loyalty Review Board.

2. J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, declared the FBI does not participate in witch hunts, but only follows Truman's orders.

The State Dept., in announcing its change of policy, said it was taking "all steps to insure the right to appeal to the Loyalty Review Board when employes' jobs are questioned on security grounds." (The seven stated through their attorneys that they did not wish to make an appeal.)

The department said the dismissal of the seven had been "based upon highly classified material which it could not reveal in detail to the employes."

Truman's statement said that, with certain exceptions, suspected persons would be confronted with the charges against them and permitted to answer them. In no case, Truman emphasized, would rumor, gossip or mere suspicion be sufficient to cause dismissal for disloyalty.

The exceptions, the President explained, would be those called for under the McCarren amendment, which cover the State Dept., the armed forces and the Atomic Energy Commission. Here, exceptional aspects of national security must be involved, he said.

THE President has set up loyalty boards in each government agency, which would be the first to hear the case against anyone suspected. Employes may appeal from such boards to the heads of their agencies, who have the power to overrule the board. In the event of a second adverse decision, appeal may be taken to the Loyalty Review Board, whose chairman is Seth W. Richardson.

Truman, in issuing his statement, praised the loyalty of the overwhelming majority of Government employes, and promised they would not be spied upon or restricted in their activities.

He also clarified reports of dismissals for mere membership, present or past, in a group found by the Attorney General to be totalitarian, Fascist, Communistic or subversive. He said such reports were groundless. He stated that there must be "reasonable grounds" before a dismissal is ordered.

Meanwhile, the American Civil Liberties Union announced it was sponsoring a number of free speech rallies in Newark, N. J., as "a direct means of insuring freedom of speech and assemblage for those who have recently been denied meeting places."

ACLU pointed out that recently in New Jersey, contracts for meetings of the American Veterans Committee, for addresses by Dr. Frank Kingdon, a candidate for the U. S. Senate; by Robert Thompson, Communist national board member, and several left-wing speakers had been cancelled because of local pressure.

Roger H. Baldwin, ACLU director, and Arthur Garfield Hays, its counsel, will appear at the rallies.

At Amherst College, Prof. Colson E. Warne, who refused to fill out the Government loyalty form, at the same time denying he is a Communist, offered to continue to serve as a government consultant without compensation. He has been serving on the Consumers' Advisory Committee of the Council of Economic Advisers.

THE FRIENDLY EPISODE

Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) is guilty of bad judgment and usurpation of power.

He didn't like a story about him which Alfred Friendly wrote for the Washington Post. He summoned Friendly, a Federal conciliator and a company official to a Congressional hearing over which he, himself, presided.

CONGRESSMAN HOFFMAN

Hoffman placed Friendly under oath and demanded to know the source of information upon which Friendly based a story charging Hoffman had "interfered" with a conciliation meeting between representatives of the strike-bound Joy Mfg. Co. of Michigan City, Ind., and the UAW-CIO.

Friendly refused to provide the information requested—and he is due congratulations for his stand.

The Post, condemning Hoffman's "inquisition," said the Michigan Republican last month questioned two Washington Star representatives about an editorial with which he took issue.

The New York Herald Tribune quoted Hoffman as saying: "Every time one of these papers charges a committee of Congress of which I am chairman with unfair or disreputable conduct, or something of that kind, the writer of the article, if I can find him, is going to be called on to justify that charge."

Hoffman, the individual, certainly had a right to question Friendly. He had a right, as an individual, to charge that Friendly wrote an unfair story about him. He had a right, as Mr. Hoffman, to demand that the Post present his views on what occurred.

But he had no right—legal or moral—to summon Friendly before a Congressional committee and demand that he reveal his source of information.

Congressmen must not be permitted to use governmental agencies to intimidate newsmen or others who are critical of their behavior.

TRAIN SKIPS TWO TOWNS

The Freedom Train, a rolling showcase for the cause of democracy, will not stop at Memphis, Tenn., or Hattiesburg, Miss.

The powers-that-be in these towns wanted to impose a racial segregation rule for the crowds visiting the train. Those in charge of the train said "Nothing doing."

Mayor Hartsfield of Atlanta, on the other hand, said the Freedom Train would be more than welcome in his town.

Hartsfield deserves the plaudits of those who believe in democracy and civil rights. Officials of Memphis and Hattiesburg deserve exactly the opposite.

CIO in 'Diabolical Plot' To Obtain Price Control

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE CIO has been doing some "scheming" and "conniving" in an effort to obtain price control and rationing.

It's all part of a "diabolical plot" to destroy a lot of these things which are supposed to be sacred—or something.

If you don't believe it, just ask some of the men who helped kill OPA prematurely. Better yet, ask the profiteers.

They'll give you what they term the "real low-down" although there won't be a word of truth to what they say.

They'll even tell you about the "secret conferences" at which the "plot" was hatched.

THE real story of the "scheming" and "conniving" is a simple one. It began months ago when it became obvious that the average wage earner was being squeezed too tightly by high prices.

CIO members in factories and mills throughout the country began complaining. School teachers, stenographers, persons living on pensions and other fixed incomes began complaining, too.

The complaints became louder as prices rose and the public began learning about the enormous profits many corporations were earning.

CIO leaders decided to take action when it became apparent that prices weren't going to be reduced voluntarily.

SEVERAL dozen newspaper reporters were on hand for the "secret" parley at which the CIO announced it believed certain governmental controls would be necessary to avoid an economic crisis.

Its position then (late summer) was that the price mess should be cleaned up, if possible, by voluntary action in most fields, with the government placing controls only on speculative commodities.

CIO officials hoped business and industrial leaders might realize they had ridden the high-profits train far enough.

But prices and profits kept right on increasing. The squeeze on the wage earner became tighter.

THEN, during the week of Oct. 13, the CIO held a "secret" meeting at Boston. (It was billed publicly as the CIO's Ninth Constitutional Convention.)

With delegates from all over the nation attending and more than 100 reporters listening in, the CIO did some more "plotting."

It adopted a resolution asking that President Truman "call for an immediate session of Congress for the purpose of re-establishing price control on all commodities and rationing for food, clothing and other necessities of life."

So there it is—the whole "diabolical plot."

AND HERE'S what's behind it—and ALL that's behind it.

CIO officials recalled what happened following World War I. They remembered those lush days in the late 20's (before brokers began jumping out of windows) and they remembered what followed.

They, in effect, said to themselves and to each other, "We don't like governmental control but we much prefer it to another disastrous crash. Business and industry are shoving the nation rapidly toward the brink of a major depression and the only thing that can halt them is price control."

Yes, it was that simple.

WHEN THE fight in Congress over price control reaches fever pitch you'll likely hear that the CIO's position was "dictated by ideological considerations" or some such bunk.

The implication will be that we're engaged in some underhanded, un-American scheme.

The truth will be that the CIO is merely fighting for a decent break for its members and for other wage earners.

Perhaps that is ideological.

"WE'VE CERTAINLY SHOWN LABOR"

A Beast's Zoo Is His Castle

ONE HUNDRED animals in Atlanta's Grant Park Zoo live in better quarters than 162,000 Atlantans who live in the city's slums and substandard dwelling units, City Councilman John A. White declares.

White, who is chairman of a special slum clearance committee and author of a five-year program to eliminate 40,000 slum and substandard dwellings, said the task of slum clearance has met with "studied opposition" from the mayor and several members of the city council.

He charged Mayor Hartsfield and other city figures with a "studied effort . . . to discount, cripple and make ineffective the efforts to improve the living quarters for one-third of the population of the city."

"We all favor sanitary conditions for the animals," White said, "but some people are placing the 100 animals above the welfare of the 16,000 who live in more unsanitary surroundings than the zoo animals do.

"There is no disease, no crime, no delinquency and no fire hazard at the Grant Park Zoo," he said. "The zoo is fireproof. We cannot say this about the 162,000 substandard structures, many of which are not fit for occupancy by animals, much less humans."

Vacations Ordered In Norwegian Law

Every Norwegian worker will get a week's annual vacation from now on, thanks to a new law passed by the Norwegian parliament.

Under the bill, sponsored by the country's Labor Party, each worker will get full pay for his vacation time. According to Allied Labor News, the law brings about major improvements for workers in most industries.

The law was passed despite a severe labor shortage. But union spokesmen and supporters of the project argued that every move to improve workers' conditions and health would pay off in terms of higher efficiency and greater output.

Allen Sues Stern Under G. I. Bill

Robert S. Allen, newspaper columnist and member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has sued the Philadelphia Record Co. for $20,750 under the GI Bill of Rights.

The company is still in existence despite the fact its president, J. David Stern, suspended the Record last February in the midst of a Guild strike and sold the paper and its good will to the Philadelphia Bulletin. Allen, who was a colonel on Gen. Patton's staff and lost an arm in action, charges that Stern and Editor Harry T. Saylor refused to give him back his job as chief of the Record's Washington bureau. Allen is represented by Gerald A. Gleeson, U. S. Attorney for the Philadelphia area.

Old Judd Said: 'Write Book For Us'

JUDD was a lovable old "gopher" who wore a truss because he had been ruptured.

His hands were gnarled, his fingernails broken and his hair grey and thin. He was a carpenter, and a hard worker, too.

Judd was helping a rather famous man build a house, and as they worked together they talked about politics, capital, labor and politics.

Judd admitted frankly that he didn't know too much about what was going on in the world and he said most working men didn't have time to read fat, complicated books on weighty subjects.

Then Judd asked, "Why don't you write a book for fellows like me?"

SO, on a Thanksgiving morning, the book was begun—and the author put into it many arguments that have been used by union officers and organizers.

"Seeing the employers combine into larger and larger organizations, it naturally occurred to the workers to combine and sell their labor as a unit," the author wrote.

"At first the employers made this action a crime, and a great many working men went to jail before the right of labor combination was granted.

"Even now it is only grudgingly granted; the employers in their hearts are still certain that anything which reduces their profits is a crime, and through their courts they hedge the labor unions about with all sorts of restrictions."

JUDD was a non-union man who lived in a small town—and to him the author wrote:

"It is rather strange to see a man like yourself rather suspicious of unions because of all the poison you absorb from the capitalist press—and at the same time profiting every day of your working life from the sacrifices made by union men!

"Also is it strange to see employers who fight the unions, and denounce them, and boast of the contentment of their non-union workers—and make that contentment by paying the union scale, which otherwise neither the employer nor the men ever would have dreamed of.

"Once let the 'open-shop' bosses have their own way, Judd, and then see how a 'free' carpenter's wages will drop!"

THEN the author told Judd a bit about the use of injunctions in management-labor affairs:

"What these injunction judges have forbidden labor to do makes a catalog over which you might have a good laugh, if you could forget all of the heartbreak and agony of the poor that it summed up in its preposterous sentences. All of the hopes that were blasted, the pitiful hopes of a little better food for a sick wife, of a chance to keep the children in school.

"Such things are the meaning of a strike to a workingman; and suddenly a grim personnage in a black silk robe lifts a club and smashed these hopes over the head."

NEED for an organization like the CIO was pointed out by the author, whose book was published 22 years ago. He said:

"At the present time the policies of American labor, both political and industrial, are a generation out of date; our workingmen are like the Moses in the Philippines, fighting machine guns with bows and arrows.

"The unions are still organized according to crafts; and they face gigantic combinations of capital, which have merged a hundred different crafts into one.

"So, of course, the unions are beaten or outwitted at every turn; and the membership falls off, and the old officials whistle to keep their courage up."

And that's how Upton Sinclair in "Letters to Judd" told about the difficulties and needs of workers in 1925—difficulties and needs similar to those of today. The book will be re-issued soon.—A. L. S.

DO BOTH OF THEM NEED LEASHES?

First Ship With Negro Skipper Ends Gallant Service For U. S.

THE good ship Booker T. Washington has ended its active and honorable service.

The vessel, of 10,500 tons, was the first large American merchant ship to be commander by a Negro skipper. He was Capt. Hugh Mulzac, New York, assigned to the vessel in 1942 shortly after receiving his master's papers. He held the post throughout the war and in postwar trips until September, when he entered a hospital for treatment. The ship will be laid up in a reserve fleet.

The Booker T. Washington was operated during the war as a troop transport by the Luckenbach Company, as general agent for the War Shipping Administration. Last spring, Luckenbach chartered the vessel for carrying relief coal cargoes to Europe.

During the war the ship carried 14,000 troops without any injuries. She was credited with shooting down two enemy planes.

As the ship's flag—tattered from its faithful service—was folded up by the crew of 38 at ceremonies in Brooklyn, Capt. James H. Brown, Jr., a Negro who succeeded Mulzac, remarked, "We wanted to keep operating as a symbol to the world of democracy in action."

The crew, which had appealed to the Maritime Commission to keep the vessel in service, had always been free of segregation. The crew had consisted of Americans, both white and Negro, Britons, Danes, Norwegians, Belgians, Irish and Filipinos.

No Money in It!

"It seems that certain workers have recently expressed the opinion that American business is making too much money. Meanwhile, I have been asked to show you how you can correct this misconception by introducing a program of education for the worker. A kind of 'Economics for the Millions' program . . ."

This is from an address by William J. Reilly, Natl. Institute for Straight Thinking.

Tip to McCarthy

This choice bit appeared in Drew Pearson's Washington Merry-Go-Round:

"At the height of his housing investigation in Detroit, Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.) was roused out of bed at 3 a.m.:

"'Why are you wasting the taxpayers' money with this hearing?' demanded a woman's voice, indignantly. 'I can give you the answer in a minute:

"'Have Congress pass the right laws!'"

Your Rent Bosses

Here are samples of the governnor-appointed rent boards to which Sen. McCarthy (R., Wis.), of the joint Congressional committee on housing, would give a "carte blanche":

New York (17 members)—One labor man flanked by 16 attorneys and businessmen.

Baltimore (11 members)—One union member along with five real estate men, a hotel and apartment manager, a contractor-builder, a sales manager, a lawyer and an American Legion official.

Miami and Miami Beach (14 members)—Eight real estate, hotel or business men, three city officials, two lawyers and a veteran's organization spokesman. No labor representative.

Chattanooga (5 members)—One unionist surrounded by a rental agent, a lawyer, a textile manufacturer and a state veterans affairs official.

Elmira, N. Y. (5 members)—Two attorneys, one real estate agent, one tobacco merchant, one retired businessman. No labor representative.

Los Angeles (5 members)—Four retired businessmen and one real estate agent. No labor representative.

Montgomery County, Md. (5 members)—One mortgage company secretary, one attorney, one restaurateur, one banker, one architect—none of whom lives in a rental home.

Banana River, Fla. (5 members)—Four real estate agents and the mayor.

RENT CONTROL PETITION: 6,000 persons signed petitions for continuance of rent control, which Max Singer of the Florida CIO Council is presenting to Irene Murphy, employe in the Miami, Fla., rent control office. Singer presented the petitions during a hearing on controls held before the Miami Area Rent Advisory Board. Eight of the 14 members of the board are real estate, hotel or business men, three are city officials, two are lawyers and one is a spokesman of a veterans' organization.

U. S. Tenants Beg Expediter, Rent Boards: Hold Line on Rents

AS anxious tenants—from Miami to Chicago—appealed to their local rent boards and to the government to hold the line on rents, a Federal judge in Cleveland declared the 1947 Rent Control Act unconstitutional last week.

Immediately Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods announced: "We are going to appeal this case right away, and probably take it straight to the Supreme Court."

In his ruling Judge Paul Jones, senior federal judge of the Northern Ohio district, held that Congress cannot control rents under its war powers, since there no longer is a war. Two other federal judges have upheld the act.

The case began last June when Cloyd W. Miller, Cleveland apartment house owner, gave notice that he was going to raise rents 40 to 60%. The federal housing officials obtained a court order to stop him. The order was in effect until last week's ruling.

PLEAD FOR CONTROL

In Miami the local 14-man rent advisory board, consisting of eight real estate, hotel and business men, three city officials, two lawyers, a veteran's organization spokesman and no labor representatives, was presented with CIO-circulated petitions bearing 6000 signatures urging continued controls.

Wage earners could grit their teeth and sweep the halls and stairs or paint the apartment as the landlord's services diminished, but they "cannot dig money out of thin air to pay rental increases," Max M. Singer, CIO State Council spokesman, told the board at a public hearing.

Singer's testimony followed that of real estate spokesmen who pleaded for increased rentals and total decontrol. Miami rents were already so high, Singer said, that government agencies and private business ventures had been discouraged from settling in the area.

IN Chicago, meanwhile, Michael Mann, CIO regional director for Illinois, filed a strong protest with the Housing Expediter's office against action of the Chicago rent control board in again recommending a 15% rent boost without holding a public hearing.

The Chicago board late last month made a similar recommendation, which was rejected by Woods' office.

Mann accused the board of holding "star-chamber sessions and denying me, as a representative of 250,000 CIO members, of a hearing on such a vital matter as rents."

Also urging the Housing Expediter to refuse the rent increase was the Chicago City Council. Alderman William J. Lancaster, sponsor of the resolution, claimed that 48% of landlords' applications for rent increases had been granted.

IN St. Louis, Mo., Mayor Aloys P. Kaufman, testifying before the area rent board, pleaded for continued controls, which, if lifted, would result, he said, in "extreme hardship and chaos."

Speaking before a five-man board, consisting of two realty company presidents, a business man, a former Congressman and a labor representative, the mayor warned that if the St. Louis area is decontrolled, he would insist upon adoption "of a strong and effective state rent control law."

To the applause of the landlord-majority audience a spokesman for the landlords denied the existence of a housing shortage in the area. "They claim there's a housing shortage because they don't want to pay increased rents," he complained.

Shortly thereafter the witness protested another tenant transgression:

"Tenants put as many as seven people in one apartment making a tenement house out of our places," he said.

Hit High Rentals —And Control, Too

The Natl. Apartment Owners' Association convention last week condemned exorbitant rents, evictions without just cause and the requirement that tenants pay premium bonuses to secure living quarters.

But. . . .

Speaker Irvin Borders, of the Foundation for Economic Education in New York, told the landlords that "Congress would be 'breaking faith' with the people if it continues rent control."

One apartment house owner had a better idea for getting rents up. Shower personal attentions on the tenants, advised Mayer I. Blum of Philadelphia.

Blum's attentiveness, which involves such niceties as sending flowers on wedding anniversaries or providing "mother-in-law" suites for unexpected guests, brings results. Of 520 families in his houses, 511 have signed voluntary 15% rent increases.

Aids Congressman

Duncan Clark, member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has taken a leave of absence from his job as assistant city editor of the Denver Rocky Mountain News to become secretary to Rep. John A. Carroll (D., Colo.).

Congressman's Advice:

WANT PLACE TO LIVE? YOU'RE UN-AMERICAN

A CONTEST of two opposed attitudes regarding the nation's housing problem will flare into the open when Congress gets down to serious business.

● According to published reports, Rep. Charles K. Fletcher (R. Calif.) declared at a Congressional housing hearing on the West Coast: "It is positively un-American for so many people to want so many things they cannot have."

● Two big organizations of housing officials, in a joint report, have called for construction of 1½ million homes a year—twice the present number—and recommended passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill as the only way of achieving that goal.

The two groups—the Natl. Public Housing Conference and the Natl. Association of Housing Officials—voiced strong support of the T-E-W bill, which would give government financial assistance to a program of big-scale building for middle and low income families.

The Public Housing Conference at the same time charged that Congressional housing hearings conducted by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis), Rep. Gamble (R. N.Y.) and Rep. Fletcher had been handled in a manner designed to discredit the need for government housing activity—and in particular the T-E-W bill.

The Conference charged that the schedule of witnesses had been "loaded" at their hearings so that spokesmen for public housing had little time to speak; that attempts were made to "hustle off the witness stand" persons disagreeing with the real estate lobby line of thought; pestering witnesses for public housing with technical questions; and hinting that the idea of public housing is either communistic or socialistic.

Real estate spokesmen, the Conference said, have plugged the line that the American public has an "over-inflated appetite" for homes, and has been led by propaganda of federal agencies to expect too much. That brought on Rep. Fletcher's "un-American" remark.

NLRB Refuses Vultee Plea

AN attempt by the Nashville Corp. (Consolidated Vultee) to have the Nat'l Labor Relations Board charge the CIO Steelworkers with unfair labor practices failed last week.

Paul Styles, Southern Regional NLRB director at Atlanta, dismissed the charges of the company, which is expected to appeal to the board at Washington.

Meanwhile, the strike of 1700 steelworkers entered its second week at the Consolidated Vultee. The strikers believe the dispute will decide whether American wage-earners have the right under the Taft-Hartley law to be represented by the union of their choice.

Management followed up the strike by obtaining an injunction limiting pickets and filed the NLRB charges.

Employes of the Vultee plant voted 903 to 464 for USA-CIO to reject the Machinists Union in an NLRB election Aug. 20, two days before the Taft- Hartley law went into effect. The company, refusing to honor the vote of its employes, contended that the IAM was still representing the employes and that it could not bargain with USA because it was "not certified."

Hillman Housing Group Started; Speakers Urge Congress Act

"SIDNEY HILLMAN could not have wished a better or more useful monument to his memory than the beautiful dwellings which will spring up shortly upon this scene to house the men, women and children who need so pressingly the real homes this will mean to them."

With these words, Hillman's successor as president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Jacob S. Potofsky, launched the Sidney Hillman Housing Development in New York City at groundbreaking ceremonies Nov. 15.

The development for 800 families—half of them to be veterans and their kin—adjoins the Amalgamated Cooperative Apartments, built 20 years ago under the guidance of Hillman. The old project will eventually become part of the Hillman development. The union also sponsored a cooperative apartment development in the Bronx 20 years ago. Potofsky continued:

"THE projects of 20 years ago have clearly demonstrated that Sidney Hillman's view was feasible. Not only have these projects housed and sheltered thousands of families of modest income, but they have helped hold down other living costs through rebates and cooperative benefits of many kinds."

Tenants invest at the rate of $600 a room, but the maximum average rental is restricted to $15 a room.

Former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and Mayor William O'Dwyer took the occasion to call upon Congress for passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill. The shovel used by the mayor for turning the first earth carries on its handle the date of Nov. 28, 1926, when ground was broken on the union's housing developments in Manhattan and the Bronx.

O'DWYER said that the 8600 Quonset huts which the "80th Congress made available to New York . . . was no answer to the housing problem. We need help from the 80th Congress but we won't get much help unless we all get together and shout for it." The crowd applauded.

"We need all the assistance the Federal Government can provide to stimulate both private and public rental housing," Gov. Lehman said. "The specific aids required are in the Taft-Ellender-Wagner long-range housing bill."

130,000 IN UE SEEK GE RISE

COST-OF-LIVING wage increases will be sought by the CIO Electrical Workers for 130,000 General Electric employes.

Delegates from 92 GE plants to a union conference in New York recently called for a three-point program: 1. A wage increase; 2. Curbs on profiteering; 3. Stabilization of prices at lower levels.

"Profits after taxes in our industry," the delegates stated, "are at an all-time peak. Productivity per worker in our industry has jumped 13½% since January, 1946. The cost of food, the major expense of every working family, has increased more than 40% during the last year."

GE's recent discontinuance of a profit-sharing system was scored by the delegates. A provision to make up the loss of income will be included in the union's next contract demands.

CSC Takes Light To Rural China

The CIO Nat'l Community Services Committee has given $7,500 to the American Committee in Aid of Chinese Industrial Cooperatives (Indusco) to set up an electrical cooperative in rural China.

The project, to be called the CIO-Gung-ho Electrical Cooperative, will serve as a production and training unit in conjunction with the cooperative Bailie School at Sandan, in northwest Kansu province.

Ship Union Strikes End

WITH the settlement last week of the 20-week strike at U. S. Steel's Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., Kearny, N. J., the nation-wide CIO Shipyard Workers' walkout which began last June came to an end.

Terms of the agreement paralleled those of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. settlement the previous week, providing wage increases of 12 cents an hour.

The pact provides that the company will rehire its striking employes without prejudice and protects them against a reduction in pay in cases of temporary assignment to jobs of lower classification. Seniority and grievance procedure clauses are similar to those in the previous contract, a union spokesman stated.

There were 3200 employes at the yard when the strike began.

Share Your Turkey With 'Silent Guest'

American families can share their Thanksgiving dinner this year with the hungry millions of war-devastated Europe, through the "Silent Guest" program launched by Gov. Robert F. Bradfort of Massachusetts and sponsored by the chief executives of all 48 States.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the American Silent Guest Committee formed to cooperate with the Committee of Governors in backing the program.

The funds will be used for CARE food packages, to be delivered to the needy of Europe as the Thanksgiving gift of the American people.

Fur Union Warned Of T-H Actions

The CIO Fur & Leather Workers executive board last week was warned that "some of the leaders of the Associated Fur Coat & Trimming Manufacturers have indicated that they intend to use the Taft-Hartley Act" when present contracts expire.

The warning was issued by Irving Potash, the union's New York Joint Council manager, at the board's semi-annual meeting in Atlantic City.

The Marshall Plan was condemned by union Pres. Ben Gold as being "a program of interfering in the economic life of these peoples and also to acquire military bases in Europe."

Gold said he was for humane support of European peoples, but asked, "Why did they scrap UNRRA if they really and sincerely mean to furnish help?"

To Publicize Needs

Chicago Social Service Employes of the CIO Office & Professional Workers last week voted to assess themselves an average $10 per member to finance a "public interpretation campaign" to publicize the salary needs of social workers.

Allis Local Decides To Sign Affidavit

Robert Buse, president of the CIO Auto Workers at Allis Chalmers, Milwaukee, Wis., announced last week that his local would file non-communist affidavits and financial reports in accordance with the Taft-Hartley Act.

Buse said the action would be taken under protest, and that "it in no way signifies a change of opinion on our part concerning the nature of the T-H Law. We are unanimous in our belief that this law is a bad one, designed to destroy unions and we shall not let up in our efforts to have it repealed." The local ended a 328-day strike last spring.

Railroad Trainmen On Radio Weekly

Second national labor union to sponsor a nationwide radio program is the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The union started a 52-week news analysis broadcast Sunday, Nov. 15, over the ABC network, with Dorothy Fuldheim as commentator.

The first union to sponsor such a program was the CIO Electrical Workers, whose weekly broadcast at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesdays over the Mutual network has been in progress for some months. UE's present commentator is Arthur Gaeth, who succeeded Leland Stowe.

'Taft-Hartley Bug' Bitten

CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter workers at the Nixon Nitration Works, Raritan Bay area, New Jersey, recently won a 9c hourly increase and overpowered what they termed the "Taft-Hartley bug," with which they believed the company had been smitten.

The union is one of those which has refused to comply with the T-H provisions necessary for certification or protection of union security by the NLRB.

Although the company's relations with the union had been friendly in the past, after succumbing to the "Taft-Hartley bug" it refused to extend the maintenance of membership provisions of the old agreement.

When the union's solidity became apparent and a last-ditch battle appeared in the offing, the company agreed to a clause which, the union claimed, gives the union greater security than before; a 9c hourly increase; a full hospitalization and sick benefit program financed by the company; election day as a seventh paid holiday.

Before Taft-Hartley, membership in the union was 88% of the workers; today it is 100%.

Oil Workers Up Pay $106,100,000

U. S. Oil Workers will have $106,100,000 more with which to meet high prices in the coming year, thanks to the CIO Oil Workers, Intl. Union, estimates OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight.

Average hourly wages for refinery workers is now $1.68, and for crude petroleum production workers, $1.57, according to OWIU Research Director E. E. Phelps.

In the past few years, OWIU has displaced Standard Oil (N. J.) as the shaper of the national wage pattern in the oil industry. Increases brought about through the union are going to most of the 200,000 workers in refineries and pipe lines, whether they are members of the union or not.

CIO Man Aids Drive

Joseph F. Collis, vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was in charge of the newspaper and publishing division of the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Community Chest drive. His group attained 116% of its goal. Collis is a member of the editorial staff of the Wilkes-Barre Record.

Pliofilm Plant Contract Won

Benefits won by the CIO Rubber Workers last spring will be included in the contract at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company's new air cushion-pliofilm plant at Akron, Ohio.

The factory is scheduled to begin production in January, 1948.

Some 100 workers will be affected by the national agreement, which will include paid vacations. The pliofilm workers will receive the same wage as other CIO Rubber Workers, who won 11½c hourly increases last spring.

Although this contract calls for an eight-hour day and 40-hour week, union spokesmen said there would be no departure from the six-hour day, 36-hour week provision in the unions' other agreements.

Guild Local Keeps Its Union Shop

The Manchester, N. H., CIO Newspaper Guild has signed a new contract, retaining its union (Guild) shop.

The local and the publisher of the Manchester Union-Leader, a daily newspaper, used the state version of the Taft-Hartley law, the Willey act, to conduct a union shop election. The vote was 55 to 0 for the union shop. The state attorney general has ruled that in the matter of union shop agreements, the Willey act supersedes T-H.

Hartley Wants More 'H' in T-H; NLRB Has Worst Backlog

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

MAYBE nobody told Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R. N.J.) of reports that the Republican high command had decided on stand pat on labor legislation in the remainder of the 80th Congress.

Anyway, last week, the junior partner in the Taft-Hartley combination announced his House Labor Committee would hold public hearings in January on proposed amendments to the T-H Act.

Hartley told reporters in Chicago that first consideration would be given to legislation to prohibit interference by strikers "with the civil rights of workers who want to stay on the job." He hastened to add that "we are not planning any strikebreaking measure. What we are interested in is to bring about a respect for law and order in American industrial disputes."

The committee chairman, perhaps with an eye to the publicity glare that lighted up the Hollywood hearings before the House Un-American Affairs Committee, announced he was calling Movie Producer Cecil B. DeMille as the first witness. DeMille, patron saint of the anti-closed shop forces, has appeared twice previously before Congressional committees.

MEANWHILE, another wishful legend that has grown up since the birth of T-H was deflated with a thud last week. The legend had been that T-H had made labor-management relations pretty close to sweetness and light and that there was little recourse to the board, even where a union's officials have signed non-Communist affidavits.

The NLRB last week announced that it had ended October, 1947, with the greatest backlog of pending cases in its 11-year history.

This is the NLRB breakdown:

"During the month of October, 964 cases were filed with NLRB. Of these, 351 alleged unfair labor practices by employers, 89 alleged unfair labor practices by labor organizations, and 524, or 54%, involved petitions for various types of elections.

"Election Cases Filed: Of the 524 petitions filed during the month:

"340 were petitions for collective bargaining elections; 45 were petitions to decertify unions; 139 were petitions for union-shop authorization elections.

"Of the 340 petitions for collective bargaining elections:

"145 were filed by AFL affiliates; 40 were filed by CIO affiliates; 110 were filed by independent unions; 45 were filed by employers.

"Of the 139 petitions for union-shop authorization elections:

"52 were filed by AFL affiliates; 1 was filed by a CIO affiliate; 86 were filed by independent unions.

"Collective Bargaining Election Results: 58 collective bargaining elections were conducted, in which 2,649 employes were eligible to vote. "Of the 17 elections in which AFL unions participated, they won at least a majority in 13 instances. They failed of a majority in 3 elections; in one election the results were indeterminate.

"CIO unions participated in two elections and won both.

"Of the 38 elections in which independent unions participated, they won 27 and lost 11.

"In one election, two individuals were chosen as the majority-designated representatives.

"Decertification Election Results: Five elections, each based upon consent of all parties, were conducted upon petitions by employes asserting that a labor organization no longer represented employes.

"Of these 5 decertification elections, 4 resulted in decertification; in one, the union won.

"Union-Shop Authorization Election Results: Thirty-one union-shop authorization polls were conducted. Each was based upon the consent of the parties.

"In only one election did the union fail to receive the support of the majority of the employes eligible. Twenty-seven of the 31 elections were won by independent unions; 3 were won by AFL affiliates; the remaining election was lost by an independent union.

"Charges of Unfair Labor Practices: A total of 440 charges of unfair labor practices were received during the month.

"Of the 351 charges of unfair labor practices brought against employers: 301 were filed by individuals; 26 were filed by AFL affiliates; 10 were filed by CIO affiliates; 14 were filed by independent unions.

"Of the 89 charges of unfair labor practices brought against unions: 46 were filed by employers and employer associations; 41 were filed by individuals; 2 were filed by independent unions; none was filed by either AFL or CIO affiliates.

"Cumulative Figures: At the end of October, 4,635 cases were pending disposition at various procedural levels.

"Of the cases, 3,212 were filed before Aug. 22, the effective date of the amended (T-H) Act."

ALSO last week, Lee Pressman in his capacity as general counsel of the CIO Steelworkers sent out a legal report to Steel district directors and staff representatives, in which he said: "Somewhat slowly and cautiously but without any doubt as to where it is headed, the T-H Board has begun to move."

After reviewing the months of September and October, Pressman draws this conclusion:

"The general counsel (Robert M. Denham of the NLRB), who has almost exclusive control of the injunction side of the attack on unions, is fully aware of the power that this gives him. In a speech in St. Louis, he referred to 'drastic powers inherent in the injunction sections' and spoke of 'their value as a preventative of open warfare.'

"You will recall how the act was highly touted as 'merely' a restraint upon labor leaders and not upon individual workers. The cases I have outlined are cases in which in every instance the rights of workers were smashed."

Prices? We're Sure Way Up In 'Em

of profits, prices, production and wages, the publication—issued by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research—said that to avoid further inflation "we must re-impose price controls to prevent the profiteers and speculators from further milking the American people of their dwindling savings and low earnings."

ASSERTING that "wages are lagging behind prices," the publication said that "we are in the midst of an inflationary crisis brought on through greed and profiteering."

The publication emphasized that prices and profits have far outrun wages, which it estimated had increased only 17% on a basis of average weekly earnings since mid-1946. It quoted Federal Reserve Board surveys of consumer finances to show that the top 10% of the nation's income earners hold 60% of the savings, while the bottom 70% of income earners had merely 13% of total savings.

Corporate profits have reached an all-time high of $17.4 billion during 1947, the Outlook noted. (This was before O'Mahoney's estimate.) It recalled that a year ago when CIO had predicted corporate profits of $16.1 billion for this year, the estimate "was attacked by big business as being fantastic, unreasonable and far above any possible anticipated level of profits."

IN 13 representative industries, the Outlook said, average hourly earnings have increased from 16% to 36% since June, 1945, while wholesale prices in the same industries have jumped from 15% to 93%.

Noting that prices of some raw materials were due "in part" to wage increases, the Outlook said that "in the raw material industries, wages . . . constitute only a small part of the total value of the product turned out in that industry. Consequently, these raw material industries could absorb the increased costs resulting from wage increases. But instead of absorbing the small increases in cost, they pass these higher costs on to the processors in the form of higher prices, prices far higher than were necessary to offset the wage increases in their industry.

"Therefore, by the time excessive price increases of raw materials are pyramided on each other, the final processor has comparatively large price increases in the materials which he uses in his manufacturing process."

Truman Worries GOP

quest would move quickly through Congress.

Indication of the jumpy state of Republican nerves was Taft's inability to schedule joint hearings by the three committees having jurisdiction over the price control program. Rep. Wolcott (R., Mich.), head of the House Banking Committee, gave a flat turndown to the suggestion that his group meet with the Senate Banking Committee and Taft's own committee on the Economic Report.

Further complicating the picture was a report, published in the Chicago Sun, that Taft's own economic advisors had recommended at least a partial return to price controls, even before the President made public his own message. Taft was said to have dumped the secret report of his brain trusters in a quiet ceremony.

Taft's fight against controls led the St. Louis Post-Dispatch—one of the Republican Mid-West's most influential papers—to comment that "Sen. Taft and the Republican leadership do not, in short, have any effective ideas about how to control inflation."

The paper said their action gives strength to the belief that "they have been in opposition so long that they are not in the frame of mind to assume responsibility and come forward with an affirmative program."

T-H All Over In UE Strike

TAFT-HARTLEY weapons were hurled so fast at 275 striking employes of the Cory Coffee Brewer Co. in Chicago during the first week of their walkout, that heads are still swimming.

In negotiations which preceded the walkout, the company sought the right to discharge individual members of the CIO Electrical Workers in the event of strikes or stoppages, and refused, according to the union, to consider any wage demands.

On Oct. 1, expiration date, all stewards were called for a conference, a union spokesman said, while the plant's foremen circulated among the workers in an effort to obtain signatures on decertification cards.

Previously, the company had conducted elections in each department for a "workers' committee" to take the place of the UE committee.

Two days after the strike began, the company following a 15-minute hearing, obtained a Superior Court injunction, limiting the number of pickets to ten.

Fur Union Plans Health Tests

SOME 10,000 New York CIO fur workers will have both heart examinations and chest X-rays under a health project sponsored by the CIO Furriers Joint Council in cooperation with public health groups in New York City.

According to medical authorities, electro-cardigrams to detect heart abnormalities have never before been used on the scale encompassed in this survey. The New York Heart Association has been assisting the Furriers Council in setting up this first mass survey of an industrial group. Also cooperating with the union's health program is the Lower West Side Health Council.

Pioneers in union health field, the CIO Fur Workers Union in cooperation with the N. Y. Tuberculosis and Health Assn., has been conducting regular mass chest X-ray surveys of its members for some years.

Examinations in the new health program will be conducted daily in the union's auditorium, 250 West 26th St., Monday through Friday from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m.

U.S. PASSENGER SHIPS DOWN TO 36

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S Advisory Committee on the Merchant Marine last week concluded that "a modern, efficient American merchant fleet and a progressive shipbuilding industry are indispensable to our national security, and that these are sufficiently essential to our peacetime economy, as well, to justify the Government financial aid that is necessary to maintain them."

Provision for such government subsidies was made in the 1936 Merchant Marine Act, applied with Congressional approval during the war. Under the Act, government money on a subsidized ship is returned by the operator after a 10 per cent profit has been earned over a 10-year period.

In recommending that the U. S. subsidize shipbuilding up to 50 per cent, the Committee, composed of five top industrial executives, joined the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, which had been urging the same measure for the past year.

The committee, however, warned against use of American resources to dominate world trade —a move, it claimed, which would result in "retaliatory measures from those nations receiving real or fancied hurts."

War losses reduced the American passenger ship fleet from a prewar 127 to the present 36 vessels.

Pointing to the need for passenger ships, the report stated: "These ships not only fail to meet the standards of safety at sea prescribed by the U. S. Coast Guard regulations, but in some cases fall short of meeting the requirements established by the International Convention of Safety of Life at Sea."

The American shipbuilding industry, the report says, "is rapidly approaching inactivity" while foreign ship construction is racing full speed ahead.

Except for five small vessels recently ordered, ship construction now under contract in American yards will have been completed early next year.

Maritime Workers

Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, in a letter to Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Neb.), chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee, demanded that the projected sale of 96 tankers to foreign nations be stopped.

Essentially the same arguments for government stimulation of Merchant Marine expansion were posed by IUMSW Pres. John Green last May in a booklet titled "The Nation That Invented the Steamship Must Now Use It."

Green stressed the importance of a healthy American Merchant Marine in the maintenance of American prosperity, world trade and world peace.

"Every American shipyard worker keeps 6.5 other American men at work in other industries supplying material to build the ship—not only steel, but other metals and lumber, paint, electrical equipment, etc. . . . material from 46 states," Green stated.

Support of the union's call for government shipbuilding subsidies came from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who in a letter to Green last March wrote: "Obviously we should not repeat the mistakes of 25 years ago by allowing our merchant marine to rust and decay."

ACW Wins 12½c Hike

SOME 150,000 employes of the men and boys' clothing industry will receive cost-of-living increases of 12½ cents an hour and a second week's paid vacation under an agreement reached between CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Clothing Manufacturers Association of America.

Effective Dec. 15, the new boost will bring the industry's average wage to about $1.50 an hour.

The union's president, Jacob S. Potofsky, deplored the necessity of continually trying to keep pace with rising prices.

"The sole aim of the 12½-cent increase is to put us back to where we were a year ago," he stated. "It is obvious that what is needed is a system of price controls to eliminate this constant sparring to make ends meet."

This makes the third increase the CIO Clothing Workers have received since the war. A 15-cent rise was negotiated in 1945, followed by a 12½-cent increase last year.

The current increase, together with the extra week's vacations, will boost the industry's wages by about $50,000,000 a year, the union estimated.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The United Steelworkers of America, District No. 11, held its regional conference and banquet Saturday, November 15, in Reading, Pa. This District was organized a few years back and today almost every steelworker in the area is a member. Regional Director Medrick was honored by the delegates by the presentation of a watch and traveling bag.

Vice Presidents James A. Thimmes and Van A. Bittner and Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, addressed the gathering. The writer addressed the delegates at the banquet, which was the largest gathering the steelworkers have ever had. Director Medrick, who is also CIO Regional Director in the Harrisburg area, and his staff are to be complimented.

Everybody is proud of the union and is determined to push it forward. Political action and financial contributions were unanimously approved and a number of local unions are over the top already.

The following day, representatives of the AUTW and ACEW met at Reading, Pa., with the Secretary-Treasurer of TWOC-CIO, Ted Silvey, and the writer. A splendid session was held and everyone left enthused and determined to push forward to build a strong union.

The United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers of Northern California and Nevada are under process of taking their primary ballot. The Executive Board of this organization recommended CIO affiliation by a very substantial majority. New members are being signed up daily in TWOC-CIO in West Virginia following conferences held on November 9.

Educational conferences have been held also throughout the State of Oregon prior to taking a vote among the membership. Miss Ruth Wiencek of TWOC-CIO is out there addressing these gatherings. Many requests for assistance have been received from the area and will be responded to when the staff is completed.

The 80th Congress has just convened for a Special Session. President Truman read his message and the usual partisan approach has been shown. CIO will examine the message later before any official position is taken.

Senator Taft claims to be against regimentation of any kind but loses no opportunity to regiment labor. Our duty as never before is to keep organizing, educating and activizing our people to meet this challenge.

Reuther Supporters Win Three Auditors' Positions

THE CIO Auto Workers' convention wound up in a late session that handed many important policy matters over to the new executive board for action.

The matters include foreign policy, wages and political action.

The convention elected these regional directors, who will sit on the 22-man executive board along with Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, Vice-Pres. Richard Gosser and Vice-Pres. John W. Livingston:

Pro-Reuther: Michael Lacey and Norman Matthews, Detroit East Side; Ed Cote and Joseph McCusker, Detroit West Side; Donnell Chapman, Flint, Mich.; Leonard Woodcock, Muskegon; Ray Berndt, Indiana; Pat Greathouse Illinois-Wisconsin; Russel Lettner St. Louis; Charles Ballard, Toledo; Bill McAulay, Pontiac; Tom Starling, Atlanta; Martin Gerber New York; Charles Kerrigan, New York.

Opposition: George Burt, Canada; Cyril O'Halloran, California; Paul Miley, Ohio-Pennsylvania; Richard Reisinger, Ohio.

Their margins ranged from 638 for Lacey to 8 for Burt. Starling, Gerber and McAulay were unopposed.

Under the UAW's system of giving each board member a proportion of votes based on office or size of region represented, Reuther and his supporters will have a voting strength of 1035 to 99. In pre-convention board meetings, Reuther was usually outvoted, 744½ to 309½.

The convention adopted a suggestion of Reuther that three trustees be named to audit the books of the secretary-treasurer quarterly. The nominations, made on the last evening of the convention, were given a touch of comedy when Delegate Joseph C. Ptaszynski, Hamtramck Dodge Local 3, moved that every delegate present — nearly 2000 — be nominated and those who wanted to run could take the microphone and announce their intention. The motion carried.

Elected on a show of hands were Joseph Craig, Hagerstown, Md.; Michael Novak, Detroit, and King Pederson, Buffalo, all Reuther supporters.

An ovation occurred when Reuther, in accepting reelection, introduced his parents to the audience. They are Mr. and Mrs. Valentine (Val) Reuther.

The convention, after considerable discussion, voted to raise the president's salary from $9000 to $10,000; the secretary-treasurer from $8500 to $9500; the two vice presidents from $7000 to $8000, and the directors from $5000 to $6500.

Late in the convention, R. J. Thomas, former president of UAW who was defeated in his race for reelection as vice president, took the microphone and said he would "be the first" to applaud any achievements of the new administration. He denied what he called "loose talk" which named him as leader of a split in the UAW.

After the convention, Reuther, Mazey, Gosser and Livingston signed non-Communist affidavits for the Natl. Labor Relations Board. The convention had approved such action.

Explain U.S. Plan To WFTU

THE World Federation of Trade Unions opened an important meeting of its executive bureau in Paris last week, with four CIO spokesmen on hand to explain and argue for adoption of CIO's views on foreign aid.

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, had expressed hope a week earlier that the U. S. delegation would be able to win acceptance of its views for relief and rehabilitation without political interference.

The CIO delegation consists of Carey, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross and Elmer Cope of the steel union, who is stationed in Paris as a WFTU assistant general secretary. John Abt, Amalgamated counsel, is accompanying the group.

In New York, Rosenblum—a vice-president of the world labor group—said he would present to the WFTU the CIO Convention statement on foreign policy. That resolution, he pointed out before leaving for France, rejects the inevitability of war, calls for Big Three unity, and urges destruction of all traces of fascism in Germany and Japan.

"While CIO is anxious to see Germany once again a useful member of the family of nations," Rosenblum declared, "we are absolutely opposed to any attempts to rebuild her potential and make her again a threat to the peace of the world."

He noted that CIO supports the European aid program as envisaged in the Marshall Plan, and pointed out that the people of Europe would reject or resent relief or other help that "has strings attached."

Meanwhile, the United Press reported from Moscow that the Soviet trade union paper, Trud, had voiced sharp criticism of the Marshall Plan.

The Soviet labor organ said that Russion delegates to the WFTU meeting have been given instructions to "try to assure that the World Federation should be transformed into an efficient militant arm of the international working class."

Carey, in a press conference prior to leaving for France, said he saw no need for a "battle of ideologies" at the Paris meeting. CIO will seek to convince European workers, he declared, that the aid plan will be of benefit to them, that American labor will fight all political interference in its administration and combat Wall Street efforts to run the show.

Contagious!

Rock Hill, S. C., last week provided an example of how CIO wage increases spread to other groups.

Two days after the CIO Textile Workers, which holds contracts in six of Rock Hill's ten textile mills, announced negotiation of a 9% wage rise, municipal employes were granted a corresponding increase by the city council. The increase was directly attributed to the CIO gains by the bill's sponsor, Councilman W. P. Sibley.

Murray's 10 Basic Principles For Foreign Aid Program

HERE are the 10 "basic principles" on which Pres. Murray feels the nation's foreign aid program should be carried out:

1. The aid should be provided to all nations who need it to enable them to actually become self-supporting, economically healthy, and able to participate in general European rehabilitation.

2. The aid should be given without political or economic strings designed to restrict the social or economic or political forms which the European people should freely choose for themselves.

3. The aid should be ample enough to do the job so that a healthy self-supporting Europe will be created at the end of the program.

4. We must enable Europe to export goods, not only to the rest of the world, but also to us, and eventually we must be prepared to accept from Europe as much in goods as we ship to her.

5. We should oppose any attempt to treat Europe like a bankrupt corporation on which a first mortgage, impossible of future liquidation, can be obtained at bargain prices.

Repayment should not be the first consideration. We must stand firmly on our conviction that working people are the world's best investment, not to be measured in dollars and cents, but by the larger common denominator of world peace.

6. We must recognize that an adequate program of aid will require that we give more attention to the economic dangers to America.

Since some shortages of food, materials, and equipment may result from a European program, there must be assurance that what is available to our own people is distributed equitably without regard to income, or whether a business is large or small. We must take steps necessary in the way of controls to prevent speculation, further inflation, or rising prices.

7. As a condition to meeting our domestic and foreign responsibilities, an expanding American economy is required, with increases in our industrial capacity wherever they are necessary.

8. The aid program should be administered by men who are representatives of the best aspirations of the American people and who can win the confidence of the people of Europe. Adequate participation in administration by labor will aid in avoiding the mistakes in reconstruction that followed World War I.

9. Because Europe must be able to make advance plans over the next few years to become self-supporting, the agency we establish to administer the program should have power to give reasonable assurances to Europe. A policy of merely making yearly appropriations may defeat the goal of self-support.

10. The form of organization to administer the program should be such as to provide the speediest and most effective aid, and achieve the objectives indicated above.

Give $1,000 To Chile Miners

A THOUSAND-DOLLAR gift from CIO to striking miners in Chile was presented last week to Sen. Salvador Ocampo of the Latin-American republic.

The money, presented in behalf of CIO unions in the New York area, was handed to the Senate by Jacob Potofsky, head of the clothing union and chairman of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee.

Potofsky, who reported that Chilean miners have been subjected to a reign of terror at the hands of their government, promised more money would be raised among union workers in this country to help their southern neighbors. Sen. Ocampo, who received the gift, is an official of the labor federation of Chile.

At the same time, Potofsky wrote a sharp letter to Don Marcial Mora, Chile's ambassador to Washington.

"We have been appalled," he said, "by the terror tactics used against the 17,000 miners striking for a better life.

"More recent information indicates that the suppression of all civil liberties and economic rights of workers in Chile has now spread to other industries. There is the gravest danger that all free trade unions will be liquidated as a result of the government policy.

"The conscience of free Americans has been shocked by the violence and terror that has been used against Chilean workers who seek to improve their economic status."

When the Rev. Jesse Weyman Routee (above) went down to Mobile, Ala., he received treatment fit for a "visiting dignitary." The Negro Lutheran minister from New York said he owed the royal reception to a rented turban and a slight Swedish accent. This differed radically from his experience in 1943.

Set Up Group To Back Aid

Top leaders of CIO are members of the newly formed Committee for the Marshall Plan to Aid European Recovery, a group sponsored by leading figures in civic affairs, religion, education, industry and labor.

On the committee's executive board is Secy.-Treas. James Carey, a member of the 19-man Harriman Report Committee, which issued a report early this month on how the nation should help Europe.

Pres. Murray, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, AFL Pres. Green and several other AFL officials are also members of the committee. Chairman of the new group is former Secty. of War Stimson.

Purpose of the committee is to educate the U. S. public on the Marshall Plan and to build support for foreign-aid legislation.

House Group Asks Passage Of Bill To Admit DPs

THE CIO-indorsed Stratton Bill, which would admit 400,000 displaced persons into the United States during the next few years, received support last week from a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

The three-man group, headed by Rep. Fulton (R., Pa.), returned from a study of European DP camps and urged quick action by the United States to help clear up the problem of several hundred thousand war refugees scattered throughout Europe.

The CIO convention, in voicing indorsement of the Stratton bill, backed up earlier statements by Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. Carey.

The subcommittee report said that opening of immigration to Palestine for Jewish DP's—about 22 per cent of the total number—would break the current log-jam and speed final settlement of the refugees regardless of religion or nationality.

Chances for passage of the bill boomed last week when Sen. Taft, GOP leader in the Upper House, said he favored priority action on the DP problem.

Give Labor A Voice In Aid—CIO

CIO has sent to the White House a recommended "Ten Commandments" to insure that Marshall Plan aid to Europe serves the people's interests at home and abroad.

The suggestions for a set of broad principles to govern the nation's foreign aid program were made public by CIO Pres. Philip Murray two days after he had conferred at the White House with Pres. Truman.

Major points in the CIO set of principles called for aid to be given without political strings; opposed treating European nations like a "bankrupt corporation on which a first mortgage . . . can be obtained at bargain prices"; and strongly urged an adequate voice in the new administrative organization for labor representatives at the policy, operating and staff levels.

Murray spoke out against the dangers of staffing the new aid organization with men whose "narrowness of view . . . characterizes certain segments of the business community."

Labor Claims Right

"Labor claims the right to participate fully in all phases of the administration of the program," he declared, "so that our experience, our aspirations and our desire to contribute will find full expression."

The foreign aid program, Murray's memorandum warned, will face "an almost unsurmountable obstacle" if we attempt to force our "social or economic or political views" on any other country receiving Marshall Plan benefits.

CIO's position on that point contrasts sharply with that of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers. The NAM recently asked that no aid be given to any country which refuses to promise to cut down and remove all price controls soon as possible.

The possibility that U. S. politics and economic views will be exported along with the foreign aid has been a major source of criticism of the aid program abroad.

Pres. Murray, taking note of that type of criticism, said that the democratic-minded people of the U. S. should have confidence that "people who are actually free to choose their way of life will choose the road to democracy and choose the road of friendship with a free, liberal and progressive United States."

On the home front, Murray said, the aid program may be handicapped unless the new aid organization is staffed by a group of competent citizens who are permitted to work in a climate free from hysteria.

Blasts Hysteria

Many able persons refuse to enter government service now "because of the current atmosphere in which people may be subject to instant discharge on the basis of vague and unspecified charges," he commented.

"Adequate safeguards for their civil and political and social rights are indispensable to the recruitment of self-respecting competent Americans to a government program."

Georgetown Memorial:

TRUMAN TO HELP AT CIO UNVEILING

PRES. TRUMAN will unveil the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial plaque on Monday, Dec. 1, at the Georgetown University Hospital in Washington.

The plaque commemorates the gift by the CIO of $55,000 to the hospital's Children's Wing.

Truman also will make an address. Other speakers will be CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States; Very Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, S. J., president of Georgetown University; Rev. Paul A. McNally, S. J., dean of the university Medical School and regent of the university medical center, and Elliott Roosevelt, son of the late President.

Sylvia Altman, pianist, will play the "Star Spangled Banner."

Pres. Murray, commenting on the gift at the CIO convention, said Georgetown's new hospital was chosen because it does not practice discrimination in admitting and treating patients and that the wing's patients would be "afflicted little children, some of them suffering from the physical condition that was overcome by Pres. Roosevelt."

Hartley Touring As Congress Sits

Congress last week was sitting in a solemn, emergency session seeking a solution for the critical economic situation at home and abroad.

But, Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R., N. J.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, was not sitting with his colleagues. Hartley was on a tour giving employer and legal groups the lowdown on his favorite topic —the Taft-Hartley law. His Washington office said he was not expected back "until sometime in December."

CIO Fights 'Racial' Deals

CIO and 30 of its affiliated unions went into the U. S. Supreme Court last week with a legal brief aimed at smashing "racial covenants" under which persons are barred from selling their homes to individuals of other races or nationalities.

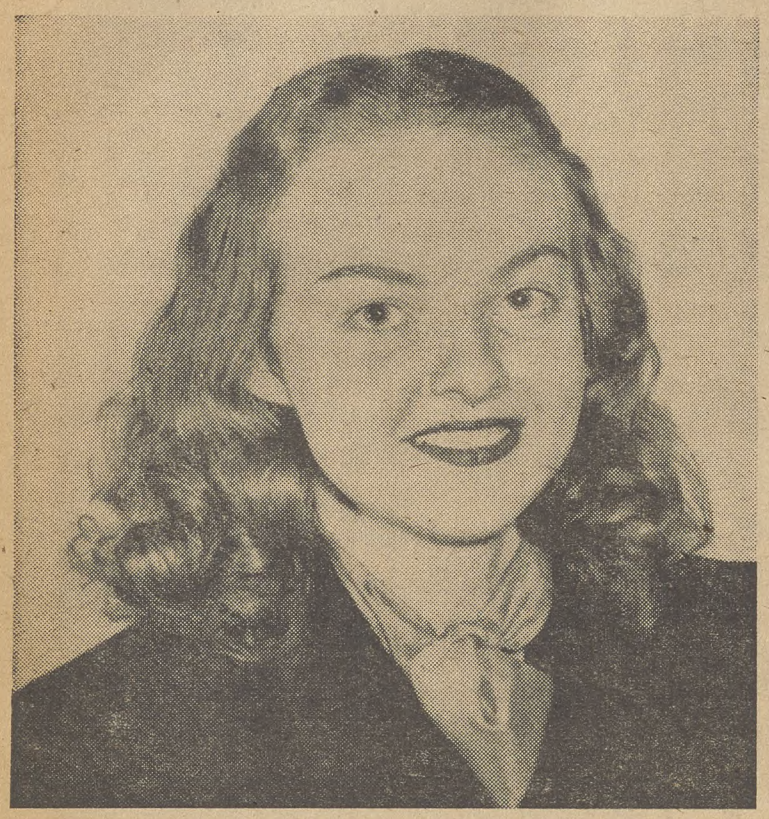
Four cases testing the principle are up for consideration in the high court, and CIO joined with a number of other organizations in filing the briefs as "friends of the court."

"Restrictive covenants have imposed upon . . . Negro workers unbelievable hardships in obtaining adequate housing," the CIO brief, prepared by General Counsel Lee Pressman and his assistants, declared.

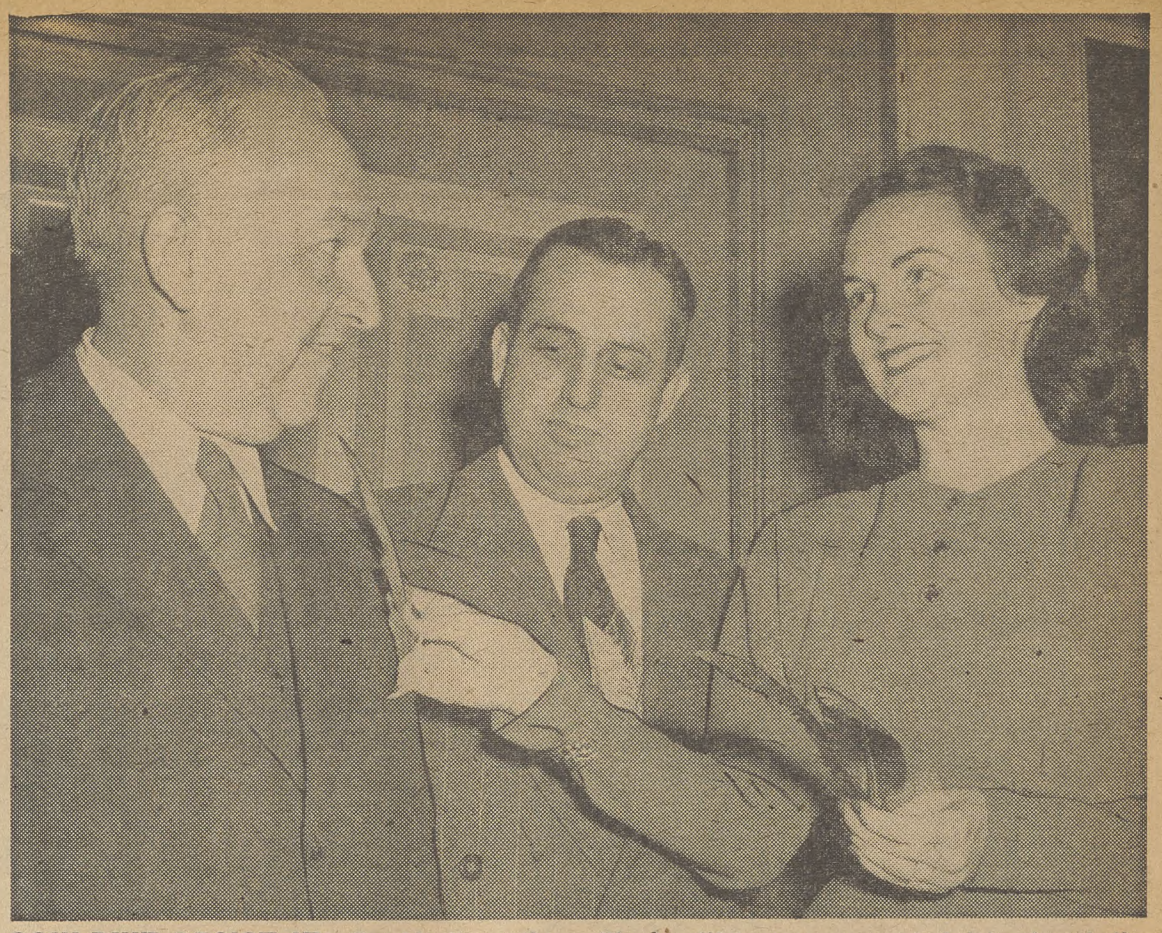
The covenants were challenged in the CIO brief on the basis that they deprive Negro property buyers of due process of law; that they defy federal laws about acquiring property, and that they contradict the United Nations charter in which the U. S. promised to promote observance of basic liberties without racial distinction.

Truman Thanks Carey For Work

President Truman last week thanked CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey "for the time, energy and interest" he devoted to the Harriman committee of citizens which submitted the report on European Recovery and Foreign Aid.



QUEEN'S SMILE: Mary Fisher, St. Louis Post-Dispatch stenographer, has reason to flash a happy smile because she has been chosen Miss Page One of 1947 and will preside over the Page One Ball of the St. Louis Newspaper Guild to be held Nov. 26.



COULDN'T RESIST IT: Frankly, it was the young lady at the right of the above picture who made the CIO News editors break what they thought was an iron-clad rule. They knew it would be impossible to run all union-Community Chest pictures submitted, so they decided to run none. When they received the picture shown above, they said "to heck with the rule" and sent it to the engraver. The beautiful young woman is helping launch the Memphis Community Chest drive. She's pinning a red feather on John M. McGregor, drive chairman, as B. R. Allen, chairman of the Memphis CIO Council and president of the Firestone Rubber Workers local, looks on. The girl? Oh, she's Barbara Jo Walker of Memphis, recently Crowned Miss America of 1947... So, do you blame us for breaking our rule?

Wage-Hour Administrator Asks 75c Minimum

AMENDMENTS to the U. S. Wage-Hour law — probably to limit its coverage over workers in a number of industries—will be introduced in Congress next January and will come up for action in February.

The prediction was voiced by Rep. Samuel McConnell (R., Pa.), head of the House Labor subcommittee, which has been conducting hearings for the past several weeks.

McConnell and the GOP majority on the committee, in a series of questions directed at witnesses, have indicated strong interest in lifting the straight time work week from the present 40 hours to 44 or even 48. Time and a half pay is now required after 40 hours a week.

Last week the present Wage-Hour Administrator and his predecessor in the job both urged that the present 40c minimum under the law should be substantially raised.

At the same time, the committee received a strong demand from Pres. Donald Henderson of the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers to appear as a witness to back up his earlier charges of a "conspiracy" to weaken the federal wage law.

Henderson's statement had been filed on Nov. 13 with the committee. That group, a sub-committee of Rep. Fred Hartley's Labor Committee, was particularly wrought up over Henderson's claim that a "conspiracy exists in Congress to tear the guts out of the Wage-Hour Act just as the guts were torn out of the Wagner Act when the Taft-Hartley Act was passed."

In a letter to McConnell the FTA president said he could back up his charges. He predicted that the sub-committee would grant a "token increase" in minimum pay while cutting down the coverage of the law over workers who are entitled to extra pay after 40 hours of work a week.

From Metcalfe Walling, a former Wage-Hour administrator, the committee heard recommendations for a raise in base pay under the law from 40 cents to 65 cents and a change in the law to give the administrator a chance to interpret the law.

William R. McComb, the present Wage-Hour head, asked for a raise in the minimum rate to 75 cents,

Mass Arrests in Illinois; Kidnapping in Georgia

The woman at the left, Mrs. Edna Martin, a volunteer Textile Union organizer, was kidnapped from her room and threatened with shooting if she continued her work in Tallapoosa, Ga. With her is Kenneth Douty, State Textile director. The picture was taken in Tallapoosa where Mrs. Martin later assisted a crew of Textile Union organizers in distributing leaflets.

In the scene above, a man demonstrating in sympathy with Chicago CIO Electrical strikers is manhandled by plainclothesmen. He had been in a parade. In the incident, 183 persons were arrested. Local union officials said the violence scenes were staged by police for the benefit of news photographers and for court evidence. The strike is at the Cory plant.

Drive Against Labor:

WOMAN KIDNAPPED; COPS ARREST 183

Georgia

By TOM NOWELL

AT midnight, Monday, Nov. 17, Mrs. Edna Martin, 41, widowed mother of six children and a volunteer organizer for the CIO Textile Workers, was kidnapped from the room she had rented that day in Tallapoosa, Georgia.

She was tossed half clad into the rear of an open truck, driven for hours over rough roads, and was thrown out with the warning: "You will be shot on sight if you return to Tallapoosa. We don't want any CIO."

On Monday, Nov. 24, Mrs. Martin, with Kenneth Douty, Georgia TWU Director and an escort of men from TWU and the CIO Organizing Commitee, handbilled Tallapoosa. There was no shooting.

Mrs. Martin, who came into the union the hard way through the 18-month strike at Athens Manufacturing Co., is the mother of Grady Martin, 26, who served as a Sergeant in World War II. He now holds the commission of Reserve Lieutenant, and is a student at the University of Georgia under the GI Bill of Rights.

ASSIGNED to organize the American Thread Co. Mill at Tallapoosa, Mrs. Martin had been visiting that town each week. At the suggestion of workers in the mill, she rented a room. She went out about her duties, and returned late in the evening.

Exhausted, she bathed and went to bed. About 11:15, there was a rapping at her door. A woman's voice called: "Mrs. Martin, I must see you." Mrs. Martin asked if the woman were alone, and was told "no." She then explained she had retired, and asked her caller to return in the morning.

WHILE she was speaking, she heard the window slide open and when she turned around she found nine persons, five of them women dressed in denim shirts and pants, in her room.

The leader, an elderly man with shifty eyes, told Mrs. Martin to get out of town.

"My boy fought for four years," Mrs. Martin told the man. "I can come and go as I please, thanks to my boy and the millions like him."

The four men, each armed with a shot gun, seemed to hesitate. Mrs. Martin asked permission to dress. The leader shouted: "You won't need a dress where you are going." He turned to one of the other men and ordered: "Get that hemp rope out of the truck."

THE elderly man then permitted Mrs. Martin to dress, but all of the men refused to leave the room. She slipped her nightgown over her shoulder, her dress over her head, and was then trussed up with the rope, gagged with a filthy handkerchief and forced to walk to the truck.

Mrs. Martin said she was amazed and shamed by the obscene language used by both men and women kidnappers. She was thrown barefooted into the rear of the open pickup truck and a woman sat on her chest and stomach to hold her down.

Near Bremen, Ga., Mrs. Martin was dragged from the truck, thrown into the road, and her luggage and shoes were thrown after her. She walked about an hour to find the highway, was picked up by a motorist and driven into Bremen, where she spent the night with friends. The hoodlum band profited by their cowardly act. Ten dollars, a $65 watch given her by her son, and several items of Mrs. Martin's clothing were missing.

EARLY last week Kenneth Douty, Georgia TWUA director, filed charges against the American Thread Co., with the National Labor Relations Board.

"We regret having to file these charges," Douty said. "Our relations with the company at its Dalton mill have been very harmonious.

"However, we are in possession of evidence that leaves little doubt that the kidnaping was part of planned company activity on the part of the Tallapoosa mill officials to deny to their employes the right to have a union."

Douty asked that NLRB make an immediate investigation of the charges. He also requested that an investigation be made by law enforcement officers at Tallapoosa.

Chicago

THREE local union officials were sentenced to 90 days in jail and 183 persons were arrested as the CIO Electrical Workers walkout at the Cory Corp., Chicago, went into its fourth week.

Sentenced for contempt of court following injunction proceedings were Pat Amato, president of UE Local 1150; Irving Krane, business manager and Lee Lundgreen, financial secretary. Twenty-six persons were originally cited.

Hearings on the arrest of 183 demonstrators in an anti-Taft-Hartley law parade began last week. The marchers passed in front of the Cory plant, where police broke up the demonstration, immediately silencing Leo Turner, UE international representative, who rose to speak, when they arrested him along with the 182 others.

THERE was no violence or attempt to resist police, the local's publicity director, Eugene Raleigh, stated. "The police staged their own violence scenes for the benefit of news photographers and court evidence," Raleigh said.

The strike began Nov. 1 when the coffee brewer company refused to recognize the union any longer, although UE had been the bargaining agent for the 275 employees for the past six years.

A series of T-H weapons immediately hurled at the strikers included an injunction to limit the number of pickets to 10 at the plant; a supplementary injunction further limiting the number to four; filing of decertification petitions with the NLRB; mass arrests and the sentencing of union leaders.

TO FURTHER encourage repudiation of the union by employees, the company offered all strikebreakers concessions demanded by the strikers—a 20c hourly increase and six paid holidays, Raleigh said.

Labor Protesting Penna. Decision

Labor in Lackawanna County, Pa., is united in protest against a ruling of a county court judge that failure to file non-Communist affidavits is illegal and tantamount to treason.

The ruling, handed down against the CIO Communication Workers by Judge Will Leach, is being appealed to the State Supreme Court. ACA members are on strike against Station WGBI, Scranton. Protests against the ruling have been made by CIO Regional Director Joseph M. Walsh; CIO Newspaper Guild Vice Pres. Joseph F. Collis, Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the AFL District 1. The two largest unions in the Lackawanna area, the CIO Steelworkers and AFL Miners, like ACA, have refused to sign the affidavits and file financial statements under the Taft-Hartley Law.

Steel Files NLRB Brief On Vultee

COUNSEL for the CIO Steelworkers last week filed a brief with NLRB General Counsel Robert Denham denying the union is violating the Taft-Hartley law in connection with a strike of employes of the Consolidated Vultee Corp., Nashville, Tenn.

The brief specifically denied company complaints filed with Denham that the USA is violating Section 8 (b) (4) (c) of the Act, which makes illegal a strike to force a company to recognize a union when another has been "certified" by the Labor Board.

The brief made three principal arguments:

1. The Intl. Association of Machinists, with which the company signed a new contract last spring after the CIO had petitioned for an NLRB election, has never been certified. It was first recognized in 1941 after a consent election by the NLRB regional director, and the election produced no technical certification.

2. Results of the 1941 election are obsolete after the 6-year interval, particularly in view of the USA-CIO's 903-464 victory in an NLRB election Aug. 21, the day before major sections of the Taft-Hartley act came into effect.

3. The NLRB, by ordering the election in August, held in effect that there is no binding certification of the IAM, and that a legal question did exist as to the majority union.

The Consolidated Vultee petition against the USA-CIO was ruled out by the Atlanta regional office of the NLRB, and the firm subsequently appealed the case to the NLRB's general counsel.

The U. S. Circuit Court recently upheld the NLRB order that 142 employees be reinstated by the Sandy Hill Iron & Brass Co. As a result of a complaint by the CIO Steelworkers, the board found that in selecting the list for discharge the company had chosen a large proportion of Union members even though they had more seniority and skill than non-union members.

Columbus Labor:

UNITED IN BATTLE ON PAYROLL TAX

UNITED LABOR in Columbus, capital city of Ohio, is fighting a proposed "income tax," which is actually a wage or payroll tax.

The tax, expected to be approved this week by the City Council, which is composed of seven Republicans, is a so-called income tax—one-half of 1%—on corporation profits and salaries or wages.

But, Labor points out, the tax is inequitable: payrolls are taxed on the gross amount, while corporations may make permissible deductions from profits for operating expenses. The net result is a wage tax similar to that imposed in Philadelphia.

(Columbus was not the only city afflicted with wage taxitis. The Republican Philadelphia Inquirer, in an exclusive story, stated that the city council was about to increase the wage tax from 1% to 1¼ or 1½%. Since the inception of the Philadelphia wage tax about 10 years ago, the city fathers have given the citizens drinking water that is so vile no printable word can be used to describe it.)

Both the local and Ohio CIO and AFL bodies are in the fight against the tax, which was unveiled four days after the November 4 municipal election. During the campaign, there was no mention of taxes. Labor, immediately upon passage of the tax, will distribute legal petitions for a referendum vote. Between 4100 and 4200 signatures are needed.

LAST week, a protest by CIO and AFL leaders who filled the City and Council chambers to overflowing delayed passage of the bill. A public hearing was called for later last week. However, though it was anticipated that Council would adopt the tax law, both CIO and AFL confidently expect the referendum will defeat the measure and stave off a rash of such wage taxes all over Ohio.

Opposition of labor has already reduced the tax proposal from 1% to one-half of 1%. The tax is based on the model provided by Toledo, where a similar—1%—tax was put into effect 18 months ago. There, a referendum sponsored by the CIO resulted in the tax being sustained, but labor is confident that the sharp rise in living costs since inception of the Toledo tax will arouse the public.

CIO's opposition does not leave the city with no alternative to the wage tax. William Lavelle, secretary of the State CIO, speaking both for CIO and AFL, proposed this in an address to the City Council last week:

"1. That the city begin immediately an effective campaign to obtain re-appraisal of commercial and industrial property in Columbus.

"2. That the city take the initiative in leading a concerted drive of public officials throughout Ohio on the state Legislature and state administration for an equitable distribution of state sales tax receipts.

"3. That this city lead a drive of Ohio city officials to compel state and county authorities to close the loopholes of the present Ohio tax enforcement system.

"4. That the council immediately enact an encroachment tax."

IT HAS been revealed that Columbus officials recently visited Toledo to get information on the operation of the wage tax there and that Toledo officials visited Columbus to help draft the ordinance.

Lavelle says the financial condition of Ohio's major cities—many of them admittedly in bad shape—stems from three major sources:

1. Inequitable distribution of sales tax receipts by the Legislature. (The sales tax law, passed in 1935, was designed to provide $217,000,000 for the cities; actually it has provided only $112,000,000.)

2. Loopholes in enforcement of present tax legislation (Lavelle says many businesses dodge the sales tax.)

3. Undervaluation of commercial and industrial property. (Lavelle points out that a property assessed for taxes at $246,000 was found to be worth $749,000 when appraised for sale to the city.)

Let 'em Eat Cake

Columbus Republicans and daily newspapers are taking the stand that "why should anyone oppose the proposed 1% income tax? After all, it only means one less pack of cigarettes a week."

In reply, the CIO says: "This means one less quart of milk a week; it may mean two less loaves of bread."

THE Columbus CIC, through Pres. William Spratley, assailed the raising of the tax issue at a time when living costs are at an all-time high.

Spratley said:

"The tax violates every decent precept of fair taxation. Even the Federal income tax recognizes the principle of exemptions for low income workers and the idea of graduated taxation rates apportioning the tax burden in accordance with the ability to pay. Even the sales tax recognizes a form of limited exemption—it does not tax food purchases.

"The payroll tax, however, is a scavenger form of taxation. It strikes at lowliest incomes with complete disregard of poverty and need. The payroll tax will mean less food on the tables of Columbus worker families, and less clothes on the backs of workers' children.

"We recognize that the City of Columbus needs more money, but there are more equitable means of raising the necessary funds than the proposed payroll tax"

George DeNucci, regional CIO director, and Paul J. McCarthy, Sr., president of the Columbus AFL Federation, are active in the anti-wage tax fight. The city's newspapers are favoring the levy.

CIO Wins On L&N

The CIO United Transport Service Employees Union were declared the bargaining agent for the maids, porters and attendants on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in a ballot-by-mail election conducted by the National Railway Mediation Board. On the short end of the balloting was the AFL Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

GOP Sources Say: If Vote Were Now Democrats Would Win Handily

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

GOP National Chairman Brazilla Carroll Reece continues to remark garrulously, "you don't lose by winning," but more serious minds on the Republican side are warning:

a. The Democrats have staged a remarkable comeback since the GOP Congressional landslide of 1946.

Bucket Brigade

The St. Paul CIO-PAC has organized bucket brigades.

There's no fire, it's just that the drive for PAC contributions—pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters, half-dollars, dollars, etc.—is at fever pitch.

b. Pres. Truman has also staged a remarkable comeback.

c. A Republican victory in 1948 is by no means a sure thing.

d. In fact, some say, the Democrats would regain control of Congress if the election were held today.

Warnings to the GOP came last week from two sources: David Lawrence's U. S. News and Bert Andrews, in the New York Herald Tribune. (Lawrence's publications are frankly pro-business; Andrews is the reporter who scored a "scoop" on the fired State Dept. employes; the Herald Tribune is GOP editorially.)

The National Week section of U. S. News, under the headline, "Measure of Democrats' Gains, Support Enough Today to Retake Congress," said: "New studies show Democrats, on a comeback trail from the low points of 1946, could win Congress if elections were held now."

Andrews said: "A sizable portion of the Republican leaders in the Senate and House are beginning to realize that the party will have to get in and work if it is going to hold even or gain in 1948."

In another Herald Tribune article, Jack Steele commented on Sen. Taft's address in which he attacked Pres. Truman's anti-inflation program. He wrote that the address "infuriated the 'Young Turks'—a group of a dozen or so younger, more liberal Republican Senators who firmly believe that something must be done about high prices and that, unless the Republican majority in Congress does that something, the party's chances in next year's election would be mightly slim."

U. S. News puts the main issue as: "Right now, the hottest political issue promises to be over prices."

The article then recalls that the Gallup Polls have shown that

B. C. REECE

Are his glasses rose-colored?

whereas 47% of the vote went to the Democrats in 1946, now 56% of people say they'd vote Democratic. And, further, Gallup found that whereas 32% of the voters in 1946 thought Truman was doing a good job, now 55% think he is.

U. S. News went on to say "special elections to fill House seats, held during the first three weeks of November show rises in Democratic strength in line with these polls. All the elections were in districts that were either Republican, or Democratic, by tradition and there were no turnovers. But the average Democratic increase in the four districts was 5.8%.

"This boost, applied to the nation, would lift the 47% the Democrats got in 1946 to about 53%."

The four elections listed by U. S. News were three Republican by-elections victories in the 10th Indiana, 9th Massachusetts and 4th Ohio, and the Democratic victory in the 14th New York.

In Indiana, the Republican vote fell off 6%; in Ohio, 3.9%; in Massachusetts, 3% and in New York, 8.6%.

U. S. News ponders further: "An election now, that reflected either the Gallup poll or the average election changes from the voting in 1946, would put the Democrats in charge of both houses by a handy margin. Curiously enough, the party strength, both in the polls and in the average of Democratic percentage gains in the voting, is almost a full percentage point higher than Mr. Truman's personal rating.

"But the 55% at which Mr. Truman's personal popularity stands would give the Democrats 72 seats now held by Republicans in the House. They need only 29 to take command. The same 55% would give the Democrats 6 seats in the Senate. They need only four to win control."

U. S. News estimates that if the Democrats gain 53% of the vote, they could pick up these House seats: three in Calif.; two in Conn.; one in Idaho; two in Ill.; two in Ind.; one in Md.; one in Mass.; three in Mich.; two in Minn.; four in Mo.; two in N. J.; four in N. Y.; two in Ohio; seven in Pa.; one in Utah; one in Wash.; four in W. Va.; two in Wis.; for a total of 46 votes (this is based on districts where the GOP won by less than 53% in 1946.)

As to the Senate, the article said a Democratic rise to 53% would imperil Republican Senators in Wyoming (Robertson); West Virginia (Revercomb); Oklahoma (Moore), and Kentucky (Cooper). It is interesting for PAC members to note that these senators have generally voted against the workers' interest.

HOWEVER, U. S. News points out that a number of Democrats are also in marginal districts and that such liberals as Sen. James Murray (D., Mont.) and others in the House are not certain of reelection.

Andrews' piece in the Herald Tribune lists some of the things GOP chairman Reece did not mention after the recent elections:

"That the Republicans lost ground in the percentage of total vote in five special elections they won.

"That a drop of as great a percentage in the 1948 regular elections would either lose the five districts for the Republicans or make it a narrow squeak, indeed.

"That the Republicans lost ground in percentage of total vote in two special elections, Mr. Reece did not mention—elections in which Democrats held seats they had won in 1946.

"And that a sizable portion of the Republican leaders in the Senate and House are beginning to realize that the party will have to get in and work if it is going to hold even or gain in 1948."

It is also interesting to note, from a PAC angle, that the U. S. News and Andrews' articles fail to mention the Indiana municipal, the Kentucky state-wide and municipal, the various elections in Ohio, such as Akron and other key cities, and elections in a number of other states, where PAC-indorsed candidates scored major reversals of votes.

Kroll Advises: Step Up Efforts

PAC Director Jack Kroll, commenting on reports of swings against the Republicans, said:

"The recent victories scored by progressive candidates in state and municipal elections are only a forerunner of better things to come—if our PAC workers intensify their efforts and continue to spread the message of political action to the voters in the plants in which they work and the blocks in which they live.

"The trend back to progressive government will not result in overconfidence and inaction. We know that the struggles of 1948 will require the utmost effort. Our workers will make that effort. Victory in 1947 certainly tastes sweet. Victory in 1948—a progressive Congress—will taste even sweeter."

DATES DON'T MEAN A THING UNDER T-H

IN some states and cities, you can get a reduction on your real estate taxes if you pay before a certain date.

All you have to do is pay up; you don't have to sign an affidavit saying you are not a Republican—if it's a Democratic city—or that you're not a Democrat—if it's a Republic city.

But, in the Natl. Labor Relations Board, as remodeled by Mister Taft and Master Hartley, effective dates don't mean a thing.

Last week, the NLRB ruled that a union which had failed to sign non-Communist affidavits could not be certified as a collective bargaining agent—despite the fact the union had won an election before Aug. 22, 1947, effective date of the T-H law.

THE ruling threw out the rights of the CIO Electrical Workers and the CIO Furniture Workers.

The UE had won, on Aug. 14, an election at the Colonial Radio Corp., Riverside, Calif. The vote was 97 to 89 in favor of UE.

The UFW had been victorious, on Aug. 21, day before the effective date, in an election at the Myrtle Dest Co., High Point, N. C. The vote was 118 to 113 in favor of UFW.

THE board, ordering the cases "closed," declared:

"The petitioner (Furniture Workers) here contends that certification by the Board is merely the performance of a ministerial act, requiring no exercise of judgment or discretion, and is not part of the investigative procedure.

"We find this contention to be without merit. We regard the certification as a step, albeit the final step in investigations conducted pursuant to Section 9 (c) of the act. Despite some ambiguity, moreover, we believe that Subsections 9 (f), (g) and (h), taken as a whole, reflect an intention on the part of Congress completely to debar non-complying unions from access to the Board's processes in representation cases.

"Inasmuch as the labor organization receiving a majority of the votes cast in the election is ineligible for certification, we shall order the investigation closed."

Meanwhile, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, speaking over the New York Times' radio station WQXR, declared that the Taft-Hartley law has "heartened" employers to reject union proposals upon which they would have negotiated in pre-T-H days. He urged outright repeal of the law.

Joseph Loftus, labor reporter in the Times' Washington Bureau, another speaker on WQXR's "What's On Your Mind" program, said that the T-H non-Communist affidavits had proved a dramatic element in the law, but he suggested that industrial peace would be more likely if impartial men trusted by "both sides" were empowered to write legislation to remedy specific abuses. He declared that framers of the law had disregarded impartial experts and had covered too much ground.

On the same program were Leo Wolman, professor of economics at Columbia U., and Gerald D. Reilly, former member of the NLRB. Both held the law was an essential reform.

S. F. CIO To Discuss Civil Liberties

Secy.-Treas. Paul Schnur of the San Francisco CIO Council has announced that all CIO unions in the community are being asked to devote 30 minutes of each meeting during December to a discussion of "the current attack on civil liberties and how it affects the labor movement." The report of the President's Committee on Civil Liberties will be used in the discussions.

"We intend to alert our entire membership to the dangers of such bodies as the Tenney (Calif.) Committee and the Thomas Un-American Committee," Schnur said. "The voting records of the legislators who make up these committees show them to be among the most bigoted anti-labor politicians in the nation. Their goal is the destruction of unions, as well as thorough control of anyone who differs with them in political matters. Their activities are a far cry from our American tradition of fair play and free speech."

SAY HOUSING SHORTAGE HARMS NEW ENGLAND

THREE CIO Textile Workers officers last week advised Congress to establish a National Construction Authority with power to take necessary steps to increase the building materials supply as a means of promoting low and medium-priced housing construction.

The proposal was made by Mariano Bishop, TWUA's northern cotton director; John Chupka, national director, wool division; and William Belanger, Massachusetts director, at a Boston hearing of the Joint Congressional Committee on Housing.

Three other CIO representatives—Legislative Representative Albert Clifton, John Callahan, Electric Workers business agent, Pittsfield, Mass.; and John Jekot, Western Massachusetts CIO Council—told the visting Congressmen one of the reasons New Englanders and industry are leaving the region is the housing shortage.

All CIO witnesses urged passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill as a partial solution of the problem. Speakers who apologetically suggested government action were rebuked for not being more vehement by Sen. Charles Tobey (R., N. H.), who pointed out that he would continue his fight for adoption of the W-E-T Bill.

Illustrating the degree of the emergency was a one-page summary of the Worcester housing situation prepared by Local 2936, CIO Steelworkers, and presented by Clifton. This city of 200,000, the report stated, has about 1000 evictions pending in courts, 9000 families living doubled up, and has issued building permits for 541 units since the first of the year. Municipal authorities had termed between 7000 and 8000 dwelling units unfit for habitation.

Clifton, Callahan and Jekot also urged extension of rent controls.

NOT 'LABOR'S BLIND ALLEY'

Its reasoning seems pretty ridiculous to us, but here's how the McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. has things figured out:

Conditions are pretty bad in Great Britain, which has a labor government. So—

American workers should learn a lesson from the British and stay away from political action.

McGraw-Hill has been using full-page newspaper ads to carry this message to the public. The ads are headed "Political Action—Labor's Blind Alley."

We got the impression that Britain was in bad shape as a result of a war. We thought that the bombings which smashed homes and factories and sank ships were largely responsible.

We began to suspect the real purpose of the McGraw-Hill ads when we got to the part which said, "The Taft-Hartley Act is an essential bulwark of free collective bargaining. Bargaining works satisfactorily only when both parties—management and labor—think they are getting a fairly even break."

Suppose we stop quoting right there and ask, where was McGraw-Hill when union members all over the country were shouting that the T-H Act gave labor a lousy break?

The ads claim that the Wagner Act should have been killed because management felt it wasn't getting an even break.

But labor, the ads say, shouldn't "damn the members of Congress who voted for the Taft-Hartley Act."

As we said at the beginning, it seems pretty ridiculous to us.

World's Greatest Candidates

Col. Robert R. McCormick, junketing in Hongkong while printers are striking against his Chicago Tribune, ("World's Greatest Newspaper"), has a new Presidential hero he puts even above Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

The hero: Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), "a real American and right in there on the firing line."

McCormick is violently opposed to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg — "Let's not have any foreigners."

McCormick would back MacArthur only if there is a convention deadlock over Taft. Others who are "acceptable" are Sen. Edward Martin (R., Pa.), Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R., Neb.), Gov. Earl Warren of California and Speaker Joseph Martin (R., Mass.).

We hope they all feel happy.

Thank You, Mr. Hannegan

It was with deep regret that we read of the resignation of Postmaster General Robert Emmett Hannegan.

Hannegan demonstrated that it is possible for a professional politician to fight for the rights of the people. He was a liberal tower of strength in the Cabinet when the chips were down. The nation—and labor in particular—owes Mr. Hannegan a debt of gratitude for his fight for retention of OPA and for veto of the Taft-Hartley Act.

We feel that baseball will add to its status as the national pastime with Hannegan as one of the new owners of the St. Louis Cardinals.

So, Private Citizen Hannegan, keep up the good fight.

Their Strained Faces Tell Horrible Story of Hunger

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE other day I looked at some pictures—and then I shuddered.

I had seen men die violently. I had seen women—their bodies badly mangled—suffer the tortures of the damned as they fought against death.

I had even seen children—little children—fight for life as doctors sewed up their gaping wounds and set broken bones.

But somehow this was different.

The only thing wrong with the youngsters in the pictures was that they were hungry.

THEIR eyes were sunken and their small chests looked like poorly designed washboards.

It didn't seem possible that hearts could still be beating inside their emaciated bodies.

I looked at the pictures again—and I thought, "This is a hell of a price to pay for man's inhumanity to man!"

Then I realized, as never before, the terrible price we have to pay for war. And the paying only begins when the shooting ends.

THOSE who critically ask, "Why should we send millions abroad when we're having troubles right here at home?" should see those pictures.

And the same goes for those who would tie entirely too many strings to our foreign aid program.

Yes, they should take a good look. And they should ask themselves, "What will happen if we don't give help?"

The pictures are just ordinary photographs. They show children of war-torn countries who are facing starvation.

Just pictures of hungry little children.

MEN who measure most things in dollars and cents keep telling us that "we must be practical about our foreign aid."

And so we must—though hungry boys and girls, and hungry grown folks, too, are more interested in food than in practicality.

Should our aid program be designed and administered by those who hold the view that the U.S. can "buy" the political thinking of Western Europe and stave off Communism?

Or should the job be given to those who hold that we should help all who face privation and the threat of starvation?

PROBABLY the best program would result from combining the ideas of those who want to stress practicality and those who would stress humanitarianism.

The former could do much to keep us from squandering our food and money, and keep ambitious men abroad from using our program for their own selfish purposes.

The latter could do much to keep the former from viewing foreign aid as a cold-blooded, dollars-and-cents proposition.

Uncle Sam should be turned into neither Uncle Sap nor Uncle Shylock!

THE CIO has asked that labor be given a real voice in both the policy making and administrative phases of our foreign aid program.

It has asked that the program not be made a vehicle for U. S. meddling in the internal affairs of other countries.

It has sent representatives to Europe in an effort to convince Continental labor leaders that the "Marshall Plan" is not a "Wall Street enterprise," as the Communists charge.

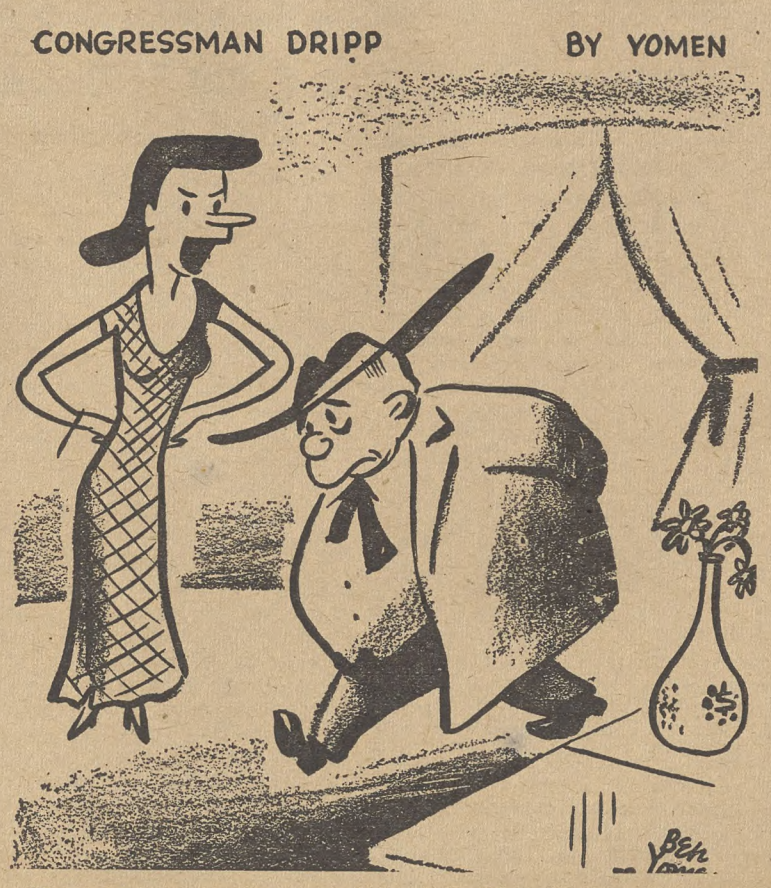
And it is going to do everything it can to see that the humanitarian phases are not neglected.

WHEN you look at those pictures you're likely to wonder about the future of the innocent, hungry war victims.

If they go hungry much longer, will they have twisted minds as well as twisted bodies when they grow up?

How hard would it be—if they're not given sufficient help—to make them in 15 or 18 years into fanatics like the young men who followed Hitler?

If they should die as a result of their hunger, how hard will it be for us to lie about how big hearted we are?



"Dreamed Up Any Reasons Why Pay Rises Hurt Workers?"

'A Sound Labor Law'

(From The Milwaukee Journal)

"LUMBER manufacturers, in their appearance before the House subcommittee which is considering changes in the Wage-Hour Act, asked that the whole law be repealed as 'unsound in principle and unworkable in application.' The law, they said, was enacted as an emergency remedy when our economy was sick. Now that our economy is well, there is no further need for it.

"We hope few Americans will agree with these lumbermen. The law was passed at a time when low wages and low employment demonstrated the need for regulation. But it was aimed quite as much to prevent recurrence of the difficulty as to correct the then existing situation.

"If the 40-hour week is a good basic standard in times of adversity, it is also a good basic standard in times of prosperity. If a minimum wage is needed to protect workers when employment is low, it certainly should be continued on the books when employment is high. The only difference here is that a minimum which is realistic in bad times may cease to be realistic when times improve.

"There is ample evidence to show that wages for some types of work in some sections are now too low to afford even a subsistence. That does not mean that there is anything wrong with the principle. It simply means that the hourly wage minimum set by the law is no longer realistic.

"The act is not without defects. The defects, however, are mostly in the matter of coverage, standards and general implementation. The principle of a basic work week and a basic minimum wage is as sound as it was when, during an economic slump, the law was enacted."

N. J. Group Studies Civil Liberties

New Jersey Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll's committee to investigate alleged abuses of civil liberties organized itself last week and mapped a course of corrective action.

Included in the committee are Alexander Barkan, secretary of the State CIO, and Mayor Vincent J. Murphy, of Newark, secretary of the State AFL. Other members include attorneys, educators, Negro leaders and churchmen. Dr. Wilbur E. Saunders, headmaster of Peddie School, is chairman.

Boy, Oh Boy!

Chairman Karl M. LeCompte (R., Iowa), of the House Administration Committee, thinks: "You don't make a man out of a boy by over-paying him.'

LeCompte made that observation last week in opposing a House motion to pay 50 House page boys through December 31, instead of until recess day in mid-December. The boys are paid at the rate of $219.45 per month.

LeCompte said: "We are paying the pages around $7.50 per day. That's pretty good pay for a boy." (Labor leaders have estimated that Congressmen make about $7 to $12 an hour.)

Now He Can Walk, But He Uses A Cane

JOE doesn't have to use his crutches any more—and for that he must be thankful.

But he still shuffles when he walks, and he can't get around without his cane.

If he sits down, he has difficulty getting up. When he stands, sharp pains shoot through him like tongues of flame.

So he doesn't get around much. That's tough on Joe because he used to be an active man.

He's 64 now and his heart and lungs are OK. He'd be in fine shape if it weren't for those legs.

And the legs would be OK, too, if it hadn't been for that accident.

JOE (that's not his real name but he's a very real man) worked for years in the steel mills of Northeastern Ohio.

He was a highly skilled workman, respected by his fellow workers and his neighbors.

Over the years he saved enough to buy a little home, and he reared four children, all of whom are now married and have families of their own to care for.

Joe belonged to the church and a couple of lodges. He took part in various community activities.

The future looked pretty good to Joe—and then it happened.

BOTH of Joe's legs were horribly mangled in a steel mill accident in 1942.

Joe spent many months in bed. Then he took a few uncertain steps, with the aid of crutches.

Finally he put the crutches aside and substituted a cane.

Joe would like to work but he isn't able to do so. But, "officially," he's not totally disabled.

In Ohio an injured worker has to be practically flat on his back or at death's door before he's given a total disability classification.

JOE is only 75% disabled, according to the Industrial Commission of Ohio.

This meant he was entitled to about $3200 in compensation, which he received over a period of a little more than three years.

Nobody will give him a new job because he's so badly crippled. Employers don't ordinarily hire men who are "25% able."

And the Industrial Commission, under present regulations, won't pay him another penny.

THE CIO in Ohio (and in other states which have inadequate workers' compensation) say Joe's case is not unusual.

There are thousands of workmen in his position—crippled as a result of industrial accidents—pennilness as a result of their infirmities.

Organized labor has fought for years for increased compensation for those injured—especially for those injured so badly that they can never work again.

Legislatures, dominated by business and industrial interests, have refused to go along with the unions.

AT 64 Joe is an economic derelict—a helpless and hopeless man.

The future looks mighty bleak. Most of the good things in life are over for him—most of them, but not all.

His wife hasn't let him down.

She takes care of Joe. She's not 75% disabled, so she was able to get a job as a charwoman!—A. L. S.

Solidarity

This appeared last week in Victor Riesel's "Inside Labor" column:

"In a West Coast shop, a blond sweater girl was so shapely her employer was forced to fire her because she distracted the male help and slowed production.

"The men then threatened to strike. She was rehired and, to make the boss suffer more, the boys bought her a smaller size sweater the day he returned."

WHY NOT USE THE BLOCK THAT FITS?

An Editor's Advice:

Got A Beef? Get It Off Chest At Union Meeting, Not In Plant

By IRVING L. EDELSTEIN

(This article by the editor and educational director, appeared in the Toledo Joint Council News of the CIO Retail, Wholesale Union)

IT happened again! And every time it happens, I kick myself around the block for falling down on the job. One certain part of my anatomy is beginning to hurt!

This time they ganged up on me in one of our plants; I didn't have a fighting chance but before the session was over I had delivered the knockout blow—and nearly took the count myself.

If you don't follow the story so well, I'll tip you off now. I walked into a gripe session, the same kind that probably occur in every plant in the U. S. The "beefs" were coming right and left; about conditions in the shop, contract "injustices," plain, ordinary everyday grievances.

This kind of discussion is interesting—and healthy. At its lowest level, it promotes better labor-management relations. It shows the crying need for the labor movement without painting pretty pictures.

But—and here's the big "but"—there were two things wrong with the meeting. It wasn't the time and certainly not the place.

THE place to air these arguments is at a union meeting.

"When was the last time you attended your unit meeting?" I asked.

The men looked at the floor a long time before advancing the usual alibis; too much else to do, a waste of time, nothing would come of it.

"And this contract you're kicking about—did you vote on it when it came up for approval at the meetings?"

"No. We weren't there."

"About these other grievances—did you file a grievance according to procedure?"

You know the answer as well as I do.

I don't blame these men in the least for feeling the way they do or thinking the way they do. The fault lies with me. I haven't filled my obligations.

I HAVEN'T done a job of convincing these men that the only way they are going to get satisfaction is by attending their meetings and arguing like hell for their points.

Before you start muttering under your breath and crying in your beer, you've got to give it more than an even break. If you want to change things, you've got to start at the bottom.

And if you've read this far and are thinking, "This guy is full of baloney," that's alright with me.

At least go on down to your next union meeting and tell 'em so. I might even agree with you!

Compensation Quiz

Q. How many states have workmen's compensation acts under which workers injured at their jobs are paid weekly benefits to offset wages lost and are provided with medical services?

A. 47 states and the District of Columbia. The exception: Mississippi.

Q. What percentage of lost wages is paid?

A. In most states, the weekly benefit for lost wages is either 60% or 66⅔% of weekly wage. Only one state—Wisconsin—provides for a higher percentage—70%.

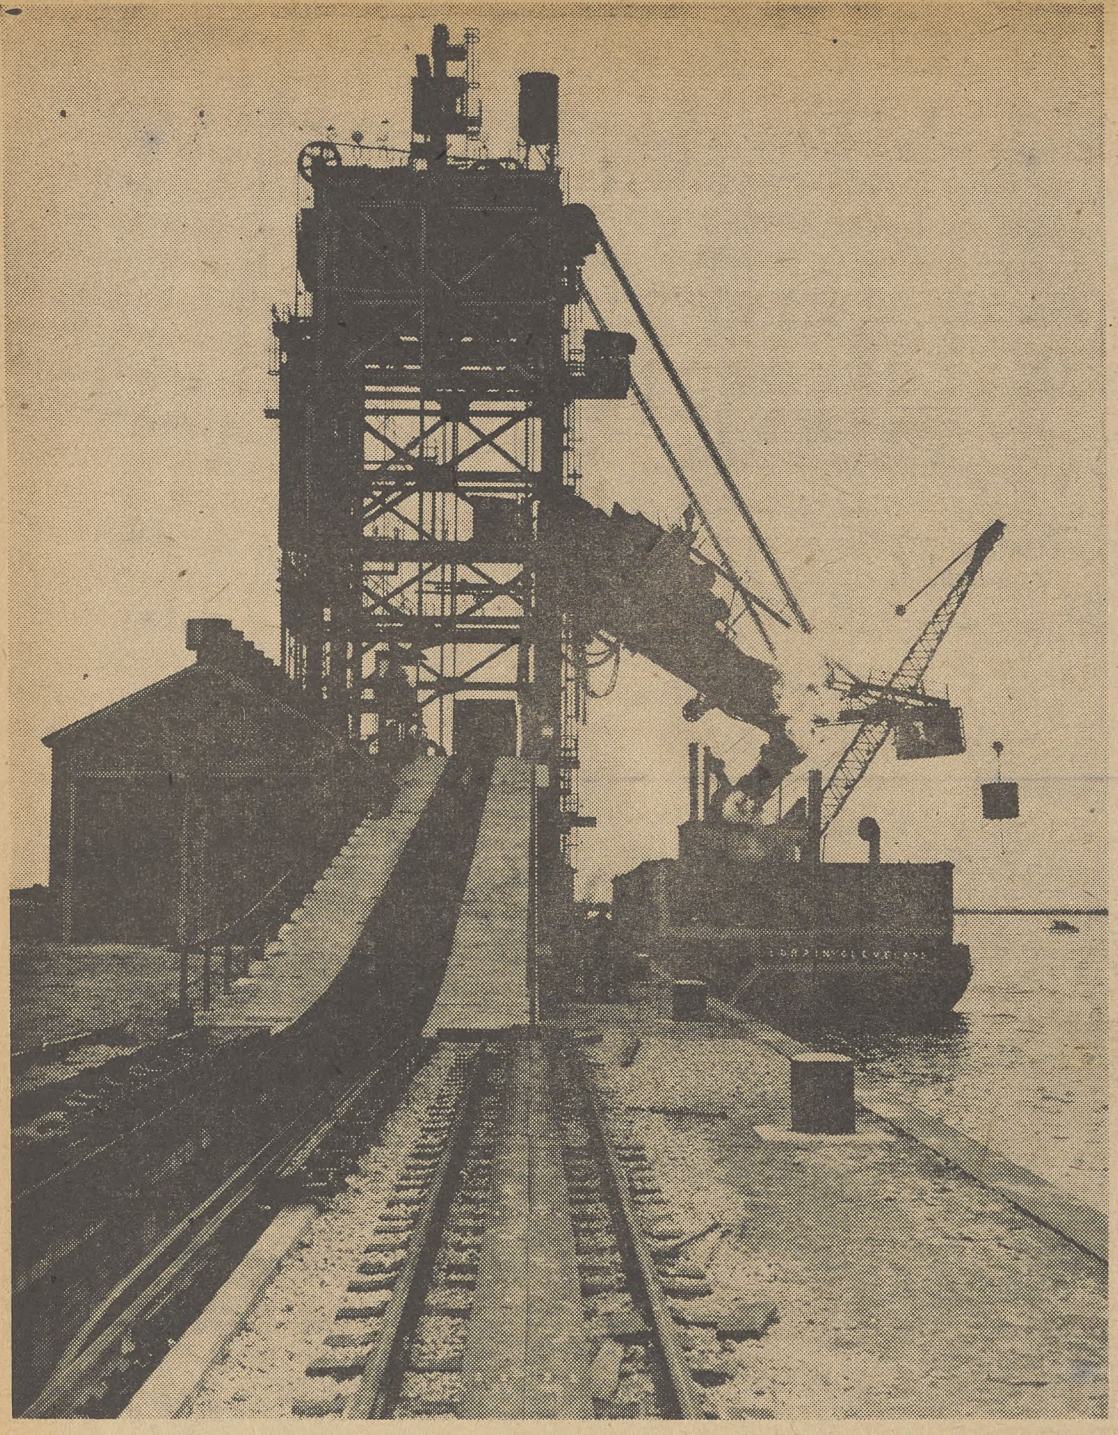
Aloha To You

Rep. James Van Zandt (R., Pa.) received quite a jolt during his recent visit to Hawaii. Someone set up a meeting for him at Oahu, but when the Congressman entered the auditorium he was surprised to find everyone in the place had been provided with a copy of his voting record by the Oahu CIO Council.

Van Zandt sputtered and fumed when he got a copy himself, and threatened that if such leaflets were handed out in his own district, his constituents would run the distributors out of town.

The leaflet merely listed his votes on crucial issues such as GI loans, school lunches, rent control, wages and hours, with a brief explanation of each. It pointed out his constituents undoubtedly missed him, wished him Godspeed, and closed with a warm, firm "Aloha."



Aid to Shipping: Great Lakes ship companies make greater profits through the use of this coal dock at Lorain, Ohio, which literally picks up a coal car, dumps its contents into the hold of the vessel and puts it back on the track—all within a minute. Here a car is shown in the middle of the elevator. This dock will load a freighter in four hours. The vessel is then ready to go up the lakes where it will unload the coal and pick up ore.

Fruit of Shipping Season: Huge piles of iron ore such as these at a steel plant at Cleveland are accumulated during the shipping season on the Great Lakes. Thus the winter tie-up of shipping does not affect steel making. The docks are behind these ore piles. At the right is part of the steel mill. The Lakes ships not only bring iron ore to feed the hungry furnaces at Cleveland but also those at Chicago, Detroit, Erie and Buffalo.

Lone Tenpin In N

By SAMUEL WAIT

IN the heart of industrial America where men mine ore and make steel, lies the world's richest waterway: The Great Lakes.

From this fountainhead comes the stuff from which much of America's finished products are made — autos, farm equipment, electrical and household goods. Ore for steel and grain for bread come down in the "long ships" for all ports of the country and the world.

Almost every citadel of the open-shop in this area has been toppled by the CIO. But standing like a lone ten pin in the non-union alley, is Lakes shipping, which remains a challenge to the CIO.

Meeting immediately after the Boston Convention, the CIO Executive Board accepted the challenge. It voted unanimously to render active support to a Great Lakes organizing drive, making it second in importance only to the membership campaign in the South.

A Big Business

The Great Lakes hold more than one half of the world's fresh water and handle more commerce than the United States ships abroad.

In the 20-year period from 1878-98, the log shows, 5999 wrecks occurred on the Lakes, with 1093 ships totally lost. In 1913 during the "big storm" 40 vessels went down with 235 lives lost.

Many times safety-at-sea regulations are violated with impunity. The NMU's consistent vigilance has put a damper on many of these tendencies.

Lakes shipping is controlled by a group of shipowners formed into a huge lobby known as the Lake Carriers' Association. Between them they own 75% of the nation's richest iron ore deposits in Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin. They own the docks and the vessels and control the rails which carry the ore from mine to dock, to say nothing of steel mills, coal mines and banks. They influence the color of local politics in the eight states bordering the Lakes.

In 1908 the LCA resolved to wage a concerted war on unionism. They adopted a resolution, which reads in part:

"The owners of ships on the Great Lakes do now declare that the open-shop principle be adopted and adhered to on our ships."

These facts and others were brought to the attention of the CIO Executive Board by NMU Pres. Joseph Curran and Secy. Ferdinand C. Smith. And after the Board voted the NMU its unanimous support, President Philip Murray said:

"We will do just what you ask us to do."

Since then National Director Josh Lawrence and his staff of NMU Lakes officials have been mapping out a winter program in preparation for the spring drive. Regional conferences of Lakes seamen have been called in the major ports where the boats lay up duri Vice-president Chester Young, ization for the NMU, will atten with Lawrence within the ne program which comes from La will help the NMU in formu quests for the kind of suppor quired from the CIO to organi ally be accounted for by the ruiting youngsters from small Tennessee, Kentucky and the Lakes states. These youngsters are shown movies of a new bright future on the Lakes, with good pay and lots of adventure.

Each year the LCA recruits thousands of youngsters for the Lakes when the season opens in April. But few of them last till December, when the ice begins to form and the boats are laid up. Some of these lads last a month and return home. They may not ever know it but they are used to keep the labor turnover on the Lakes high and to take the jobs of skilled seamen waiting around without work.

Since the war ended, the LCA has intensified its drive against the NMU. Organizers have been kept from entering plant gates. Some of them have had difficulty boarding vessels under NMU contract to service the crews. Union literature mailed to the vessels has been brazenly dumped overboard. Seamen are closely screened before being hired to make sure they have no union affiliation. The crews' personal gear has been rifled while they were on watch to detect union literature. Such a campaign was conducted in the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co., a huge mid-west monopoly. A company-union was fostered in Cleveland Cliffs during the NMU drive. It is mentored by an employers' service attorney.

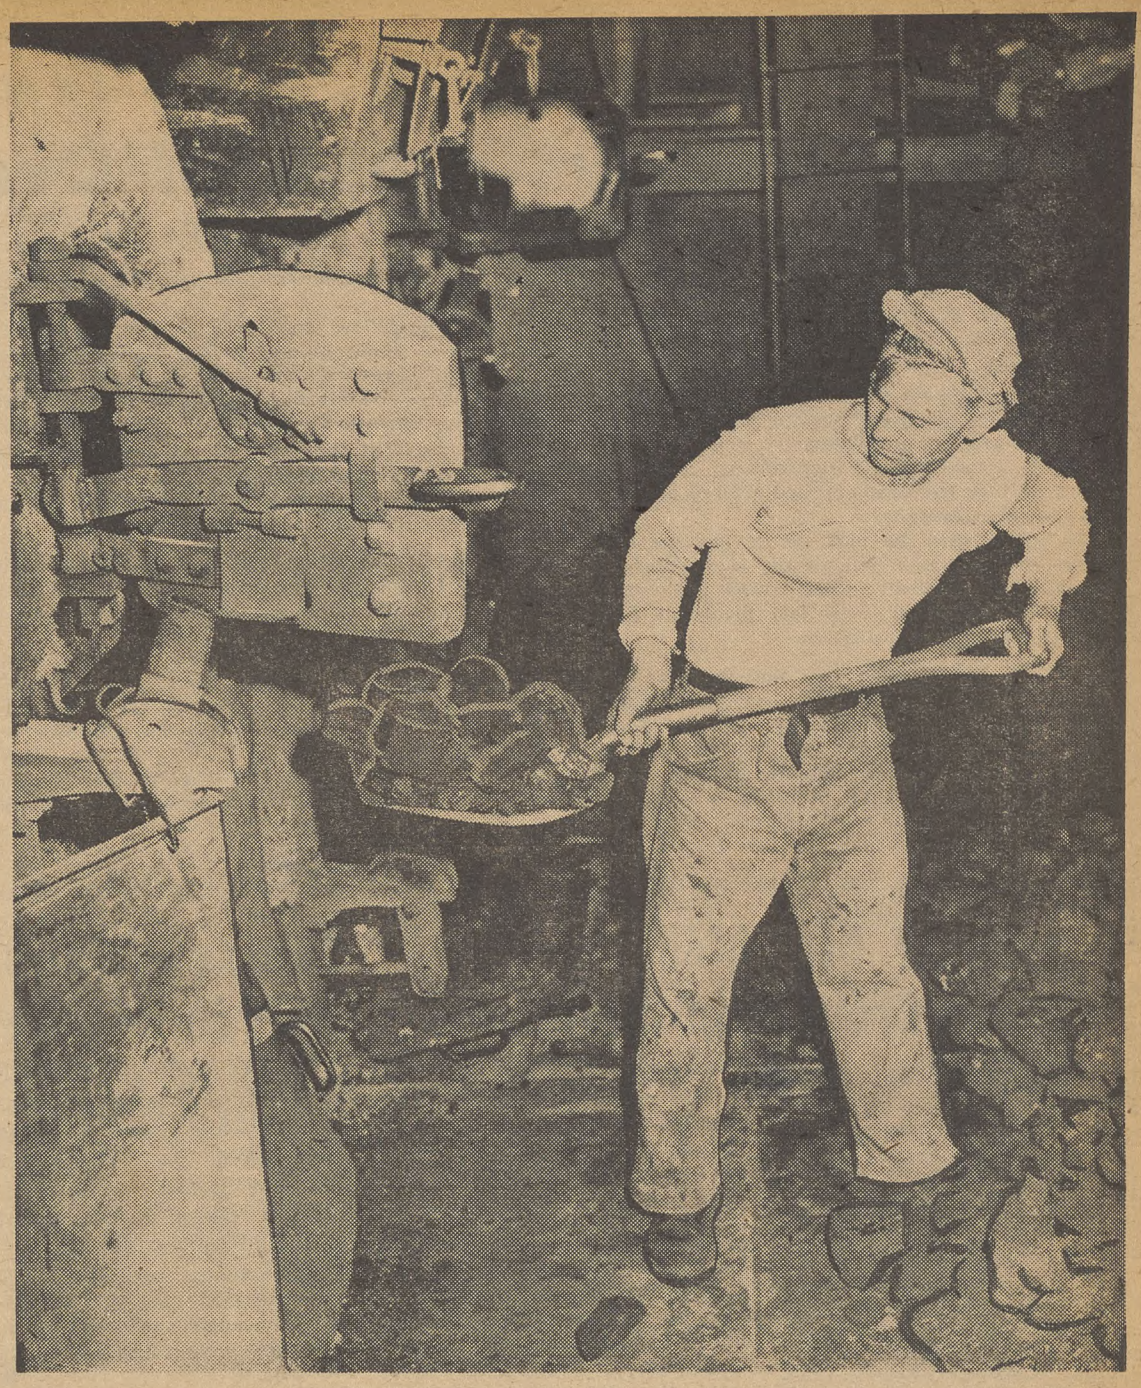
When it was feared that the NMU might win the collective bargaining election, five Cliffs' vessels were slated for sale or scrap. When the NMU, which had a majority of the fleet signed up at the start of the season, lost the election, these five vessels were placed back in operation by the company.

"Thus it can be seen that a successful organizing drive on the Lakes must be on a large scale," according to NMU officials. "A piecemeal approach is doomed to failure. Among the Unions on the Lakes today, the NMU is the only one with a positive program and the know-how for seamen. It is the NMU which first raised the demand for the 40-hour week on the Lakes. It is the NMU which first succeeded in writing contracts defining the duties of each rating, with provisions for overtime pay for extra work. The consistent militancy of the NMU has earned it the respect of the seamen."

The NMU Program

Here are the principle planks in the NMU program for Great Lakes seamen:

1. Pay for Captive Time. That is, time a seaman is forced to spend on his vessel for which he receives no compensation. For 16 hours of the day he is a virtual captive of the shipowner.
2. Unemployment compensation for the 95% of Lakesmen now deprived of it by the Michigan and Ohio state laws.
3. A 40-hour week for seamen under the law.
4. Wage increases to meet the rising cost of living.
5. Seniority rights and security.



It's a Tough Job: Not only is it a back-breaking job to keep the boilers filled with coal, but the task is made tougher when there are sand and mud in the coal. In this case, the coal looks "clean." Poor coal means more work to keep up the steam and is one of the major "beefs" of the Great Lakes seamen, which the NMU will seek to eliminate. And there are many other "beefs" including living conditions on the ship.

Organizer's Know-How On Time Study Gains 1,000 Workers Raises of Over a Million a Year

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WHEN 1000 workers win over a million dollars in raises without a squawk from the boss—it's news in anyone's language.

And when a union's membership jumps from about 30% to 95% of those eligible in one month that, too, is newsworthy.

But this is also a story about a guy who knew a little bit about industrial engineering and a lot about unions.

Some years ago in Waterbury, Conn., Robert L. Walkinshaw found himself negotiating contracts without knowing how the company had arrived at its piecework rates on the time chart.

He didn't like the idea, so he got the company to agree to teach him and all the stewards in the plant what it was all about. Once a week for several months he went to "school"—and last month it paid off for 1,000 workers in Pitcairn, Pa.

LAST August Pennsylvania Railroad employes at Pitcairn Steel Car Shop had a grievance. The company had shifted from production of one type "hopper" (coal carrier) car to another. And with the switch came a switch in pay that no one quite understood. Suddenly the boys realized that incentive workers, who constituted most of the working force, were making less than day workers—something new in pay policy. They filed a grievance requesting a retiming of the new operations.

The fellow who knew a little about job timing and a lot about unions—a CIO Railroad Workers international representative—didn't wait for the company's reply. Walkinshaw spent the next three weeks timing the operation himself.

(At that time only 300 in the plant belonged to the CIO Railroad Workers.)

What he discovered was enough to stump the company experts.

HE found that the new piecework scale was substandard. But more than that—he discovered that for years the plant had not been applying the time chart rates.

"The fact is," Walkinshaw explained, "the rates were so low, they couldn't apply them and keep the cars rolling. So to keep the workers happy they had been padding their pay, dishing out whatever they felt like paying."

Along about the time Walkinshaw finished his time study, the grievance returned from the first lap in its journey through channels—rejected.

Reinforced by Walkinshaw's time study, it gradually made its way to top company officialdom as each minor official decided this was "too hot to handle."

"I never saw so many big shots in all my life," said he.

The "big shots" ordered a retiming. But there was evidence of company stalling during the following weeks as the issue dragged on and on, and no new time chart arrived.

RESTLESS and irritated, the workers called a slowdown. Pennsy got down to business.

The company accepted Walkinshaw's time study without question—and the workers emerged with some of the most sensational wage gains of the year.

- Raises for piecetime helpers ranged from $3.79 to $5.19 a day and for mechanics, from $4.78 to $6.54 a day.
- A guaranteed daily wage for pieceworkers was established for the first time in Pennsylvania history.
- One hundred and forty-three new jobs were created when Walkinshaw proved the operation had been shorthanded.
- Increases were made retroactive to Sept. 5, totaling $39,969.

Total yearly gains: $1,212,000—all in addition to a 15½c hourly rise that was effective Sept. 1.

And what was in it for the union?

A thousand staunch union boosters who a month earlier hadn't realized what a union could do for them.

National CIO Aides Declare Forced Arbitration Dictatorial

ARTICLES by two national CIO men on "compulsory arbitration" will be used as reference material by hundreds of high school and college debaters throughout the country this year.

Included in the National University Education Association Debate Handbook, the articles present the negative position on the national scholastic debate question: "Resolved: That the Federal Government should require arbitration of labor disputes in all basic American industries."

In hitting the arbitration proposal as a means of discouraging strikes, both Kermit Eby, CIO Education & Research director, and Eugene Cotton, assistant CIO counsel, warned of a consequent increase in strikes or a regimented police state.

Since there is no universal formula for economic matters, the articles pointed out, an arbitrator's decision is determined by his personal economic viewpoint. Thus the government, through careful selection of arbitrators, could impose its economy policy on workers and employers. A further result would be the supplanting of the collecting bargaining process by political force, the writers contend.

An arbitrator "cannot be expected to close his eyes to issues of the employer's price level, general price levels, the employer's profit level, general profit levels and the employer's general efficiency and management policy," wrote Eby.

"If the arbitrator decides that an employer's earning position does not permit a wage increase . . can the arbitrator, in all fairness to the employes, fail to consider whether the low earnings of the corporation are due to excessive executive salaries, inefficient management policies, excessive dividend payments, etc?"

"If he finds that these factors have reduced the capacity of the corporation to grant an otherwise reasonable wage increase, should his decision be, nevertheless, merely to deny the increase, or should he direct appropriate correction of management's production and profit policies?"

The logical result, Eby reasons, is to grant arbitrators dictatorial control of the national economy or of the operations of each employer.

The CIO education head denied that compulsory arbitration would even achieve its goal of reducing strikes. "It is an oft-repeated truism that we cannot, for example, mine coal with bayonets . . . Such compulsion is so thoroughly outrageous to American standards, to attempt to use it may be expected to provoke rather than discourage strikes."

Cotton said compulsory arbitration experiments in Australia and Kansas had failed to reduce strikes.

Consider Striking Three Oil Firms

Refusal of three major oil companies to meet wage demands to offset cost of living increases may result in strike action by the CIO Oil Workers, Pres. O. A. Knight announced last week.

Knight's statement, coming after a meeting of the state joint committee representing every oil workers union in California, disclosed that two of the companies, Shell Oil and Standard Oil, "have of their own volition served notices of contract termination." The agreement with the Tide Water Associated company will end December 6.

The companies have offered a wage increase of 4.8c an hour with the union asking that the offer be raised another 10c. Knight pointed out that the California oil workers have been making much less than oil workers in others parts of the country, and that oil profits are at an all-time high.

Murray Praises Blue Cross Plan

CIO Pres. Philip Murray joined other prominent civic leaders who sent congratulatory messages to be read at a dinner in New York City on November 19 to celebrate the progress of Associated Hospital Service—New York's Blue Cross and its affiliate, United Medical Service.

Ebasco Uses T-H in Strike

EBASCO SERVICES, engineering division of Electric Bond and Share Co., last week asked the Natl. Labor Relations Board to start injunction proceedings against its 400 striking engineers.

The engineers, members of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, Local 231 of the CIO Office and Professional Workers, New York City, are entering the 13th week of their strike precipitated by the company's refusal to renew an existing agreement.

The union claims that the company is also farming out its engineering work to "runaway engineering offices" outside of New York City.

Strikers last week picketed the New York City home of Curtis E. Calder, Electric Bond and Share board chairman, who recently announced the National Association of Manufacturers' program for aid to Europe. The NAM insisted that European countries scrap rationing and price controls as the price for aid.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has given the endorsement of the CIO to the strike. Checks should be mailed to UOPWA Vice Pres. Lewis Allan Berne, 1880 Broadway, New Nork City.

Murray Urges Action To Assist CO's

Federal action to correct "growing injustice" to wartime conscientious objectors is needed quickly, CIO Pres. Murray wrote last week to Pres. Truman.

Large numbers of the objectors, who refused military service for religious or ethical reasons, are still in government camps or jails.

Murray's letter said:

"The present federal policy with respect to conscientious objectors can only be characterized as a serious injustice to those individuals. I am sure you will agree that some form of governmental action is imperative in order to correct this growing injustice.

"The CIO has from the beginning recognized that some form of corrective action must be taken with respect to conscientious objectors,

New England CIO Leaders Back St. Lawrence Plan

The problem of increasing unemployment in New England caused by the departure of industry to the South can be partially solved through increasing the supply of electric power at a low cost, top CIO officials and regional planners from the area agreed last week.

As one practical step to relieve the crisis the officers of the six State Industrial Union Councils together with regional CIO representatives voted unanimous endorsement of the St. Lawrence Seaway Project, which will come before the Congress in the January session.

The group was told by N. R. Danielian, executive director of the St. Lawrence Association, that the project would bring the largest and cheapest undeveloped block of hydro-electric power in the United States.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The election in Oak Ridge, Tenn., the Atomic Bomb Plant, is over. The AFL, in order to arrest the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and to impair the CIO union's bargaining efficiency and possibilities of improving their agreement, petitioned the NLRB for this election.

G. C. & C. W. took the AFL on and the battle waxed hot. When the votes were counted, it proved to be a smashing victory for the CIO. The union now will arrange its affairs to meet with management for the purpose of negotiating a new agreement.

The restrictions that these workers operate under warrant the best of consideration, and the CIO will cooperate with the union in an effort to bring this about for the greatest security of the workers.

The writer addressed the Maryland State Industrial Union Council in Baltimore and found many local unions had, through the efforts of Regional Director Bender and President DeDominicis of the Council, and others, brought about a common agreement to carry out fully CIO policies. It has been found by the hard pathway of experience that attempts to bring into the Council matters that are extraneous—or which have no business in there—in an attempt to deviate from the national policy of CIO is the real reason for confusion and evasion.

Thanksgiving week has just passed and our members can be thankful that they have the CIO, which stands the forthright champion for the freedoms that are sacred to us. The CIO brings to the attention of the American people the onslaught that is being made upon them by the forces of greed, as expressed in the constant rising cost of living and rising profits.

They can also be thankful for the developed mechanism through our Political Action Committee, whereby our people are given an opportunity to know the issues and to lodge their protests through democratic processes through the ballot boxes. Through PAC labor hopes to retire those responsible for the injustices meted out to the people and to repeal the vicious Taft-Hartley Act, which was devised so that those forces of greed could continue unchallenged in taking advantage of the common people throughout the nation and the world.

Our answer must be to organize more workers into our unions, more voluntary contributions to our PAC and more concrete factual information to our membership. And with these three accomplished, the people can be relied upon to do the rest.

Daily Paper in Dixie Welcomes Textile Union Officer to City

It isn't often that union people find themselves favorably pictured in the local newspapers. But Rock Hill, S. C., where one out of every seven residents is a CIO Textile Worker, is an exception.

The following excerpts from a Rock Hill Evening Standard editorial on Nov. 1, hailing the arrival of TWU Exec. Secy. George Baldanzi to the city, bears little resemblance to editorial welcomes accorded union leaders in many towns:

". . . we point with pride, at the same time we welcome to Rock Hill the executive vice president of the Textile Workers Union of America. For, altogether apart from any other business connected with his visit, his presence marks an effort by Rock Hillian members of the TWU to learn in their own time how better to serve themselves and their fellow workers.

"'Making the contract work' and 'Making the union work' are studies you don't find in most public schools of this country. Yet they are studies important in keeping the United States that nation of all the world in which the working man and woman are best off. . . . .

"Welcome to Rock Hill, Mr. Baldanzi. We're proud that you are meeting Rock Hillians who have given their own time and thought to studying how to make things work right."

CIO EDUCATORS URGE FARM LABOR UNITY

DISCUSSIONS of farmer-labor cooperation and union-sponsored grocery stores featured the quarterly meeting of CIO education directors held last week at National CIO headquarters in Washington.

George Guernsey, National CIO Asst. Director of Education, presided at the conference which was attended by some 30 educational leaders of State Councils and International unions.

Lee Simon of the United Packinghouse Workers and Homer Ayres, Farm Equipment Workers, both farmer-labor relations directors of their respective unions, told about the programs of these two CIO unions being conducted in the Midwest to promote the common interest of workers and farmers.

Jack McLanahan, education director of the Cooperative League of the USA, and Al Rightley, in charge of the United Auto Workers' cooperative program, described the growing interest of UAW locals in cooperative stores.

They outlined plans for developing into real cooperatives, the program UAW locals have been engaged in of selling nonperishable groceries to their members at wholesale prices.

A big step forward in cooperative distribution was started recently in Detroit, they said, when the Motor City Co-op—in which UAW participates—purchased through the Farmers Union, a carload of canned tomatoes and tomato juice, direct from a farm cooperative. Plans are now taking shape to get a contract for next year's pack direct from the farmers, Rightley stated.

"I'M thinking how much I can soak you for this."

Calif. CIO Votes To Let Affiliates Decide For Selves On 3rd Party

THE California CIO, in convention at Santa Cruz last week, resolved the inflammable issue of support for a statewide third party by failing to endorse the movement but giving the green light to affiliated local unions which wish to do so.

The resolution, which stalemated a six-man committee equally composed of right-wingers and leftwingers for several days, backed the national CIO resolution on PAC and called for a union of all "progressive forces in California for the purpose of achieving a coalition that can win the 1948 elections."

Advocates of a California third party are conducting a campaign for 270,000 signatures on petitions to place the Independent Progressive Party on the ballot next year.

The convention resolution stated: "As yet there is no unanimity in the CIO as to whether independent political action by labor should go outside the two-party system. We believe, however, that the advocates of a third party represent a significant trend in the progressive political movement to California. * * *

"We recognize the fact that the California CIO Council is not authorized to endorse any political party and for that reason does not endorse any political party, nor can this resolution be interpreted as such. Neither does this resolution restrict political activities of any affiliated local union."

PAC Director Jack Kroll, winding up a tour of the West, told the 700 delegates, "The people have had enough of the 80th Congress and the infamous record it posted in Washington in the last session. Their eyes are opening. They are realizing what's going on, and they are ready to do something about it. All that remains is to channel this desire into the proper course of action."

Other speakers were Irwin DeShetler, Southern California CIO director; Harry Bridges, Northern California CIO director, and Michael Quill, CIO Transport Workers president.

CIO Sea Unions Plan Rank-File Parley

A 3-day joint meeting of five CIO maritime unions recently decided to hold a broad "delegated rank-and-file" conference before April 1, 1948.

The conference will map united strategy for the June 15 period, when current maritime contracts expire. The joint parley had voted unanimously earlier to strike together June 15 if the shipowners attempt to use the Taft-Hartley law to strip them of the union hiring hall.

Three of the unions—the Natl. Maritime Union, Natl. Union of Marine Cooks & Stewards and American Communications Assn. —voted to present joint demands for a 25% increase under a Dec. 15 wage reopening contract provision. They also agreed to seek a single arbitrator for their demand. Other unions attending the parley were the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union and the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers. Although the Inland Boatmen's Union had no representative present, it wired its support.

IN his discussion of the Taft-Hartley Act, Bridges hinted that his union, the Longshoremen and Warehousemen, may ultimately be forced to sign non-Communist affidavits if most other unions comply. Referring to the Supreme Court decision which held there was no evidence that he was a Communist Party member, Bridges said: "I'm one union leader who doesn't have to be afraid of the affidavits." He urged "all-out war" against the Act.

State Council Pres. Morris Zusman was returned to office. The secretary-treasurer's post, vacated by Mervyn Rathborne, was filled by Bjorne Halling, an ILWU official, who defeated Robert Clark, Steelworkers representative, by a vote of 93,825 to 42,135.

An appeal for a unified fight against the T-H Act was sounded in a report submitted by the committee on organizing and adopted by the convention.

Unions which have signed the non-Communist affidavits are "in the same boat" as those which have not, the report warned, and "will not escape any of the consequences of the Act."

TO implement its anti-discrimination program, the CIO established a statewide minorities committee and urged a deliberate policy of advancing members of minority groups to leadership as union officers and staff members. The Thomas House Un-American Affairs Committee and the California Tenney Committee were strongly condemned, as was the practice of requiring loyalty questionnaires in government service.

Delegates adopted in full the national CIO foreign policy resolution which urged non-political aid to Europe, universal disarmament and international atomic energy control with full inspection powers.

REMINGTON RAND AGAIN TRIES TO BREAK UNION

A MAJOR test of whether a "non-complying" union can withstand employer opposition under the Taft-Hartley act developed last week as Remington-Rand, Inc., petitioned the NLRB for an election at its seven CIO Electrical Workers-organized plants.

Under the Act, a union which has failed to file non-communist affidavits cannot be placed on the ballot in an employer-requested election.

The company's new union-breaking move follows a series of unsuccessful attempts over the past 11 years, beginning with passage of the Wagner Act. At that time, Rand devised and used the famed Mohawk Valley strike-breaking formula, later employed in the six-weeks strike which ended last July.

The strike settlement then included a company agreement to enter into a two-year national contract expiring April 1, 1949. An 8c hourly wage increase and six paid holidays were also provided. Local contracts were in effect in each plant pending signature of the master contract.

WITH the passage of the T-H Act Rand on Aug. 7 terminated its local contracts, offering instead wage cuts, speedup, destruction of union machinery and an end to seniority. A suit filed by the union against the company for breach of contract at the Ilion, N. Y., plant is pending before the New York Supreme Court. Union spokesmen gave no indication whether civil action will be taken in connection with violation of the strike settlement agreement.

Although the plants have been operating without a contract since Aug. 7, Intl. UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald said the union is stronger now "than it has been since the existence of the union."

A union spokesman said UE strength had been demonstrated by the company's inability to obtain signatures on decertification petitions from 30% of the workers, required before the NLRB can order a decertification election.

The fact that the T-H Act prohibits the NLRB from ordering a company to bargain with a non-complying union will not alter UE's politicy of boycotting the Board, Fitzgerald said.

UE Secy-Treas. Julius Emspak said that rather than sign "Taft-Hartley contracts," the union would work without signed agreements and rely on its strength to win wage increases and other benefits.

About 10,000 workers are employed in the plants affected, located in upstate New York and Benton Harbor, Mich. The union at an eighth plant, the Intl. Association of Machinists, is not being challenged.

McDonald Says PAC Has Top Priority

The No. 1 concern of the CIO United Steelworkers is political action, David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the union, told 500 delegates to the annual convention of the union's District 7 in Philadelphia, Nov. 23.

District Director Michael Harris said that if Congress fails to act on prices, contracts will be reopened and the "union will demand sufficient wage increases to overcome the upward spiral in the cost of living."

Ernest A. J. Davies, M. P., praised the record of Britain's Labor Government.

LABOR'S WORLD

ARGUMENTS in conservative American circles that all of Britain's troubles are due to its Labor Government just don't face the facts.

Latest production figures from Britain show that under the Labor Party regime—in which British unions have a commanding voice—output has climbed far above 1938 levels, when the Tories were in command.

Average working hours for men in Britain's key manufacturing industries are up to 46.3 a week, and output is increasing despite rations that are less than in the war years.

Coal production, which has been nationalized, is a problem because of manpower losses during the war and not enough new machinery. But in the week ending Nov. 8, the industry produced 4,243,000 tons—within 3% of the 1938 average.

Steel output is up 35% over 1938; trucks by 92%; tractors by 425% railway cars by 40%; merchant shipbuilding by 144%. Britain is making as many cars as in the pre-war era, but exports of autos have jumped nearly 2½ times.

ITALIAN LABOR Federation (the CGIL) had demanded that the government suppress a new group of Mussolini die-hard fascists who are holding meetings in various parts of the countries.

The group, known as MSI, holds sessions at which mention of Mussolini and the fascist regime are cheered, and fascist songs are sung.

AUSTRALIAN COPS, long known for pro-labor sentiments, are making direct affiliation with the country's labor organizations. The Police Association has decided unanimously that its various branches should join labor councils in each cities.

Speakers at the cops' association meeting stressed that the policemen want no part of their traditional role as picketline smashers, according to an Allied Labor News report. Many said they need help from the labor movement to win decent conditions for themselves.

"Our whole future lies with the workers of this country," said J. L. Robinson, delegate from New South Wales.

CIO Proposal On Aviation

SUCCESS of any long-range program for developing the country's aviation industry is dependent to a major degree on maintaining "a high income, stable economy," Secretary-Treasurer David McDonald of the CIO United Steelworkers, told the President's Air Policy Commission last week. McDonald appeared before the commission as a spokesman for the CIO.

He offered the Commission the following series of suggestions described as "basic to a sound program":

"1. Our policy must be based upon adequate consideration of the dependence of the aviation industry on a stable and prosperous economy.

"2. Potential bottlenecks and shortages affecting the aviation industry must be foreseen and avoided.

"3. The existing policy of regulated competition of air transport be continued.

"4. Any future air program must avoid further concentration in the aircraft manufacturing industry.

"5. Manpower utilization during peace or war must be based on voluntary agreement and free flow of the labor force rather than compulsory mobilization.

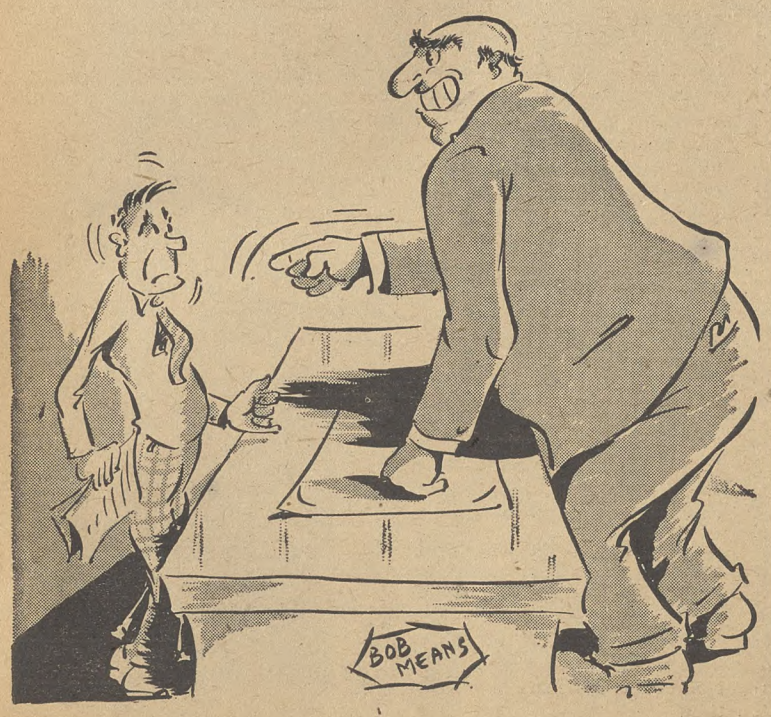
"6. A broadened program of technical training must be instituted to provide the skilled personnel required by an expanding aviation industry."

Picketing May Cost Teacher Job

For being a good CIO member, Isador Rubin may be ousted as a teacher in the New York City school system.

Rubin was suspended by Supt. William Jansen, because he picketed the home of a scab during the recent Brooklyn Trust Co. strike conducted by the Financial Guild of the CIO Office and Professional Workers.

Jansen's charge of "conduct unbecoming a teacher" will be presented to the next meeting of the board of education, which, after a hearing, can either dismiss Rubin from the school system or re-instate him with back pay.



Don't you know a raise will ruin me?"

Anti-Co-op Fight Hit

SPOKESMEN for two CIO unions suggested last week that the current drive to place heavy taxes on farmers and consumers cooperatives is another round in the big business fight to clear the way for super-profits.

Pres. A. J. Fitzgerald of the CIO Electrical Workers, in a statement filed with the House Ways and Means Committee, charged that the $60 million tax revenue which might be obtained from the 10,150 co-ops is less than the tax paid by four big food processors—Armour, Swift, Borden and Natl. Dairy Products.

The amount, he said, is a mere drop in the bucket compared to the federal government's estimated $40 billion revenue for the current year.

VICE-PRES. Lewis Bentzley of the CIO Food & Tobacco Union, appearing before the same Congressional committee, said that big business is trying to drive the co-ops out of business through special taxation.

Taxing of co-op savings, the FTA official said, is just the opposite of what is necessary, "because the working farmer, the industrial workers and other low-income groups are seriously overtaxed" at the present time.

REP. WRIGHT PATMAN

Calls Anti-Co-op Lobby "Sinister"

Powerful lobby groups, spearheaded by the Natl. Tax Equality Assn., have sought to tax the savings secured by co-ops, which are redistributed to members. The anti-cooperative lobby, which Rep. Wright Patman (D. Tex.) recently described as "one of the most sinister" in Washington, has argued that the co-ops endanger private corporations.

A NUMBER of food processing companies, Fitzgerald said, have been fined at various times by the government for trade conspiracies and over-charging consumers.

Patman, in lengthy testimony before the committee, argued that much of the "profit" of cooperatives comes from savings through collective action, and as such it's not taxable. The cooperative is merely an agent of the individual farmer, he said, and its income profit goes directly to the shareholders—who pay personal income taxes.

GOP'S FAMILY ROW SLOWS ACTION AGAINST INFLATION

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CONGRESS, making haste on emergency "stop gap aid" to three European countries, is moving at much slower speed on the President's program to halt inflation through use of price controls, rationing and control of speculation.

With the Congress in session a week, the streamlined GOP machine that put across the Taft-Hartley Act and wage-hour amendments last year showed signs of squeeking at the joints. Taft's leadership of the Senate Republicans was the subject of some angry muttering from his own ranks, as a result of his dead-end opposition to price controls and rationing.

The $597 million project to keep France, Italy and Austria from economic chaos until the general foreign aid program can be worked up, weathered efforts in the Senate to pare down the amount of help. By a 56-30 vote, the Senators voted down a move to trim some $200 million from the figure.

In the House, meanwhile, action is expected quickly on the authorization. The House Foreign Affairs Committee recommendation pared $108 million from the Truman proposal, but added $60 million for Chiang Kai Shek's Chinese nationalist government.

But the proposals for action here on the home front are moving far more slowly. Sen. Taft's joint Senate-House economic committee, one of three groups to hold hearings on the subject, listened to Commerce Sec. Averill Harriman call for governmental control and allocation of scarce materials—and steel, in particular.

"Such controls would permit the direction of materials for use in meeting the most urgent and critical needs of our domestic economy," he said, "in order to combat inflation and also to carry out our domestic foreign policy."

SEC. of Agriculture Clinton Anderson appeared before the House Banking Committee hearings with a warning that price control would be good "insurance" on the home front during the years ahead.

If foreign aid were a matter only of months, Anderson said, he would oppose the project.

"But all of us recognize that aid over a much longer period will be required," he said. "To be effective, it will have to be substantial and also available on time.

"We ought not to take any unnecessary chance of having to curtail our effort at a critical moment, or endangering our own economy. Authority for price control and rationing would be good insurance," he added.

What sort of anti-inflation program will come out of the second session of the 80th Congress, when it gets down to "routine" business in January is still anybody's guess.

Statements issued by some GOP Senators over the holiday weekend gave clear indication that at least some members of the Republican party majority in Congress are unhappy over the superconservative leadership of Sen. Taft and Brazilla C. Reese, chairman of the GOP National Committee.

Taft's angry attack on Pres. Truman's request for price controls produced quiet spluttering from a number of Congressmen who have heard from the folks back home of the need for dramatic action against inflation.

MORE spectacular was the demand of Sen. Aiken (R., Vt.), who has frequently taken a liberal position, that Reece be fired from his top GOP job because he has "failed miserably to win the confidence of the voting public."

And Sen. Tobey (N. H.), another member of the Republican bloc of anti-Taftites, called on Reece to assure the country that the GOP members of Congress are "Americans before they are party members."

He assailed a statement by the GOP boss describing Sen. McGrath (D., R. I.), who was recently named chairman of the Democratic national committee, as "a millionaire Rhode Island Red."

With conflict growing in the GOP ranks and little action taking place over the holiday season, much of the reporting from Capitol Hill was a mixture of plain ordinary back-yard gossip and speculation by "unnamed observers."

One such report indicated that the Republican majority will seek to keep hands off labor legislation pending a full test of the Taft-Hartley act.

That conflicts with earlier announcements by Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.), who heads the House Labor Committee, that he will order hearings on his favorite subject—a "right to work" strikebreaking bill—in mid-January.

At the same time, a House Labor sub-committee has been holding extended hearings on the Wage-Hour law.

While the group's chairman, Rep. Sam McConnell, (R., Pa.) has objected to printed predictions on the committee's plans, union legislative agents and many reporters guess that changes—perhaps of a drastic nature—will be written into the Wage-Hour law before the Congress goes home for the '48 election campaign.

Hysteria's Fruit

Movie Industry To Fire 10 Cited By House Group For Contempt

TEN leading Hollywood figures face contempt of Congress trials in the next few months, as a result of House of Representatives action last week in supporting Rep. J. Parnell Thomas' Committee on Un-American Activities.

Over the warnings of a handful of Congressmen that basic civil rights are being seriously threatened by the Committee's activities, the House voted 346-17 to cite Albert Maltz, prominent movie writer. The other nine contempt citations followed on voice votes.

In addition to Maltz the other men to be dismissed were: Dalton Trumbo, Samuel Ornitz, John Howard Lawson, Ring Lardner, Jr., Lester Cole and Alvah Bessey, writers; Herbert Biberman, a director-producer; Edward Dmytryk, a director, and Robert Adrian Scott, writer and producer.

Scott and Dmytryk—first to be fired—said:

"As a footnote to the perversion of justice, history will record the temporary triumph of John Rankin of Mississippi, who in the hall of Congress brought the citation debate to an end with a calculated anti-Semitic reference . . .

"We, the producer and director of 'Crossfire,' a picture which opposses the degrading practice of anti-Semitism, feel that 'Crossfire' will stand as testament of our Americanism long after Rankin and Thomas are dead."

Meanwhile, 50 top owners and executives of the movie industry took action which may pave the way for national blacklisting of workers who are Communists or accused of being Communists.

The industry's top brass, in a New York meeting, voted a suspend without pay the 10 Hollywood figures cited by Congress for contempt. They issued a statement saying "we will not knowingly employ" Communists or members of any group aiming to overthrow the government.

Dr. Harlow Shapley, Harvard professor and head of the arts committee of the Progressive Citizens of America, urged the industry, however, to resist anti-Communist hysteria.

"For you to yield to it by establishing blacklists and purges would be a betrayal of the trust so many Americans have in you," Shapley said in a wire to Eric Johnston, head of the Motion Picture Producers Assn.

The same fear of blacklists, hysteria and violation of civil rights ran through the speeches of the small group of Congressmen who opposed contempt citations for the 10 Hollywood personalities. The 10 men had refused to tell the House Un-American Committee in "yes or no" language whether they are members of the Communist Party or of the Screen Writers Guild, a Hollywood union.

Said Rep. Eberharter (D., Pa.): "We can support the recommendations of the Committee on Un-American Activities for citations for contempt of Congress, or we can support free speech. We cannot have both. We must have one or the other."

Eberharter attacked the Committee's procedure, and the evidence presented against the 10 persons.

"Not a single movie was cited as being subversive or as being Communist propaganda," he said, "despite the fact that movie industry requested time and again to be given a list of such movies."

He pointed out that the cited individuals were "confronted by witnesses who were permitted to smear them with innuendo, suspicion, predjudice and hearsay three and four times removed, and were not granted the right to cross-examine."

But the voting victory went to the committee. Voting against the citations was one Republican, Rep. Bakewell (R., Mo.); Rep. Marcantonio, American Labor Party-ite from New York; and 15 Democrats: Blatnik (Minn.); Bloom (N. Y.); Carroll (Colo.); Celler (N. Y.); Douglas (Calif.); Eberharter (Pa.); Havenner (Calif.); Hollifield (Calif.); Huber (Ohio); Karsten (Mo.); Klein (N. Y.); Morgan (Pa.); Pfeifer (N. Y.); Powell (N. Y.), and Sadowski (Mich.).

CIO SEEKS PAY INCREASE WITHOUT RISE IN PRICES

PRES. PHILIP MURRAY and vice presidents declare wage earners caught in grip of economic crisis; they assail unbridled increases in things that go to make up daily cost of living while savings disappear and profits reach unprecedented heights; insist loss in real income must be restored. NAM offers a program: "reduce inflationary pressure which drives up prices", give business income tax reductions, but "encourage labor leaders to forego demands for further pay boosts."

Denham In New Way To Bust Union

ROBERT N. DENHAM, general counsel of the Nat'l Labor Relations Board, last week made a statement which labor attorneys say is a gross act of impropriety.

Denham, in effect, invited the Remington Rand Co. to refuse to bargain collectively.

He did this in commenting on a regional NLRB action denying a petition of Rand for a collective bargaining representative election in seven of its plants where the CIO Electrical Workers have been certified for several years. There are 10,000 workers affected.

Denham said Rand would "act at its own peril" if it continued to deal with UE and entered into contracts with it. The NLRB ruling declared that an election could not be held because UE (like a number of other unions, including the CIO Steelworkers and AFL Miners) has refused to sign non-Communist affidavits and file financial petitions under the Taft-Hartley Law.

Labor attorneys say Denham's comment, made in the face of no evidence that the UE had lost its majority in Rand plants, has no sanction under law and could lead to extreme industrial chaos. Rand was unable to get the required signatures of 30% of its employes to secure a decertification ballot.

THE NLRB ruling provides a new way for employers to abandon collective bargaining even where they cannot get enough decertification signatures.

Board officials were quoted as saying the NLRB ruling in effect stripped UE of its official certification.

UE spokesmen, after the ruling, reiterated their confidence that the ruling could not hurt the union which UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald said was "stronger than ever." Other officials said UE would insist that Rand fulfill its signed pledge, after last summer's strike, to continue to deal with UE.

NLRB officials acknowledged that the Rand ruling makes it possible for an employer to get rid of a certified union by petitioning for an election he knew could never be held. This method, some felt, would be much easier and quicker than decertification. And, it could be used when the company, such as in the Rand case, couldn't get enough signatures for a decertification poll.

Rand has made no effort to challenge the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists, which represents workers in its eighth plant.

THE NLRB was in the news last week in these other events:

(a) It saw the T-H Law challenged in court;

(b) The top NLRB office ruled that a non-signing union can't get on a collective bargaining agency election ballot even when the company asks an election because another union has demanded recognition. (There was no rival union set up in the Rand case;)

(c) The NLRB's interim appointees were approved by a Senate committee;

(d) The NLRB asked the Budd Co. to reinstate—with back pay—a foreman, Oscar Owens, fired in 1940 for organizing other foremen into a union at Detroit Budd.

THE (a) suit was filed in the District of Columbia Federal Court by the CIO Maritime Union, which sought to have the non-Communist affidavit provisions of the T-H Law declared unconstitutional.

The (b) decision affected the CIO Fur & Leather Workers, which had a contract with the Gloversville, N. Y., plant of Herman Lowenstein, Inc., under the former ownership and claimed an oral contract with Lowenstein. The unaffiliated Adirondack Leather Workers' Union had informed the company it was claiming a majority of the employes. Though the CIO union denied that, the company asked the NLRB for a certification election, which was granted, with Fur omitted.

The (c) refers to the Senate Labor Committee approval of Board members Abe Murdoch and T. Copeland Gray and Genl. Counsel Robert M. Denham. The three have been serving under interim appointments since the Senate sidetracked approval just before adjournment last summer.

IN the NMU suit, Chief Justice Bolitha J. Laws announced he would ask that two justices be named to sit with him.

The NMU and the AFL Seafarers' Union have been conducting an organizational drive in the Great Lakes. Both asked for certification last spring. The case seemed headed for an NLRB election when the T-H Law passed.

The Seafarers, after the AFL convention, signed non-Communist affidavits and filed financial reports. The NMU refused to sign.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said he had refused to sign because the oath was an invasion of his rights as a citizen. He announced he was not a communist.

'Get This Straight: I'll Agree To Nothing,' Denham Tells NLRB Employes Union

By GLORIA CAPLAN

UNIONS have no place in the hiring-firing-promoting domain, says the nation's top labor relations "authority", Robert N. Denham. "It's not in the cards," he said, under Taft-Hartley.

This new interpretation of the T-H Act was unsheathed by the NLRB general counsel before a 13-man bargaining committee of the independent NLRB Employes Union, which had been granted half an hour with their boss for discussion of promotions and grievance procedure.

The union represents a majority of the NLRB staff, both professional and clerical, and has been in existence since 1938. Although its first contract was never renewed, union sources explained that the Board continued to abide by grievance and posting procedures prior to Taft-Hartley.

Wishing to learn Denham's future policy toward the union and its established procedures, the union wrote him three letters, dated Sept. 5, Oct. 23 and Nov. 12, requesting a conference. The letters were ignored, a union spokesman said, but finally Denham agreed to a half-hour meeting on Nov. 17.

Treated Like Agitator

According to the union, Denham agreed to nothing during the conference and "treated us like agitators instead of representatives of a union. His position was tantamount to a flat rejection of the principle of collective bargaining as defined not only in the Wagner Act, but also in the Taft-Hartley Act."

Discussion during the conference centered on the policy, followed in the past, of posting job vacancies for the benefit of NRLB employes who might wish to apply. The procedure was rejected by Denham with the statement, "Let's get this straight; I'll agree to nothing."

The union subsequently appealed to the five-man Natl. Labor Relations Board, which prior to the T-H Law was responsible for appointments and promotions. Just where the final authority lies now—whether with the Board or Denham—is not clear, the union source explained.

The Board has not yet determined its stand. "They (the Board) treated us with the dignity to which we are accustomed," the union committee reported.

ROBERT N. DENHAM
"Clericals Wouldn't Understand"

As nearly as the 13 members of the committee could reconstruct the session, it went like this:

DENHAM: "Let's get down to cases. What are you here for?"

The union spokesman referred to the six subjects outlined in the Sept. 5 letter, which, he said, could not be covered in 30 minutes. He suggested that the discussion be confined to job postings and that dates be set for further meetings.

DENHAM: "I will not agree to be bound by anything. It's my responsibility to select the most qualified people to operate this Act, and where I find the person who is the most eminently qualified person to fill a particular job, he is the man who will get it. Posting is a sham where you know in advance who is the person who will get the job. * * * *"

UNION: "Do you mean to determine when postings will be made and the basis of selection unilaterally?"

DENHAM: "Yes, unilaterally, if you want to put it that way. Anything else is not in the cards."

UNION: "But, Mr. Denham, when an employer did that, the Board for many years has found that an unfair labor practice."

DENHAM: "That was under the Wagner Act; this is under Taft-Hartley."

UNION: "Does that mean you are abrogating agreements between the Board and the union which have existed since 1938?"

DENHAM: "Let's get this straight: I'll agree to nothing. We simply do not have that kind of time under the present setup to post and invite applications, look over the list, and have a waiting period. It simply isn't in the cards."

He's the Judge

The union countered with arguments for posting. An employe in Los Angeles might conceivably be interested in a Washington opening. How would he know about the vacancy? Many employes remain with the Board in hopes of gaining a promotion, the union pointed out. When they repeatedly see outsiders being placed in jobs for which they are qualified morale will sink, and employes will look elsewhere for jobs.

Denham reportedly replied: "I am the best judge of who is qualified. When I make a decision, I am not going to change it. I haven't made any mistakes."

UNION: "We're not saying you've made mistakes. We think however, that a posting system will save you time and help you in making selections, in getting the best man for each job. That's the way we've been operating since 1938."

DENHAM: "Yes, and look at the staff you have as a result of collective bargaining. When I took over, I found people who were in positions they weren't qualified to fill, and others who were held down when they were well able to hold responsible positions."

In a further exchange of words, Denham stated that he would post those positions for which he did not already have someone in mind, but refused to hear any grievance.

UNION: "There may be cases without a posting system where persons well qualified may be unfairly passed over."

DENHAM: "I am against injustice. * * * I am not going to hear grievances."

The discussion then turned to clerical employes, and the union referred to a previous request that information concerning job qualifications and other technical points be "disseminated to the employes."

"Disseminated? What do you mean, 'disseminated'?" asked the General Counsel.

The union explained. Denham replied—while three representatives of the clerical employes looked on:

"Even if we gave it to the clericals, they wouldn't understand it anyway."

Is It the Same Man Talking?

On Nov. 24, one week after his bargaining conference with representatives of the NLRB Employes Union, Robert N. Denham told members of the New York Personnel Management Association:

"Of course, labor's pay should be adequate, but pay increases will not buy one small part of the morale and esprit de corps that can be purchased with something that costs nothing in terms of dollars, but yields unparalleled dividends. That is, the respect, loyalty, and devotion to their jobs, of the people who are working in your plant.

"I recently heard one of the outstanding leaders of industry . . . make the statement that the one thing an employer can give a man which is more important to him than the money in his pay envelope, is a sense of importance in the organization — the sense of human dignity to which all of us aspire, and the deprivation of which all of us resent."

For Freedom: Walter E. Davis, 22-year-old World War II veteran who lost his hand in combat, last week refused to sign a Federal loyalty questionnaire. Davis said: "I didn't fight for that kind of government which tells you 'sign this or else.'"

CIO ASKS 'SUBSTANTIAL INCREASES,' CALLS PRICE RISE 'UNJUSTIFIABLE'

Murray: U.S. In Grip Of Inflation

THE CIO last week, hitting at the "propaganda that increased wages have been or are at the root of our economic difficulties," declared:

"The CIO is determined to lighten the unbearable economic burden which has been imposed upon the people. To this end, the CIO and its affiliated unions shall proceed through the processes of collective bargaining to obtain substantial wage increases for the American workers to restore their loss in real income suffered through inflation and assure sustained purchasing power as the foundation for continued maximum employment and production.

"In the face of the present level of profits for American industry, this objective can be achieved without any justifiable increase in prices."

The statement, printed in full in the adjoining column, was issude by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in the name of the CIO vice-presidents, who adopted it unanimously.

IMMEDIATE reaction from the press and industry was slow. Here are samples:

Earl Bunting, president of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers: "This is a trial balloon. I don't believe Phil Murray is out after a third round of wage increases right now."

The NAM itself: In a full page ad, it offered a 12-point program to "reduce the inflationary pressure which drives prices up." The points included reduction in government spending; income tax reduction to provide further funds for capital investment; a plan to "encourage labor leaders to forego demands for further general increases." Conspicuously absent from the ad was any mention of a possible reduction in present prices after the "inflationary pressure which drive prices up" are reduced.

New York Times: In an editorial, "A Third Round?" The Times states, "one can prove almost anything he wishes statistically if he is permitted to select his own 'base'." The Times, on one hand, uses the 1939 dollar value to prove that now the worker is about 25% better off than he was in 1939, even if his dollar has depreciated in value. On the other hand, the Times uses the same formula to reduce present profits—running at the rate of $17,500,000,000 a year—to an actual dollar value of $11,000,000,000, but fails to mention that the industrial net profit has increased far more than the workers' net earnings.

New York Herald Tribune: "Mr. Murray's statement, as president of CIO, has value. Shall we encourage further the wage-price spiral or seek with rationing and other methods to check and control it? Mr. Murray has put the decision starkly before us. He presents his case with customary exaggeration. . . . No doubt the situation is serious and he has a case, but not in the degree he would have us think. How serious is it? Enough so, we believe, for the earnest consideration of Congress."

Wall St. Journal: This gave a tip off that industry would continue to let the consumer absorb the cost of labor increases so that unions might be unpopular. "Biggest threat of all," W. S. J. says, "is the CIO's new wage drive. If it succeeds, prices will go higher. . . ." The paper does unbend enough to list onther "threats"—railroad freight increases, the demand for oil and steel.

Asked by reporters if the CIO would resort to strikes to get its proposals, Murray said it was hoped that straight collective bargaining would prevail.

'The CIO Is Determined'

HERE is the unanimously-adopted statement of the CIO vice presidents, issued by Pres. Philip Murray.

The wage earners of America are caught today in the grip of a deepening inflationary crisis.

The stubborn facts reveal the cause of our present inflation and give the lie to the propaganda that increased wages have been or are at the root of our economic difficulties. During the past two years there has been maintained by the nation's reactionary forces a steady drum fire attack against the living standards of the American people.

Immediately following VJ-Day the excess profits tax law was repealed, in the face of steadily rising profits. In mid-1946 the Congress so mutilated price controls that the demise of OPA was inevitable with an immediate and continuing rise in living costs.

THE Taft-Hartley Act is an integral part of this pattern—designed as a weapon for employers to undermine the wage standards and working conditions of labor.

The result is that real income and wage standards of American workers are steadily declining. Led by sky-rocketing food prices, the cost of everyday commodities has reached unheard of heights. Since the ending of OPA, the cost of food, the major expense of every workingmans' family, has increased 40% as against only 2% during the price controls and rationing period between May, 1943, and mid-1946. The general cost of living has increased over 23% since June of 1946.

MILLIONS of Americans, in order to meet living expenses, have seen their hard-earned savings disappear. Living standards are being seriously impaired with families finding it impossible to take care of their health needs. Since January, 1945, the workers in manufacturing industries have suffered a loss of over 18% in the purchasing power of their weekly earnings.

At the same time, for the year 1947 corporate profits after taxes are at the rate of 17½ billion dollars as compared with the war-time figure of 10 billion dollars in 1943, and a little over 8 billion dollars in the peace-time boom year of 1929. Greedy profiteering and monopolistic control of prices are establishing fantastic returns for industry while the living standards of the mass of American people, including small businessmen, fixed income earners, and the American worker, are steadily deteriorating.

The profit figures demonstrate that industry could have held its price line, restrained itself from profiteering, have granted the wage increases during the last two years to protect the living standards of the people, and business profits would still have been in excess of any peace-time year and certainly double the average of pre-war years, 1936-39.

THE very reactionary forces which are exploiting the American people, offer as their solution a speed-up in production for the wage earners, a lengthening of the work week and elimination of overtime payments. All such vicious proposals are designed to increase the present extortionate profits and degrade even further the living standards of American wage and salaried workers.

The CIO is determined to lighten the unbearable economic burden which has been imposed upon the people.

To this end, the CIO and its affiliated unions shall proceed through the process of collective bargaining to obtain substantial wage increases for the American workers to restore their loss in real income suffered through inflation and assure sustained purchasing power as the foundation for continued maximum employment and production.

In the face of the present level of profits for American industry, this objective can be achieved without any justifiable increase in prices.

Chain Store Price Cut

A case-lot food depot opened recently by the CIO Electrical Workers in Wilmerding, Pa., is meeting with a big response, reports UE Local 610. The union is selling canned goods, purchased through Eastern Cooperative Wholesale, to its members in case lot quantities at wholesale prices.

As a result of its program, the union states, chain stores began offering case lot prices and quantities for the first time, and prices on some canned goods items dropped a penny or two.

Even Lending Libraries Up Prices

• As the CIO last week announced it would seek "substantial wage increases" to offset "loss in real income," we were paying higher prices for (among other things): beef, hams, lard, eggs, prunes, steers, hogs, lambs, butter, raisins, corn, rye, bellies—and lending library books.

• Business was making no bones of it—1947 was THE year.

• A grocery chain announced that it was charging "low" and "reduced" prices such as 49c for U.S. good (3d) grade chuck roast; 49c spareribs, 69c hams.

• The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index was up to $7.17, compared to $6.39 in the corresponding 1946 period, and compared to the previous all-time high of $7.12 in the week ended Sept. 16, 1947. The all-time low was $1.49 on Jan. 31, 1933. (In percentages, that is a 382% increase in food prices since the darkest days of the depression.)

• The wholesale price of pepper, 4c a pound in 1939, was at 52c, up 1200%. The industry expected a price cut soon—maybe down to 42c by Jan. 1.

• The Treasury Tax Division showed that old folks living on pensions are caught in the middle of a double squeeze of high taxes and inflated prices. Seven per cent of the population is now over 65 years of age; it is estimated that by 1980 there will be 11½% in that bracket.

• "The oil industry is much concerned over the possible repercussions that may follow the advance of 50c a barrel in petroleum made by Sun Oil . . . the fear was expressed that if the price rise should be met by other companies, it would aid the cause of those fighting for further government intervention in the industry"—New York Times.

• Western Electric listed a net profit of $40,825,784 for the 12 months ended Sept. 30, 1947, compared with $15,548,177 in the previous 12 months. But, that $15,000,000 figure included a federal carry-back credit, net, of $62,767,410.

• Roberts R. Nathan, economist whose CIO report last year made industry scream, told Congress that wages on the whole were too low for present prices—that uncontrolled prices would lead to a bust—that there should be a 20 to 25% rollback in food costs—defended the CIO's proposal of wage increases—said they could be accomplished without price rises—said that if rollbacks, rationing, credit controls and other measures were taken to equalize relationship of wages and prices, then the government could step in and maintain the new price-wage level.

• Bourbon costs at least $1 more in Kentucky—where much of it is made—than it does in Washington, D. C., 400 or 500 miles away.

WET STREETS AND PAGE ADS

The NAM is at it again!

It is expounding another of its remarkable economic theories—and NAM expounds best in page advertisements.

Here, in NAM's own words, is the theory:

"Wet streets no more cause rain than high prices cause inflation. Wet streets are the result of rain. High prices are the disastrous result of inflation."

It's a beautiful theory. The only thing wrong with it is that it is completely misleading.

Remember what NAM said in its page ads back in June of last year? It was:

"If OPA is permanently discontinued, production of goods will mount rapidly, and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay."

Well, prices have been "quickly" adjusting themselves for about 18 months—adjusting upwards, that is.

We didn't have unreasonably high prices and we didn't have dangerous inflation until after NAM helped kill OPA. Now we've got both.

Maybe we don't understand NAM's concept of inflation—but we do understand high prices.

And we can understand why NAM would try to convince the public that exorbitant prices and juicy profits were the result, not the cause, of our inflation.

Furthermore, we'll bet our last subscription blank that NAM wouldn't argue that reducing prices would make our inflation worse!

UNION-BUSTING AT A PROFIT

A banker from the steel town of Sharon, Pa.—Chauncey E. Brockway—has proposed a novel way of getting rid of unions.

Brockway, who is also a lawyer, proposed to the House Ways and Means Committee that workers be barred from the right to union membership and the right to strike and that Congress adopt this plan:

Firms which guarantee year-around employment and agree to split all income with their employes would be granted freedom from taxes. Brockway hastens to suggest that the idea be first tried in plants with 20 or less employes.

Despite its eagerness to get rid of unions, we doubt that even the smallest fraction of industry will snap at a chance to share profits with its workers.

* * *

We'll wager that those who are working overtime to wreck the overtime law are getting a lot more than time and a half for their efforts.

* * *

One of the leading industrial groups says we shouldn't give aid to foreign nations which have price controls. Does this outfit want to make European inflation as well as hunger?

* * *

We bow to the international CIO union president who declared that CIO stands for "Cash-in-Overalls."

Need—Not Desire—Prompted CIO's Latest Wage Drive

By ALLAN L. SWIM

BEHIND the announcement that the CIO is launching a campaign for "substantial wage increases" is a simple, down-to-earth story.

It is the story of what happens when working men and women get squeezed too tightly in an economic wringer operated by those who are greedy for profits.

Despite its simplicity, it will be badly distorted—and those who usually condemn the CIO for nearly everything it does will shift into high gear.

But there are some solid facts with which to shoot their condemnation full of holes.

THE CIO fought strongly against what it considered the premature death of OPA.

It lost this fight. Business and industry, which wanted price controls lifted, won a victory—a costly victory for the average American.

Prices started increasing. They went up and up and up. Purchasing power shrank.

During the past summer the CIO suggested the high prices problem might be solved largely by voluntary action, with controls placed only on speculative commodities. Later it advocated outright price control and rationing.

AS time passed the squeeze became tighter and industry's profits mounted higher.

Wage earners found that it took more and more money to buy less and less.

And there wasn't a single indication that a change in the trend would be forthcoming soon.

Such was the situation when the CIO officers met in Washington and discussed what action the unions should take next.

It wasn't hard to find the answer:

Union members needed more money, so the unions would negotiate for wage increases.

THOSE who sought to find some deeply hidden significance in the CIO officers' action ran smack into a blank wall.

Nothing was hidden. Workers needed more dough. Industry was making fat profits. So the officers decided to open a drive for higher pay.

It was that simple.

The wage campaign will be conducted on an industry-by-industry basis. The raises sought will depend on the financial position of each industry and the needs of its employes.

And the CIO believes that substantial raises can be given without the necessity of increasing prices.

LET'S look at the profit picture—a rosy one for business and industry.

Corporations this year have been earning profits at an annual rate of 17½ billion dollars (after payment of taxes).

This is 7½ billions more than corporations earned in wartime 1943 and more than double the corporate earnings of booming 1929.

These figures show industry can pass out substantial raises and still be in a healthy financial position.

The CIO would rather have substantial price reductions, but need—not desire—makes a wage program necessary.

"Er—uh, where does this bill of rights that labor's always mentioning come from?"

'The CIO's Crusade'

(From the New York Herald Tribune)

"We salute the leadership of the CIO for its crusade abroad in support of American foreign policy. James B. Carey, the secretary-treasurer of the C. I. O., has cut the ground from under the feet of the Communists by his statesmanlike argument for the Marshall plan before the World Federation of Trade Unions' executive bureau in Paris.

"It is to be hoped that the State Department will put an end to those of its maneuvers which are cutting the ground from under the feet of the CIO as it fights to prevent WFTU from becoming an auxiliary of the Cominform.

"As Mr. William Attwood explained in an article that appeared on this page yesterday, the Communists' biggest argument against the Marshall plan has been that it represents a plot by American banking and industrial interests to enslave Europe economically.

"The representatives of the state-controlled Soviet unions and of the Communist-dominated French and Italian unions tried to deny Mr. Carey the right to speak on this subject. They were voted down, however, and the CIO leader's remarks must now be distributed throughout the world.

"Mr. Carey made some telling points. He quoted a resolution taken by the WFTU two years ago pledging support for just the kind of reconstruction credits and grants that are contemplated under the Marshall plan. This enabled him to charge the Communist-led unions with failing to conform with WFTU policy.

"He also recalled American war-time and post-war aid to the Soviet Union, with no strings attached, to the amount of over $11 billion. Most convincing of all to the rank and file of European labor will be his argument that the Marshall idea is in perfect harmony with the basic trade union objective of raising the living standards of the working class. He asked whether the Communists were opposed to that. An answer will not be readily forthcoming.

"The CIO leaders feel that they are not getting the backing to which they are entitled from the State Department. The refusal of visas to two French Communist labor chiefs who wanted to meet with CIO leaders weakened the latter's arguments for American freedom and democracy.

"The CIO wanted to be host to the next WFTU congress, believing that would provide an opportunity to show off labor's achievements and living standards under the American system.

"The State Department interposed a veto that is hard to understand or justify. Perhaps this is just bureaucratic stupidity. Yet one can hardly escape the conclusion that the men who shape our foreign policy have failed to recognize the value of the labor movement as an ally in the contest of ideas and ideologies between the American and the Soviet brands of democracy."

Didn't Have Enough Left To Buy Drinks

THREE CIO Newspaper Guildsmen were chewing the fat one evening, "solving" the world's perplexing problems one by one—as newsmen so frequently do.

Finally the conversation swung around to the housing situation. Two of the men discussed the topic with the usual amount of half-hearted cynicism.

The third, however, went on a verbal rampage, damning the high cost of real estate, the realty lobby and the fact that 'it's too darn cold to live in a tent."

IT'S pretty bad, the newsman said, when a country as rich and powerful as the United States fails to provide its people with adequate housing.

"It would be bad enough if people didn't have decent places to live because they're broke," he said. "But it's a disgrace—the fact that guys making good dough have to live in holes in the wall or submit to highway robbery to get a decent place.

"And the worst thing about it is that the situation gets worse instead of better."

THE complaining newsman was asked, "What makes you so hot under the collar about housing?"

He replied, "What has been happening to me shouldn't happen to a dirty dog!

"You know that I changed jobs recently and that meant moving from one city to another.

"I got a hotel room, then started hunting for a house to rent. I read the want ads. I called the rental agents. I pulled every string I could—but no luck.

"Then I hunted for apartments—with the same results."

FINALLY, in desperation, the newsman started looking for a place to buy.

"Then," he said, "I really learned something about the housing situation.

"Some of the salesmen acted like they were doing me a big favor when they let me look at houses they had for sale.

"A couple of them laughed at me when I said I had only $2,500 for a down payment. One told me, 'You couldn't get anything bigger than a chicken coop with such a small payment.'

"It was darn discouraging, but I kept right on looking."

THEN the newsman started talking about prices, becoming a bit bitter as he did so.

"One of the first places I looked at was a small white clapboard. The salesman didn't crack a smile when he said the price was $16,500 'and a good buy at the price.'

"I was asked to pay as much as $18,000 for houses that originally cost less than $5,000. I looked at one old six-room brick and was told that it would cost me $20,000.

"Finally, I found a place costing about $5,000 more than I felt I could pay—but I could swing it on the down payment I had.

"WELL, today I went down to a little office and signed up a lot of papers.

"They made me take out two fire insurance policies for three years in advance.

"There were fees for this and fees for that—more darn fees than I even knew existed.

"But I've got a place to live—a place I can call my own 20 years from now.

"I feel like celebrating, so I'll buy you guys a drink if one of you'll lend me a couple of bucks. All I've got left is mortgages!"

STILL LIFE (And That's About All!)

Off To Rattlesnake:

Kentucky Teachers Denounce Foe Of Catholics And Negroes

YOU'D better kowtow to Heman H. McGuire—or be exiled to Rattlesnake, Ky.

McGuire, president of the Kentucky Educational Association and superintendent of the Carter County School System, has selected Rattlesnake as his own personal Siberia for teachers who show independence of mind. He also does not hesitate to attack Catholics and Negroes in political campaigns.

Recently, McGuire called a conference of Carter teachers. The call to the meeting gave no reason for the summons. The president of the AFL Teachers' Union local took the floor and asked whether this was to be another session to pass a "vote of confidence" for McGuire.

No one gave him an answer, but, a few minutes later a teacher offered a glowing resolution of confidence in McGuire. The union president moved that the vote be by secret ballot—well aware that many teachers would vote "no" secretly who did not dare to do so on a show of hands.

SOMEONE objected and the chair astounded the union head by ruling the secret ballot motion out of order because there had been an objection.

McGuire uses Rattlesnake for punishment because a state teachers' tenure act makes it difficult to dismiss a teacher. Rattlesnake is a small mountain school so remote that it costs more to get there and live there than any teacher could afford.

McGUIRE made his anti-Catholic, anti-Negro attack in an ad backing Ercel Kozee, Republican candidate, against Earl Bellew, Democrat and an officer of the AFL Brick and Clay Workers' Union, in a race for state representative. The ad, which appeared in the Carter County Herald, said:

"He (Bellew) told me in my office how strong he was for me for superintendent and that he was telling the people he was for me. Certainly he should be because I have taken care of his wife in one of the best school positions in the county, and I gave her a job in times of depression when they needed help.

"I saw his chief supporter at Olive Hill, Kentucky, Charlie Johnson, and he talking in the Court House yard at Grayson. In a few minutes Charlie Johnson came to me and said they wanted to beat Joe Bates for Congress and that I could do the job if I would run for Congress next year and that they would be for me. I told him that I did not have the money to make the race and that unless my mind changed, I would not be a candidate. I learned later that it was a frame-up . . .

"The public might want to know that a few years ago Charlie Johnson was in a bad financial condition and needed help. I gave him and his wife both schools.

"HE (another one of Bellew's supporters) is the same fellow that a few years ago got involved with church money and an indictment was approved by the Carter County grand jury against him. The case was coming up for trial. I felt sorry for him . . . I had the prosecution stopped against him.

"It is my duty as K. E. A. president to lead the fight for sound principles in education. The Catholics are trying to get control of the public schools in Kentucky. I am against the use of public money for Catholic schools. Mr. Bellew has never said in his platform how he stood. If he wants to stand for the Pope of Rome, he can do so, but I am not going to sell the public schools out.

"I am against allowing Communism inherited from Russia being taught in our schools. Communists believe that there is no God. Mr. Bellew has not said in his platform how he stood. If he wants to follow such doctrines he can do so. I for one will not follow such philosophy."

Though the county has gone Republican normally by a wide margin, Kozee won by only 200 votes.

The AFL Teachers' state convention, after a proposal by its president, Patrick Kirwan, voted to ask for McGuire's resignation as K.E.A. head and as county superintendent.

Grateful for Food: A homeless Chinese boy is devouring a bowl of rice on a street in Hengyang, Hunan province, where thousands of starving country people poured into the city to beg for food. Hundreds died in the streets of the much-bombed city. Scores of children roam the street in search of food.

SHOULD SHAME WELL-FED PEOPLE

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

MILLIONS of starving, ragged children all over the world face a joyless Christmas again this year. These innocent helpless victims of the world's most terrible war, many of them maimed for life, with arms, hands or legs gone, are cold, hungry and homeless.

Hundreds of thousands of children whose parents were killed in bombed cities and burned villages, or died of hunger and disease, roam the streets begging. Some live in caves or hovels made of rubble, or in the ruins of their wrecked homes, under indescribable conditions that should shame well-fed, well-housed people the world over.

In Poland alone, nearly five million children, 200,000 of them orphans, lack all the basic necessities of life. Living for the most part in dark, cold improvised shelters under the rubble of destroyed towns and cities, they depend upon outside help for such food as they get.

Many youngsters who could be saved if help came are dying of tuberculosis in Greece. In Italy a minimum of nourishing food, milk, cod liver oil would keep thousands alive who otherwise may die.

In China there are only two children's hospitals to care for some 200 million children. Last fall in the famine area of Honan province, children died in the streets and were buried in common ditches. They are dying today in the streets of Shanghai.

In primitive villages in India, children are living on one plate of boiled rice a day.

These are but a few of the spots where the tragic fate of the child victims of the war, who are estimated to number 30 million in the Near and Far East, need the immediate and all-out help of the people of the world.

A staggering amount of money will be needed to do anything like an adequate long-time job of relieving the miserable lot of these children.

It was to raise money for this purpose that the UN approved a plan in March 1947, to set up an United Nations Appeal for Children, aimed at raising $60,000,000 through voluntary contributions from citizens of the various countries.

In the United States, this drive, called the American Overseas Aid—United Nations Appeal for Children, will be launched in February. Everyone who can will be urged to "Give One Day" for the children of the world, in the form of one day's pay or its equivalent in kind.

"Whatever the quarrel between adults," said Aake Ording, executive director of UNAC, "feeding a starving child is a non-controversial matter. The United Nations Appeal for Children has asked all countries to join in a common effort to save the children of the world, to meet the appalling relief needs of millions upon millions of starving infants and children without discrimination because of race, creed, nationality status, or political belief.

"We have opened the door to all nations who wish to cooperate in the Appeal. That door will never be closed. What the peoples of the world give now to sustain life in their next generation will measure their desire to build a strong, human foundation for world's peace."

National Committees for UNAC have already been established in the United States, Finland, New Zealand, Sweden and Greece with many more nations expected to follow shortly. More than 50 nations will take part in the drive.

In addition to UNAC, there is another United Nations agency working to help needy children of war-torn countries. This is the International Children's Emergency Fund (ICEF) which functions through contributions received mainly from governments. It represents all UN Members (also Switzerland) and is administered by a 26-nation board.

ICEF is working on long range programs to help children and is mainly a relief distributing agency, whereas UNAC has the one goal of raising funds through a world-wide campaign.

CIO Will Help World's Children

The Natl. CIO Community Services Committee is a member agency of the AOA-UNAC which includes the major voluntary American agencies for foreign relief.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and CSC Chairman Irving Abramson are on the AOA Natl. Board of Directors, and John Brophy, director of CIO Councils, is a member of the AOA Allocation Committee.

CSC Chairman Abramson is also a member of the Intl. Advisory Committee, as a representative of the World Federation of Trade Unions to which the CIO belongs. CSC Natl. Director Leo Perils, who is a special adviser to UNAC, returned recently from a fact-finding tour in eight key European countries.

CIO unions and members wishing to help in the campaign to aid the world's children are requested to write Miss Annette Doyle, CIO-CSC representative, at the American Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children, 39 Broadway, New York 6, N. Y.

Live In Hut: These Greek children (above), whose home was destroyed by the Germans, live in a hut they built themselves out of branches and straw. Their pig, in the foreground, starved to death. Like the little Albanian girl (below), thousands of European children are clad in rags. The CIO Community Services Committee is planning to spend $1,000,000 for relief, health and welfare projects in 12 countries, Austria, China, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Holland, Italy, Japan, Poland and the Philippines. The CIO-CSC is a member of the UN Appeal for Children.

THE President of the U. S., the CIO, high churchmen and the Roosevelt family joined last week to honor the memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

The occasion was the unveiling of the FDR plaque in the Children's Wing of Georgetown University Hospital, Washington, to which the CIO has contributed $55,000—largest single contribution to the hospital's drive.

Participating were Pres. Truman, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the U. S.; the Very Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, S. J., president of the University; the Rev. Paul A. McNally, S. J., dean of Georgetown Medical School and regent of the University's medical center, and Elliott Roosevelt, son of the late President.

All the speakers lauded the CIO for its contribution to the wing. All hailed Pres. Roosevelt's work for children and peace of the world.

The hospital, which practices no discrimination in the admission and care of patients, is under the supervision of the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth, Ky.

THE ceremony was attended by invited guests, whose number was limited to the space available. Present were Government officials, labor leaders, friends of the hospital, members of the hospital and medical school staffs, priests, nuns, patients, interns, nurses, probationers, and other hospital employes.

ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT was accompanied by his wife, the former Faye Emerson.

Excerpts from remarks by the speakers:

Truman: "Pres. Roosevelt helped and brought hope to many a small child that otherwise would not have had it in the Warm Springs Foundation. I am sure this hospital will have the same effect.

"What we are trying to do now is to mobilize the moral forces of the world for the welfare and peace of the world. This is a contribution to that very motive which was inspired by Franklin D. Roosevelt when he was alive. We must bring the children up in that moral atmosphere which will make a better world."

Murray: "Franklin Delano Roosevelt was truly the good neighbor to all of us; he was indeed the good neighbor to people and their children everywhere. His own adversities which might have narrowed his vision only broadened his view.

"To this department will come the little children in whose hands rests the future destiny of our nation. They will come here in pain and in distress, and we hope it will please God in His infinite mercy to send them forth again, strengthened in body and inspired in soul, to carry on the work that lies ahead. The skills of the doctors and nurses, the noble example set them here by these good priests and sisters, and lastly the inspiration in the example of President Roosevelt will stand to their encouragement.

"THERE must be an end to the prejudices and hatreds which have plunged the world into its present grave crisis. But it is not enough that we preach; we must also practice. Prejudices arise out of the discriminations that become apparent when hunger and cold and nakedness are the lot of so many human beings."

Archbishop Cicognani: "At a time when the needy of the world look to America for charity, the dedication of this wing gives encouragement, for it proves this virtue is prominent in the hearts of Americans."

Father Gorman: Traced the history of the old Georgetown Hospital and reminded his listeners that Pres. Roosevelt had, in 1944, signed the legislation which provided a grant for construction of the new hospital. Georgetown, he said, had started a campaign, which is still on, to collect the 30% of the costs which the University was to put up.

The CIO, he declared, had made a "generous" contribution, which represented five cents each from 1,100,000 of its members.

Elliott Roosevelt: "I wish to extend the regrets of my mother (Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt) who had to leave two days ago for a conference at Geneva of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights.

FATHER McNALLY acted as master of ceremonies.

After the ceremony Sylvia Altman played the National Anthem.

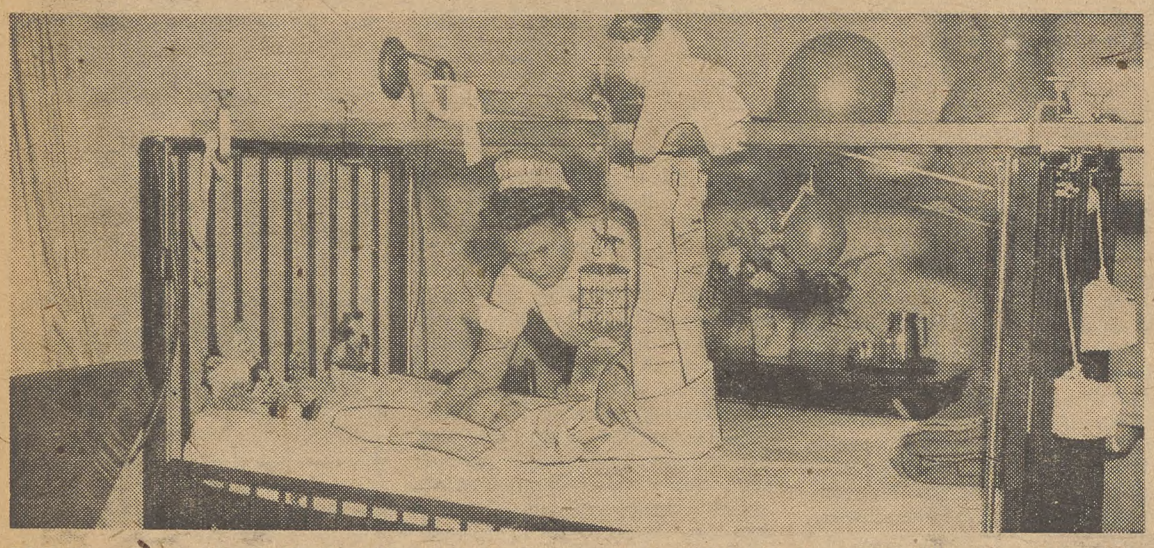
Truman then visited three hospital patients, walking to their rooms through corridors lined with cheering patients.

He visited Sharon Meenahan, 3, suffering from fractures of both legs, the pelvis and her skull; Charles Corte, Acme Newspictures photographer, who had just undergone an operation, and William Donaldson, superintendent of the Senate Press Gallery, also a surgery patient.

Corte, a veteran of the battlefields of Europe, is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Truman Wearing Old School Tie

Pres. Truman could have been mistaken for a Georgetown U. alumnus at the hospital ceremonies. The reason: he wore Georgetown's colors, the blue and gray, during his visit.



Aid for her: Nurse Marian Peters looks to the needs of Sharon Meenahan, 3, patient in the Georgetown Hospital. Sharon suffered fractures of both legs, pelvis and skull in an auto accident. Last week, at the unveiling of the F. D. R. Memorial plaque, she was told that Pres. Truman would visit her. When the President came into her room, her mother, Mrs. M. Frank Meenahan, said: "Here's the President." Sharon, apparently having misunderstood the original statement, asked: "Where's the present?" Mrs. Meenahan apologized, saying Sharon had apparently not recognized the President. He said wistfully: "I wish a lot of others didn't." Next day, he mailed Sharon a Mother Goose book, inclosing a note which said: "Here is that present you thought you were getting yesterday. Get well in a hurry. Best wishes to you. Harry S. Truman." Nurses reported Sharon was completely happy and now a real Truman fan. She is making rapid recovery.

Ready to serve: Members of the staff of Georgetown University Hospital, to which the CIO has donated $55,000 for the Children's Wing, prepare to deliver lunch to the patients. Left to right are: Bonetia Hager, Frances Curran, Meredith Crouch, Lydia West and Natalie Gerace. The equipment in the serving kitchen is new, of the most modern type. The hospital does not discriminate against any person in admission or treatment of patients. Capacity of the hospital is more than 400 patients.

Ask Political Unity in Md.

THE Maryland-D. C. CIO Council, in convention at Baltimore recently, issued a call to the AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods for united political action in 1948.

The same emphasis on political activity sounded by the 200 delegates ran throughout the principal addresses given by CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood, CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman and PAC Assistant Director Tilford Dudley.

Pressman, in urging organization of a "PAC that means something" said that his greatest fear was that there might be in labor's ranks "an absence of understanding of the action taken against them, or apathy among union members, or disunity among our unions."

Maryland-D. C. CIO members will support independent candidates in the primaries whenever they consider themselves confronted with a choice between "Tweedledum and Tweedledee," the resolution on PAC stated.

After endorsing the national CIO resolution on "Protection of Democracy" and urging active presidential and congressional support for the President's Committee on Civil Rights, the resolution on civil rights sought:

Enactment of a federal anti-lynching law; repeal of the poll tax; federal, state and District of Columbia laws prohibiting restrictive covenants; equal pay for equal work by women.

Abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee; repeal of the T-H Law; a permanent national FEPC; cancellation of the President's Loyalty Order N. 9835; outlawing of segregation in Maryland and D. C.

The council endorsed the national CIO resolution on foreign policy.

Operation Dixie Shuns NLRB, And Is Winning Elections

BY ED STONE

SINCE Aug. 22, when the Natl. Labor Relations Board became bogged down with red tape as a result of the Taft-Hartley Act, the CIO Organizing Committee has been organizing plants and building unions without the help of the NLRB.

Management is fast awakening to the fact that the Taft-Hartley Act is not conducive to good employer-employe relationships. But as Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, put it, "The beautiful thing about the new procedure is that we are building unions, not merely winning elections."

Even the international unions that are qualified under the Taft-Hartley Act are fighting shy of NLRB elections. It takes too long, calls for the services of too many attorneys and complicates what should be a fairly simple proposition—an expression from the workers whether they do or do not want union representation.

Here is the way the new procedure works. After sufficient members are signed up in a plant, a local is formed and a committee from the new local calls upon management and announces a union has been formed. The committee requests that negotiations be started to work out a contract covering wages, hours of employment and working conditions.

If management questions that a majority of the employes are members of the union, it is suggested that a card-check or election be conducted by some local person or group—the Chamber of Commerce, a judge, minister, the American Arbitration Association —anyone but the NLRB.

A few examples:

A local minister conducted the balloting for workers at the Fountain Converting Works at Martinsville, Va., where the Textile Workers Union won 154 to 54.

In Elizabeth, N. C., the Recorders Court judge supervised the election which the Woodworkers won 187 to 6 at the Mengle Company.

Six representatives named by the company and six from the union were in charge of the election at Daly Bros. Shoe Co., in Harriston, Va. The United Shoe Workers won 149 to 17.

In some instances a strike or threat of a strike is necessary to convince management that employes are serious about working a union. Such was the case in Greenville, Tenn., where the workers at Industrial Minerals & Chemical Co., had to go on strike to force the company to consent to an election. The election was supervised by the Greene County Court Clerk and resulted in a unanimous vote for the United Chemical Workers.

In Dalton, Ga., a firm of certified public accountants checked the union membership cards against the payroll at Whitfield Spinning Co. It was revealed that more than 90% of the workers were members of the Textile Workers Union.

In Miami, Fla., the Transport Workers had to resort to short strikes before the Orange State Oil Co. and the City Ice & Fuel Co. would consent to a card check. TWU won at both plants and, shortly afterward, both firms recognized the union in their Fort Lauderdale, Hollywood and West Palm Beach plants following a card check.

And so it goes in the 11 states in which the Southern drive is being conducted. While the NLRB is being used in some instances, the quickest and surest results are obtained where management and the union agree to a red-tape-free expression from the workers, then sit down across the conference table for true collective bargaining.

Texas Boss Says, 'Union Fine Thing'

With approximately 80% of the workers at Zero Plate Co. at Dallas, Texas, signed up as members of the CIO Woodworkers Union, Joseph Sayen, CIO Organizing Committee staff member, called on management to discuss union recognition.

The company president, J. S. Booth, greeted Sayen with, "Yes, the union is a fine thing. It is the one thing that stands against peonage and Communism." He immediately signed forms calling for an NLRB election.

Sayen then went through the shop and picked up cards from the remaining 20% of the workers. As Sayen was leaving, Booth called him back. "I want to stamp all my products with the union label," he said, "Okay?"

CIO Successful With Blood Bank

A free blood bank set up by CIO unionists in Waterloo, Ia., a year ago to provide emergency aid for their own members, has since become a full-grown community project praised and backed by local hospitals, doctors, nurses and employers.

More than 2,000 CIO members have donated blood to the CIO sponsored Black Hawk County Free Blood Bank.

B. G. Bogardus, president of the Black Hawk CIO Council, credited a committee composed of five members of Packinghouse Local 46 and Auto Workers Local 838 with giving freely of their time to aid the project.

Whitney Forgives Pres. Truman

If Pres. Truman is up for re-election in 1948, "I will give him my support," Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen (unaffiliated) told reporters at Omaha, Neb., Dec. 1.

"My good, Christian parents taught me it is a good thing to forgive and forget," Whitney said. He was referring to his condemnation of the President in May 1946 after White House intervention broke a two-day nationwide rail strike. At that time Whitney said he would campaign to defeat Truman in 1948.

PAC Packages

Val Reuther, veteran labor leader and father of UAW Pres. Walter Reuther: "Organize your power as citizens—the power of the ballot. The ballot has been called the weapon that executes a free man's will. It can make and unmake Presidents, Congressmen and courts. It can abolish unjust laws and return to private life those who enacted such laws.

"Only when the workers, wherever employed, know how to use their ballot intelligently, will you ever be able to realize the dreams and the rights that are yours."

Dolan Goes To MMSW

Graham Dolan, who was editor of the Denver Challenge, lately suspended, is back with the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in Chicago as international education director. Dolan edited The Union, Mine Mill's international journal, before he joined the navy in 1944.

Oil Workers Win 20c Hike

A THREATENED strike by 8,000 CIO Oil Workers in California was averted last week when Standard Oil Co. set a statewide pattern by offering concessions which will raise basic pay rates 20c an hour by Jan. 15.

The Standard Oil settlement also staved off strikes at Shell Oil, Shell Chemical Corp. and the Tide Water-Associated refinery in Avon, Calif., all of which were expected to follow the pattern set by Standard.

The agreement provides a 5c hourly increase retroactice to Oct. 1, with additional 2½c rises Dec. 15 and again Jan. 15. In addition the union won a struggle for conversion of a 10c cost-of-living bonus into the basic wage rate. The actual take-home-pay gain totaled 9.8c, since the cost-of-living payment was reduced .2c when incorporated into the basic wage.

The Oil workers won a 10c hourly raise in February. The recent gains bring the California employes on a par with the union's national wage standard.

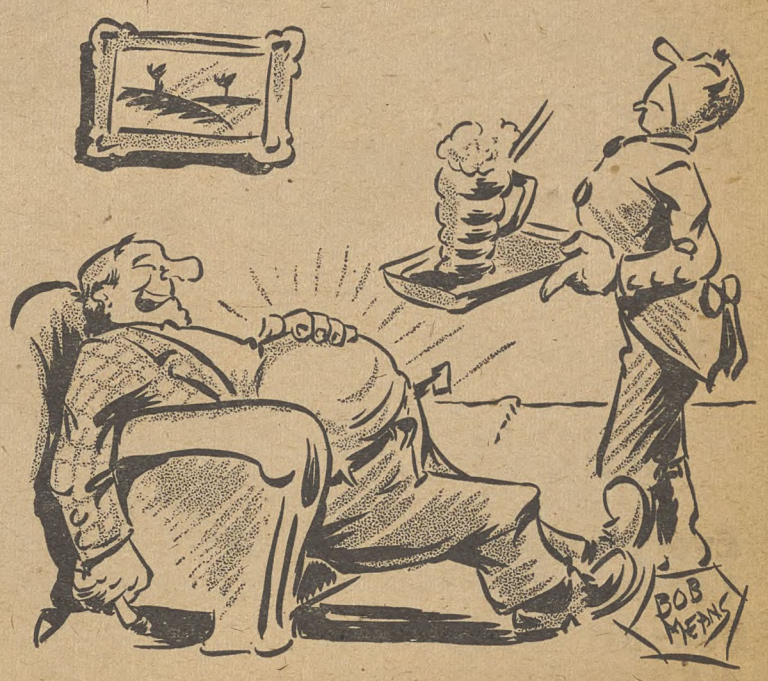
Specialist Assails Un-American Quiz

A University of Chicago specialist has publicly questioned the constitutionality of Congressional investigating committees and charged that the House un-American activities committee has "bullied and browbeaten and cruelly maligned" innocent citizens.

Dr. Jerome Kerwin of the Walgreen Foundation for the Study of American Institutions, addressing a Washington forum, elaborated on a charge that the un-American committee is little concerned over minority rights.

He said: "They usually are not worried about pressing problems of racial hatreds, anti-Semitism, and anti-Catholic bigotry. As a matter of fact, concern for the Negro is frequently taken as evidence of communism."

Rev. Dr. James Manger, procurator of Catholic University, introduced Kerwin.



"I believe in the food conservation program."

CALL OUT TROOPS IN ARIZ. STRIKE

ATTEMPTS by the Growers' & Shippers Association to usher strikebreakers through picket lines of 2,000 striking lettuce packers in Phoenix, Ariz., flared into violence and a proclamation of martial law last week. The strikers are members of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers.

Gov. Sidney P. Osborn ordered national guardsmen to be on duty after Sheriff Cal Boies warned that he would deputize 300 men unless the troops were mobilized.

Two pickets have been stabbed FTA officials reported, and a lettuce packing shed has been set on fire. The union said it had nothing to do with the fire.

The workers walked out 19 days ago when the employers rejected a union demand for 17½c hourly wage increases. The shippers also were insistent on a strong no-strike clause, which, the union said, could be used under the Taft-Hartley Act to exact union-crippling damages for wildcat strikes.

The lettuce packers have held an FTA contract for the past 11 years, the union said.

The union reported that efforts to persuade Mexican field workers, mainstay of the employer's strikebreaking efforts, to respect lines have been succeeding. Special leaflets in Spanish have been distributed among the Mexican workers.

The walkout has virtually halted the packing of lettuce in 34 sheds affected at the height of the season, FTA claimed. About 85% of the nation's lettuce is shipped from these sheds.

MARRINER ECCLES

Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board told the Joint Committee on the Economic Report: "Business profits after taxes are more than double what they were in any prewar year, and therefore business should hold prices down or should reduce them, in accordance with what would be reasonable earnings."

CIO Tells Cops Of Democracy

Despite police interference, organization of the employes of the Frost Lumber Co. at Nacogdoches, Texas, has been completed and the NLRB is now processing a petition filed in behalf of the CIO Woodworkers Union, according to Paul C. White, CIO Organizing Committee staff member.

Every stumbling block has been thrown in the path of the campaign to bring unionization to the Frost workers who live within easy hearing distance of the fog-horn voice of Martin Dies of Lufkin, 19 miles down the "Dogwood Trail" from Nacogdoches.

Complaints were filed with the civil rights section of the U. S. Department of Justice charging that local police officers "intimidated" and "threatened" the deacons of a local church where organizing meetings were being held.

Robert Oliver, CIO state director, turned the tables on a group of law enforcement officers who had gathered at the entrance of the union meeting place.

Director Oliver invited the 15 policemen and sheriff's deputies into the meeting hall, then explained to the assembly that "these men are here to see that your rights of free speech and free assembly are not violated," and continued with a lecture on democracy. After the meeting several of the law officers sought Oliver out to shake his hand.

Hails Achievements Of Labor Schools

A study of workers education in the South made by Mary Lawrence of the Highlander Folk School, former education director for the Tennessee CIO Council, states that unions, labor-management relations, and relations between people of different races and religions have been improved by the programs observed.

Much of the study, made on a Rosenwald grant, is devoted to teaching methods, including use of films, and dramatic presentations. The discussion rather than the lecture is the most effective educational method for workers, the study says.

Win $4 Increase

Striking Hecht Dept. Store employes in New York last week returned to work with a $4 weekly increase, a company-financed sick benefit fund, and other benefits.

The CIO Retail & Wholesale Employes' strike had lasted 11½ weeks.

CIO Asks AFL For Common Fight on T-H

JOINT CIO-AFL action "in an effort to defeat the attacks now being directed against" organized labor through the Taft-Hartley Act is suggested by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a letter to AFL Pres. William Green.

Murray said in part:

"The Taft-Hartley Act has been in full effect a little over three months. Events which have already transpired are eloquent proof in support of the predictions made by labor. For example:

"1) The general counsel of the NLRB has practically authorized employers to engage 'investigators' who would ascertain whether unions are engaging in unfair labor practices within the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. This simply means the reinstitution of the abuse of employer-paid spies within labor unions.

"2) The brutal law of injunctions in labor disputes has been completely revived by the NLRB and its general counsel.

"3) Several complaints that had been issued by the NLRB against both AFL and CIO unions reveal an interpretation of the T-H Act which would practically eliminate the right of workers to strike even though engaged in a dispute involving basic economic demands.

"On behalf of the CIO, I convey to you the urgent desire of our affiliated unions and their members to join with the AFL for the purpose of taking immediate steps to defeat the attempts of the reactionary forces to undermine and weaken the labor movement."

Ask 85c Base Pay On U. S. Contracts

The CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers last week petitioned Secy. of Labor Schwellenbach for an amendment to the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act to provide a minimum wage of 85c an hour for all workers in the uniform and clothing industry employed on government contracts. The request was submitted by ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

In supporting its petition, the union points out that, with the recent 12c an hour increase, effective December 15, the average hourly earnings covered by Amalgamated agreements will reach $1.50 in contrast to the present 60c an hour minimum fixed in 1941 under the Walsh-Healey Act.

While the Walsh-Healey minimum has remained static during the past six years, union workers in the clothing industry have obtained five pay increases in that time, totalling 58c an hour.

Pointing out that the Public Contracts Act requires workers on government contracts to be paid not less than the prevailing minimum wages for persons employed on similar work, the Amalgamated insisted that an 85c an an hour minimum, under the act, would be extremely modest.

It is safe to conclude, the union continues, that the proposed new minimum would represent no increase in the cost to the United States, since the slight increase in the total wage bill—one-half of 1%—could be absorbed by the government contractors.

EDWARD D. HOLLANDER

Lester S. Kellogg will be succeeded by Hollander as chief of the Prices and Cost of Living Branch of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Kellogg will resign shortly after Jan. 1 to take a job in private industry. Hollander has been with BLS since 1946.

Sugar Workers Strike in La.

CIO Packinghouse Workers at the Henderson Sugar Refinery, New Orleans, La., struck last week following company refusal to grant raises corresponding to the 10½c an hour won at the American Sugar Refining Co.

Throughout the eight weeks of negotiations, the union said, the company abided by its first proposal of 5c an hour or 4c with five paid holidays.

The union's demand that wages and work conditions at Henderson be raised to the American Sugar level would necessitate an 11c increase, because American's rates were a half-cent higher before the recent raise.

Prior to the strike the company had rejected a union offer to arbitrate the demands. Outcome of the walkout will affect wage rates in eight other Louisiana sugar refineries.

UAW Selects Montgomery And Sifton

PRES. Walter P. Reuther, of the CIO Auto Workers, has announced the reorganization of UAW Washington office. The UAW has also made a number of other changes.

Donald Montgomery, who has been employed by the international union since 1943 as Consumers Counsel, is now chief of the Washington office.

Paul Sifton has been appointed national legislative representative.

Montgomery will have overall responsibility for relations with the executive and legislative branches of the government and for keeping both the Union and governmental agencies informed of developments of mutual concern.

After 10 years as a newspaperman with the United Press and the New York World, Paul Sifton received a civil service appointment as Labor Publication Editor in the New York State Department of Labor. In 1938, Sifton became Deputy Wage-Hour Administrator in the U. S. Department of Labor as Labor Publications Editor. He was instrumental in defeating the Barden amendments which would have removed 2,000,000 workers from the protection of various sections of the Act.

Since 1942, Sifton has represented the National Farmers Union and various non-profit organizations as legislative and public relations director and consultant.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The telephone organizing drive continues to roll along. Richard W. Long, President of the Telephone Clerks of Illinois, advises that more than a majority of members of that union have signed cards designating CIO as bargaining agent. This will add something like 2800 more members to the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee-CIO. Congratulations to Brother Long and his associates!

In Maryland, a run-off vote was taken and the CIO came out with a splendid victory, which brings 4500 more members into TWOC-CIO.

Greater interest has been manifested everywhere among the telephone workers and at the beginning of the New Year several important drives will be launched. Congratulations to Margaret Weiss, General Chairman of the Maryland Telephone Traffic Union and a member of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee-CIO and Executive Board, and her staff.

The CIO has launched its campaign for wage increases. At a meeting of the Vice Presidents held Dec. 2 in Washington, action was taken setting forth CIO's position. The constant rise in the cost of living and the unwarranted excessive profits being made by many corporations makes action of CIO imperative in order to lighten the unbearable burden imposed upon the people of the nation. The Taft-Hartley Act was passed for the purpose of permitting these profiteers to go unchallenged. The people of America are awakened to what has happened and the CIO will lead the way in bringing these facts to them so that the Tafts and the Hartleys can be repudiated and the interest of the people enhanced.

George Brown, Director of Organization, International Woodworkers of America, Portland, Oregon, advises: "ZERO PLATE COMPANY, DALLAS, TEXAS, IWA 14, NO UNION 11."

J. D. Harris, Jr., CIO Field Representative, Memphis, Tenn., reports: "Won election in the Louis B. Stein Bag Co., 12 votes for TWUA-CIO, 10 against. This company took advantage of its rights under the Taft-Hartley Law and put on a campaign to keep the union out. This is the second attempt the CIO has made to get this plant, having lost the first election."

Regional Director G. George DeNucci, Columbus, Ohio, advises: Stone & Allied Products won recognition at two plants located in McDermott, Ohio—Taylor & Sons Stone Co., and Waller Bros. Stone Co., involving about 200 workers. Intl. Rep. Lewis Lowry was in charge with Rep. Stahlbird assisting.

Strong As Ever

BRITISH LABOR WINS CRUCIAL ELECTION

BRITAIN'S Churchillian Conservatives were so dumbfounded it took two days before they could say anything other than "egad."

They had fully expected to carry the Gravesend bye-election. And, many Americans expected them to, since the U. S. press is usually lulled into a false sense of hypnotism by Winston Churchill.

But, when the people had voted and the ballots had been counted, Labor had retained the Gravesend seat (A British seat is equivalent to an American Congressional District). This was all the more remarkable since:

(a) Labor had lost ground heavily in the recent municipal elections;

(b) Gravesend had gone Labor only twice before in its history: 20 years ago and in the Labor landslide of 1945;

(c) The bye-election came as the result of a scandal in which the holder of the seat, a Laborite, was expelled from Commons.

Labor's victor in the bye-election was Sir Richard Acland, who defeated Tory Frank Taylor by a reduced majority of 24,692 to 23,017.

Two days later, two other bye-elections were held, Labor winning and retaining a seat in Scotland by just about the 1945 majority and the Tories taking one in Yorkshire by their usual lead.

The Laborite Daily Herald of London sent A. J. McWhinnie to Kent. He wrote a glowing account of a meeting at which Tory Taylor was speaking:

"The miners have come up—miners of the Kent fields, with accents from every field in Britain, forced to the newer fields of Kent by destitution and malnutrition of the distressed areas.

"'What's this you've been saying about the mines?' two miners asked Taylor at a meeting. They were Les Magness and Albert Jenkins, miners for 30 years.

"Taylor had claimed that nationalization of mines had failed, the Daily Herald reporter said:

"The two miners declared nationalism was succeeding. 'Why,' cried Magness, 'did Toryism allow the coal-owners to murder my village? The worst form of murder is murder by slow starvation. That's what Toryism means to us in the mining valleys.'"

After the election the Conservative candidate said; "The electors are still misled by claims of the other side that the Conservatives do not stand for a fair share for all."

The New York Times correspondent remarked: "There has been no swing from Labor in Britain."

P. S.—The Gravesend election was held on Acland's 41st birthday.

Elect John Clark Mine, Mill Head

John Clark of Great Falls, Mont., was named president of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in a membership referendum Oct. 6, the union's canvassing committee has announced.

Clark, formerly the union's secretary-treasurer, polled 34,380 votes to 7,439 for his opponent, George Knott.

Reid Robinson, a former president, won the eastern vice presidency with 25,129 votes as against 17,342 for the incumbent, Homer Wilson. Wesley Madill polled 20,863 votes in a four-cornered race for western vice president, in which his closest opponent, Ray Lee, polled 6,649 votes.

Maurice Travis, outgoing president, was named secretary-treasurer over Walter Gilmore by a vote of 26,097 to 15,323.

Executive board members are: William Mason, Leonard Douglas, Chase Powers, Orville Larson, Charles Wilson, Robert Carlin, Jesse Van Camp, Al Pezzati and Ken Eckert. The new executives will take office Jan. 1 for terms of two years.

Paris Meeting: Leon Jouhaux, left, secy. general of the French General Confederation of Labor and a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions executive bureau, attends a Paris press conference with CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey who presented the CIO's views on foreign aid to the WFTU bureau.

Tel Aviv Celebration: The age-old aspirations of the Jewish people for a homeland were realized last week when the United Nations voted to partition Palestine into Jewish and Arab states. This picture was taken at Tel Aviv, Jewish city in Palestine, when the radio reported the news. The CIO convention at Boston recommended the adoption of the majority report of the UN commission to Palestine which called for partition.

Stopgap Aid Vote Near

SOMETIME this week, the House of Representatives will get around to voting its version of the stopgap foreign bill.

Late last week, indication were that the bill might be considerably different than the Senate version, adopted, 83-6, early last week. But, there were some long-shot bettors. They thought House members, anxious to get along home for Christmas might say oh, heck, we'll eventually have to adopt a conference bill that will follow the Senate lines, so why not do it now?

Congressmen from the conservative side who talked at all were burned up over the CIO's wage increase policy. But few indicated they would do anything immediately about controlling inflation.

The state of Congress is best typified by an article in last Sunday's New York Times. In the article, the Times' leading political writer, Arthur Krock, said:

"The group of seasoned Republican politicians who hoped secretly their party would not elect a majority of the Senate in 1946, but would carry the House only, must feel that events are making very clear the reasons for their limited aspiration."

Krock says the Republicans, through long years in the minority, were unprepared for responsibility. "This was demonstrated in the regular session; it is being demonstrated now; more proof will be furnished in the second regular term."

Murray Endorses Yule Seal Sale

Praising the tuberculosis control work of the 3,000 associations affiliated with the National Tuberculosis Association, CIO Pres. Philip Murray has urged labor to support the 41st annual Christmas Seal Sale of the associations.

World's Jews Greet Palestine Partition

AS Jews throughout the world rejoiced at the realization of a 2000 year-old-dream, some 150,000 almost dispairing Jewish displaced persons in Germany saw visions of a new life in a new homeland take shape—free of the reminder of Hitler's incinerators and the tortured remains of six million other Jews.

Last week, by a vote of 33 to 13, the United Nations General Assembly created two independent states in Palestine—one Jewish, one Arab—and converted ancient Jerusalem into an international city.

Although the UN still has the major problem of assuring stability in the turbulent area and of making partitioning a fact, the move was generally hailed as a great achievement by the world organization and an indication that it was finding its legs For the first time on any major issue both the United States and the Soviet Union said "yes."

The jubilance of Jews and their well-wishers throughout the world was matched by mounting Moslem resentment and anger. On many streets where Jews had danced the "Hora" in celebration the night before, a Jew or Arab lay dead the next day as a three-day Arab protest strike burst into violence.

THE British police force was reported insufficient to cope with the sporadic attacks, the pillaging, arson, looting, stoning, stabbing and shooting which spread throughout the Jewish areas and echoed in Egypt, Syria and Lebanon, where demonstrators shouted: "Down with the United States," or "The Jews are the dogs of the world." British troops stood watchfully by, under orders, as Jews were attacked and stores smashed.

Although a Moslem holy war was declared by the holy men of al-Azhar University in Cairo, Egypt—described by the religious leaders as "an unconditional obligation" neglect of which is considered a sin—Dr. Chaim Weizmann, world Zionist head. predicted that no major conflagration would develop.

Great Britain has announced that it will drop its mandate over the Holy Land May 1, and will be responsible for law and order until then. The last of her 80,000 troops are scheduled to be withdrawn by Oct. 1, when Jewish statehood is to become a fact.

THE partition plan had the support of the CIO, which at its Boston Convention adoption of the majority report of the UN Commission on Palestine and "speedy admission to Palestine" of 100,000 Jewish displaced persons in Germany.

Emigration of these displaced persons is expected to begin Feb. 1, according to Judge Louis B. Leventhal, adviser on Jewish affairs to Gen. Lucius B. Clay. U. S. Military Governor of Germany. A later report from the British foreign office however, stated that Britain would continue to bar immigration to Palestine until she relinquished her mandate on May 1.

First on the list of migrants will be the 4400 passengers of the steamer Exodus, who made their way to Palestinian shores, only to be sent back to Germany under British escort. Next in line are orphans and the crippled. The total number of Jewish displaced persons can be absorbed in the first two years of Jewish statehood, Leventhal estimated.

Jewish reaction to the new state was summed up by Dr. Emanual Neumann, American Zionist head, who declared: "We will pour out our energies, our substance and our devotion as a humble offering toward the realization of Israel's dream."

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

Wage Hour Act:

SAME OLD MELODY: 'WRECK THE LAW'

INDUSTRY is packing the wage and hour hearings held by the administrator's panel just as it did those held by the McConnell sub-committee.

Last week, of 133 appearances listed at the sessions, only 10 were from unions. It was pretty obvious this time that industry was out to emasculate—or even murder—the executive and professional or administrative provisions of the law.

At the same time, a breath of fresh air blew in the labor-busting atmosphere of Washington. A. J. Altmeyer, Commissioner of Social Security, declared that "even though we achieve the goal of full employment and full production, it is still necessary in a system of private enterprise such as ours to have a program designed to eliminate want, because the working people of this country will still be confronted with the great economic hazards of sickness, physical disability, want, old age and death as well as intermittent unemployment."

THE wage-hour hearings directly and indirectly brought these from industry spokesmen in and out of Congress:

Sen. Homer Capehart (R., Ind.), radio manufacturer: will introduce legislation to suspend the 40-hour week in favor of a straight time 44-hour week.

Robert Lee Boyd, Associated Tobacco Manufacturers: wanted $250 a month to be the dividing line between covered and exempt employes.

James R. Tritchler, Standard Oil of Ohio (Sohio): He heckled a union spokesman, saying that unions were attempting to increase the Fair Labor Standards (wage-hour) Act's dividing line so that they could increase the wages of those below the line.

Walter E. de Bruin, Goodyear Rubber: Change the law, which now says the employer must prove an exemption is legitimate, so that the employe would have to prove he is non-exempt.

WITNESSES before the McConnell sub-committee had urged such a variety of things as outright repeal of the law, end of the 40-hour week, with 44, 48 or even more substituted, no change in the 40c minimum and other proposals.

Union appearances last week at the wage-hour hearing included the CIO Electrical Workers, and the AFL Garment Workers. Frieda Miller, Women's Bureau Director, Labor Dept., defended the 40-hour week and urged an upping of the dividing line.

THIS week, the heavy industries and textiles will be heard; Dec. 16-17, extractive industries (coal, oil, sand, gravel); Dec. 18, transportation; Jan. 9, professional groups; Jan. 13, publications; Jan. 14, farm products-processors; Jan. 15, banking and insurance.

Commissioner Altmeyer urged improvements in social insurance, public assistance, old-age and survivors' insurance system, liberalization of benefits, benefits for permanent total disability, extension of coverage to agricultural labor and domestic service, employes of nonprofit organizations, public employment, railroad employes and the self-employed, including farmers and small businessmen.

Flour For Europe: The West Virginia CIO Council recently donated a carload of flour for the Friendship Train, which sped from coast to coast to pick up voluntary contributions to combat hunger in Europe. Council Pres. John B. Easton is shown presenting the check for the purchase of the flour to S. Grover Smith, Sr., chairman of the citizens' food committee. Standing, left to right, are Don Berger, president of the Kanawha Valley CIO Council; Joe Joy, director District 10, United Chemical Workers; Rex Kildow, field representative of the United Public Workers; Al Zankl, international representative of the CIO; Lloyd Matics and Enoch Rust, vice presidents of the W. Va. Council; Frank A. Knight, Charleston, W. Va., director arrangements for the train. Henry Adkinson, another W. Va. Council vice president, and Harry Colebank, field representative of the CIO. The gifts will reach the needy Europeans before Congress acts on proposed aid.

20 In CIO Win Essay Prizes

THREE CIO members were among the five top winners in the essay contest conducted by the Natl. Committee for the Extension of Labor Education.

Names of the 30 unionists, whose essays on the subject "Why I Am Asking Members of Congress to Vote for the Labor Extension Bill, S. 1390," won awards were announced last week by the Committee.

The third prize, $75, was won by Alvin L. Yetter, Indianapolis, and fourth prize, $50, by Herman R. Barlowe, Tucson, Ariz., both AFL members.

Among the 25 winners of $10 prizes were these 17 CIO members:

Earl E. Davis, Brewery Workers, Davenport, Ia.; Jeannette Galley, Clothing Workers, Americus, Ga.; James M. Gilleogly, Newspaper Guild, New York; Bethel C. Hodges, Auto Workers, Louisville, Ky.; Robert S. Gauron, Retail, Wholesale Employes, Schiller Park, Ill.; T. C. Kelly, Steelworkers, Chicago; Charles Kerman, Auto, Chicago; Charles L. Letson, Textile, Utica, N. Y.; Vada L. Lee, Steelworkers, Phoenix, Ariz.; Max E. LeSage, Textile, So. Lawrence, Mass.; George E. Matych, Auto, No. Muskegon, Mich.; Garineh Narzekian, Hosiery Workers, Philadelphia; Mary Pataky, Textile, Garfield, N. J.; Irving Reier, Clothing, New York; Philip Van Sickle, Steel, New Comerstown, Ohio, and Robert M. Watson, Jr., Clothing, Waco, Ga.

The Labor Extension Bill calls for Federal funds, to be supplemented in each state, for a broad program of information, research and educational services for wage and salary earners, through the cooperation of colleges and universities.

VOTE OAK RIDGE STRIKE, FLAY ATOM COMMISSION

THE bargaining committee of the production employes of Carbide and Carbon Chemical Corp. at Oak Ridge, Tenn., last week was authorized by the unanimous vote of more than 1000 members of the CIO United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers to call a strike unless settlement of current negotiations is reached.

UGCCW Pres. Martin Wagner said that negotiations have been in progress since last Sept. The present contract expires Dec. 9.

He said that principal points in dispute included the failure of management to agree to arbitration of disputed points in the new contract, and to pay sick leave. Martin pointed out that in other contracts with the union sick pay goes as high as 15 weeks.

The strike authorization resolution adopted by Local 288, consisting of employes at the Oak Ridge plant, pointed out that the Atomic Energy Commission, in control of the plant, had in essence wiped its hands of responsibility in the dispute.

The resolution said that the union had been advised by the commission that "where it has delegated atomic energy production to contractors as at Oak Ridge it has no responsibility for settling labor disputes."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, Wagner and other officials of the union met just last week with the commission headed by Chairman David Lilienthal to attempt to iron out the dispute.

Although the CIO union won an election about a year ago at the plant, it was forced again into another NLRB election recently by the AFL and the company. The CIO won by a vote of 1445 to 821 for the AFL.

Cost of UMT: $1842 a Boy

WHAT WOULD it cost the American people in taxes if Universal Military Training were adopted?

How much is now being spent for military purposes?

How do these items compare with the amount being spent for education?

Answers to those questions are given in a statement just issued by the Friends Committee on Natl. Legislation in Washington. It points out that according to estimates of the War Dept., cost of UMT for the first six months for 950,000 would amount to $1,750,000,000 or $1,842 per man.

That is in addition to nearly 10 billion in Goverment funds available to the Army and Navy for the fiscal year ending June 1948, which means about $27 million a day for every day in the year.

Not included in this are $600 million authorized for Army supervised relief in Germany, Japan and Korea; $268 million for military aid to Greece and Turkey, or $212,900,000 for the Coast Guard.

The Friends Committee contrasts these huge sums with the amounts spent for education. Total sum of money spent by Federal, state and local agencies on public elementary and secondary school education during the school year 1944-45 was a little more than $2½ billion for some 23 million children or about $125 per child.

Milton Murray To Edit Ship Paper

Milton Murray, former CIO Newspaper Guild president, last week accepted the post of publicity director for the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and editor of the union's national newspaper, the Shipyard Worker. He succeeds Sam Kramer.

Murray, who served three terms as Guild president, was formerly on the staff of PM and the Detroit Times.

TWO PARTIES SPAR OVER ANTI-INFLATION METHODS

FOOD CLUB: Mrs. Ethel Wynd, Washington, D. C., buys groceries from Nick Ferrante, neighborhood grocer. Week before, the items would have cost her $3.56. Last week Ferrante let her have them for $2.34. The reason: Ferrante has set up a co-op club, membership fee $2 weekly. You pay Nick $2 and buy goods at wholesale—34% below retail. Mrs. Wynd used to spend a total of $25 a week on her food bill; under Nick's plan it now costs her $16.50—plus the $2 fee. Nick undersells his chain store competitors. Only catch: you have to buy $18 worth of food before you save on your $2 fee. Ferrante, a former Army mess sergeant, got his idea from a news item about a Philadelphia grocer.

GOP'S PROGRAM OMITS ANY PRICE CONTROL

THE long-awaited GOP answer to inflation came last week. Scorning Truman's request for a 10-point program that includes government price control, the Republicans' answer was voluntary agreements by businessmen with the U. S. for the allocation of scarce materials; higher gold reserves in Federal banks on deposits of member banks and on currency; extension for one year of export and rail transportation controls. (See story on page 2.)

CIO'S Freedom of Press Test Appears Likely

Department of Justice agents are working on a case which may enable the CIO to test the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley ban on use of union newspapers in politics.

G-Men have questioned the president of CIO and editor of the CIO News about use of the newspaper in the July 14 special Congressional election at Baltimore. Details are revealed in "Those G-Men Ask Many Polite Questions." (See story on page 5.)

Avert Strike At Atom Plant

Twenty-eight hundred members of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers win 10 cents hourly wage increases plus wage differentials for the night shifts, averting a strike on Oak Ridge, Tenn., atomic energy plant. The settlement was arranged after CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood conferred with the Atomic Energy Commission differential on the second shift is 10 cents an hour, and 15 cents an hour on the third shift. See Story on Page 8.

Win 10% Hike

Wage increases of 10% for 30,000 New England cotton mill workers were won last week by the CIO Textile Workers. The new increase will add $6,600,000 to the annual income of the employes involved, the union stated. The agreement also provided a sixth paid holiday and improvement in company-paid insurance. Minimum wage in the mills is raised from 88c to 97c an hour by the new gains. The terms will go into effect Jan. 5. The union is also seeking 20c hourly raises for 80,000 northern woolen and worsted workers and 15c an hour for northern rayon employes.

Girl CIO Aide Back As Reporter After Newspaper Guild Protest

Toledo Blade had demoted Eleanor Coakley (right), ex-vice president of CIO Newspaper Guild, after she had taken post as recording secretary of Toledo CIO Industrial Union Council. NLRB field examiner suggests a settlement agreed to by Guild and Paul Block, publisher of the Blade. Paper says it acted to promote harmonious relations with employes. Miss Coakley, retiring president of her local, had filed personal NLRB charges in conformance with ANG's policy of using NLRB sparingly.

SANTA CLAUS IS COMING TO TOWN!

Denham Hoisted On Own Petard

ROBERT N. Denham recently boasted, "I haven't been wrong so far."

Late last week, a Natl. Labor Relations Board trial examiner gave evidence—if any evidence were really needed—that even Robert N. Denham can be wrong.

It all grew out of a case involving the CIO Shoe Workers. The union's Huntington, W. Va., members were on strike against the Perry Norvell Co., of that town.

A complaint issued by Denham in his capacity as general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, accused the Shoe Union and the Perry-Norvell Committee, set up to aid the strike, of (a) calling the walkout to force the company to violate its contract with the AFL Shoe Workers; (b) that the union and the committee sought to restrain employes of the company, in violation of the Taft-Hartley law, by depriving them of representation by the AFL; of continuing terms of the AFL contract; of attempting to force the company to bargain with the committee, which he said was only a front for the CIO union.

THE trial examiner's report, filed by Horace A. Ruckel, according to a publicity release issued by the NLRB, "found no actual restraint or coercion was established by the attorney representing Denham and that the alleged threats and violence amounted to no more than 'minor classes on the picket line'."

Two footnotes in the intermediate report of the examiner (the report will have the force and effect of a board order if not questioned by any of the parties within 20 days; if it is questioned, the board must consider the issues) are a tipoff to Denham's activities in the case:

THE first, No. 37, on page 19 of the report says: "As the United's (CIO union) brief points out, the bill as originally introduced by Sen. Taft contained a provision in Section 8 (a) (6) and 8 (b) (5) making it an unlawful practice for employes, as well as unions:

"'To violate the terms of a collective bargaining agreement or the terms of an agreement to submit a labor dispute to arbitration; provided: that the board may dismiss any charge made pursuant to this paragraph if the labor organization (employes) has violated the terms of such agreement or has failed to comply with an order of the board.'

"This provision was eliminated from the bill as finally enacted into law. As the United's brief points out, the General Counsel (Denham) has proceeded in such a manner as could be justified only if this bill had been included in the act."

AND, the other footnote was as follows:

Page 20, Note 39: "Counsel's theory as stated here amounts to the concept of a strike as a conspiracy, a concept which has long been obsolete."

Denham was represented in the case by Alba B. Martin and Alan A. Brickner; Harry Sacher represented the CIO union; Carl A. McComas the committee.

The examiner's decision recommended dismissal of the company's charge that the strike was in violation of the T-H act. The strike had begun as the result of the dismissal by Perry Norvell of Pat Tyree and refusal to reinstate him.

The examiner had a few pertinent remarks. "There was no mass picketing," he said. "There was no single instance where an employe seeking to enter the plant was prevented from doing so. There was no assault more serious than a push with shoulder or elbow. On the whole, it would be difficult to find an instance of a strike as peacefully conducted under circumstances as provocative of violence."

GOP, Democrats Battle Over Way To Hold Prices

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

POLITICS as dense as a London fog have enveloped the Congressional battle to hold prices down. Last week the House joined the Senate in writing a preliminary OK on the request for $590 million emergency aid for Europe, and Congressmen turned their attention to the price situation on the home front.

Rep. Wolcott (R., Mich.) led off for the Republicans with a bill about as mild as a bill could be. The Democrats had tossed into the hopper a program covering some of the 10 issues listed by Pres. Truman when he addressed the Congress last month.

The Democratic bill, outlined by Commerce Secretary Averill Harriman to a Senate Judiciary sub-committee, would authorize the rationing of fuel and most foods, and would grant to the President broad powers to buy grains, and ration or allocate other products.

On the other hand, the GOP proposals merely called for extension of export controls and rail transport controls, both of which are due to expire at the end of February; encouragement for voluntary agreements of businessmen with government for handling scarce materials, with the anti-trust laws being pushed aside; and requirement that the Federal Reserve Banks hold larger gold reserves to back up deposits from member banks and currency.

Marriner Eccles, Federal Reserve Board Chairman, snorted that "it doesn't mean a thing" when asked what effect such a requirement would have on the economic situation.

A day after its introduction by Rep. Wolcott, the GOP bill won 14-9 endorsement in the House Banking and Currency Committee, of which the Michigan representative is chairman.

GOP Propoganda

Republicans are planning to streamline its passage through Congress, presumably in the hope of having a talking point when they visit the folks back home after the Congress adjourns on Dec. 19. The regular session will open early in January.

Whether passage of such a mild show of anti-inflation sentiment will register with the public remains to be seen. Government statistics indicate a constantly rising level of prices which will not be halted by oratory or wishful thinking.

Straws in the wind:

● Average rent costs throughout the nation jumped 5% between July and October (under the new, weakened control law). That is five times greater than the rise during the five-year period in which the air-tight wartime rent law was in effect.

● The monthly consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics remained at the same high level in October that it had reached a month earlier.

● Wheat last week was selling for $3.28 a bushel, compared to $2.27 a year ago, and eggs had jumped from 50½c to 64c on the New York wholesale market during the same 12-month period.

● Trade papers are filled with predictions of further retail price increases as a result of recent jumps in wholesale prices on a wide range of consumer items.

WHILE the Democratic anti-inflation bill — presumably the first of a series—was much stronger than the Republican measure, Sec. Harriman said it did not suggest "anything approaching a comprehensive system of controls over materials, products and productive facilities."

Democrats Retreat?

The President's original program on prices caught the Republicans off guard, but in the intervening month Administration officials have seemed to be apologizing for its provisions. Testimony by Harriman, Agriculture Sec. Anderson and Treasury Sec. Snyder has tended to "excuse away" many angles in the President's message.

The program to aid Europe—one of the prime reasons why Congress was called into special session—won approval in the House after a series of weakening amendments had been beaten down. It calls for quick grants to help France, Italy and Austria, with the probability that up to 60 million dollars may be used in an effort to shore up the tottering economy of Chiang-Kai-Shek's Chinese Nationalist government.

After the voice vote in the House, the bill went to a joint Senate-House conference committee for ironing out of minor differences. Debate on the long-run Marshall Plan relief program will be taken up after Congress comes back to Washington early in the new year.

Aid For Vets?

Most of Congress' talk and time has gone into the foreign aid bill. However, Rep. Edith Rogers (R., Mass.), head of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, said there is some chance that three bills to aid ex-Gi's may get approval in the coming week.

Rep. Sam McConnell's group of House Labor Committee members who have been hearing requests from industry for weakening amendments to the Wage-Hour law is due to report in mid-January. CIO unions have been urging a 75c minimum for workers in interstate commerce, and demanding that in other respects the law be strengthened.

Many of the committee members have indicated in their questioning of witnesses that they seem more interested in weakening the Wage-Hour law.

More Hearings

Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.), whose name is on the you-know-what law, told a Natl. Association of Manufacturers group in New York that he would open hearings of the House Labor group on Jan. 19.

Hartley, who sponsored the attack on industry-wide bargaining at the last session of Congress, is anxious to get his pet scheme tacked on to the T-H law. A speaker at the NAM confab on labor relations in New York drew applause when he called for just such a provision.

Housing legislation is also set for high-priority treatment early next year.

Mounting pressure from the veterans' groups for government action has strengthened the position of supporters of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. Housing experts have argued time after time that no solution to the country's scarcity of homes will be possible until the T-E-W bill is written into the law books.

But the real estate lobby is prepared to mount a high-powered campaign against the bill.

On the other hand, efforts to kill rent control (the present law expires in the spring) are fading quickly.

Big increases in evictions, general grousing by tenants, the pressure of living costs and the presence of an election year are making an impression on Congress.

Lewis to Green: 'We Disaffiliate'

"Green: We disaffiliate. Lewis."

That four-word message served as notice last week from John L. Lewis to William Green that the United Mine Workers was withdrawing from the AFL.

Disagreement over the Taft-Hartley Act was given as the principal reason for Lewis' action.

Lewis left the AFL to help form the CIO. In 1942, he withdrew from the CIO. He took his UMW back into the AFL in 1946.

CIVIL LIBERTIES: VERY FEW SIGNS THAT THERE IS MUCH IMPROVEMENT

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

. . . to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men . . ."

IN this land of ours last week, there were a few—a very few—signs that there were moves towards "securing these rights"—civil liberties.

The Freedom Train was in the South—and only two cities, Hattiesburg, Miss., and Memphis, Tenn., refused to agree to the conditions on which the train would stop in their cities. The conditions: no segregation.

And, a few weeks before, Washington saw something it had never seen before. Americans desiring to see their nation's precious documents were admitted to the Freedom Train in Union Station without any discrimination as to race, creed, color or national origin. But that was about the only place in Washington where there was no discrimination.

(President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights, in its report, "To Secure These Rights", said of Washington; "The District of Columbia should symbolize to our own citizens and to the people of all countries our great traditions of civil liberty. Instead, it is a graphic illustration of the failure of democracy.")

Also, last week, civil rights prevailed when the Toledo, O., Blade agreed to the demand of the CIO Newspaper Guild that Eleanor Coakley, former national vice-president of the Guild, be restored to her job as a reporter. Upon taking the position of recording secretary of the Toledo CIO Council, she had been demoted to library clerk because the paper took the stand a reporter could not hold a CIO position.

But, there were few such instances of protection of civil rights. These were the opposite signs:

● The Natl. Lawyers' Guild, protesting Atty. Gen. Clark's method of preparing his list of "subversive" groups, declared he had used no standards, that his personal opinion seemed to be the yardstick.

"Even the Nazi defendants in the postwar trials were not prosecuted for membership in Nazi organizations until a thorough inquiry had been made into the workings of the groups," the Guild said.

("The ultimate responsibility for countering totalitarians of all kinds rests, as always, with the mass of good, democratic Americans, their organizations and their leaders."—Civil Rights Report.)

● The state of civil liberties in the State of New Jersey had fallen to such a low ebb that Gov. Driscoll had to appoint a Committee on Civil Liberties. The committee includes Alexander Barkan, state CIO secretary, Mayor Murphy of Newark, who is also head of the State AFL, a number of educators, clergymen and others.

And, the American Civil Liberties Union, alarmed over a number of instances of violations of civil rights, held a mass rally in Newark which was addressed by speakers with a wide range of political thought. Communists, non-Communists and anti-Communists spoke from the same platform in defense of free speech.

● Hattiesburg, Miss., first city to refuse the Freedom Train's rules, was at it again.

A CIO radio forum discussing the problem of civil rights was cut off the air by Station WFOR, according to a listener who wrote the CIO. The program, "America United," was being broadcast over the NBC hookup.

● Quentin Reynolds sent "An Open Letter to the Newspapermen and Women of America," which appeared in Frontpage, official organ of the New York City Local of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Reynolds wrote: "Some guys I can't figure out. I mean guys who haven't enough sense to be scared. Guys in our business weren't scared enough even when they were there in the caucus room watching what was going on. I mean when they were covering the House Hollywood hearings. That was enough to scare a man, all right.

"The real fight against the committee with the black pencil was not led by the rank and file, but by the newspaper bosses. The men who sat at the press tables weren't indignant, weren't scared.

"I was scared all right. I'd been through it before in Berlin (he was a correspondent there in 1933 and 1934). This was as brash an attempt to toss the first 10 amendments out the window as Washington has ever seen . . . Once the committee had the film industry in its pocket, don't think they wouldn't have gone to work on newspapers, magazines and the radio networks.

"Happily, a few newspaper bosses were indignant and a little scared, too. . . .But the boys at press tables weren't scared. Is it because they feel so secure? Maybe working in countries where there is no Bill of Rights makes you scare easily.

"Forget about Germany. Work in Moscow for a few months and you'll see what I mean. You'll know the horror of reading Pravda in the morning and then knowing that Izvestia and Red Star will echo everything that Pravda said.

"You'll feel sorry for the men on these papers who have to act as Charley McCarthys—parroting the government line. You feel superior when you're working in Moscow. 'We've got nothing like that at home,' you boast.

"Then you see something like the proceedings in Washington, and it scares the hell out of you. It should, anyway."

("In a free society there is faith in the ability of the people to make sound, rational judgments. But such judgments are possible only when the people have access to all relevant facts and to all prevailing interpretations of the facts. How can such judgments be formed on a sound basis if arguments, viewpoints, or opinions are arbitrarily suppressed"—Civil Rights Report.)

● The ACLU entered the defense of the Hollywood witnesses, "because of the failure of the committee to lay a proper foundation for questioning the men about membership in the Communist Party."

● The House Committee had a new member, Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D., La.), replacing Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D., N. C.), resigned. But, there seemed little hope for for improvement, since Hebert, according to the CIO News' Voting Guide, had a poor labor record. Of 12 key votes in the first session of the 80th Congress, Hebert was listed as voting wrong six times, voting right no time, paired wrong three times, paired right twice and not voting once.

● Pointing out that "more than two years after the end of the war and seven months after the expiration of the Selective Service Act, no amnesty has been granted to conscientious objectors, Jehovah's Witnesses and other persons convicted of violating that law, and that 700 persons remain in prison while thousands already released are still without valuable civil rights," 545 ministers, clergymen, professors, authors and labor leaders addressed a letter to Pres. Truman asking that he grant amnesty at once to the violators.

● Two noted liberal champions of civil rights were at odds over "front" groups.

Morris Ernst, New York attorney and member of the President's Civil Rights Committee, favored laws to force organizations engaged in political or economic activity to make public their membership lists and financial affairs.

Arthur Garfield Hays, who has defended both Communists and Fascists in court, and who is counsel for the ACLU, expressed complete opposition to Ernst's plan, saying it would hinder democracy by discouraging freedom of expression, and "would bring about more evils than it would cure."

("To strengthen the rights to freedom of conscience and expression, the committee recommends: The enactment by Congress and the states of legislation requiring all groups, which attempt to influence public opinion, to disclose the pertinent facts about themselves through systematic registration procedures" — Civil Rights Report.)

● O. John Rogge, former special assistant to the Attorney General, said the "loyalty probers claim the right to zip open the flap of a man's mind, poke around, and then decide whether he shall be allowed to earn a living or whether he shall go through life unable to find any kind of work because of the stigma stamped on him.

"There can be no question that a person who is actually disloyal should not be allowed to work for our government. But what is to constitute disloyalty? Is it membership in a cut-rate book club which ran afoul of Martin Dies? Is is criticism of the un-American Committee?"

(" . . . the civil rights of the American people—all of them—can be strengthened quickly and effectively by the normal processes of democratic government . . . But it will require as much courage, as much imagination, as much perseverance, as anything which we have ever done together"—Civil Rights Report.)

Reward Offered In CIO Kidnapping

The American Civil Liberties Union, at the request of the CIO Textile Workers, has offered a $500 reward for information leading to the conviction and imprisonment of the abductors of Mrs. Edna Martin, CIO organizer.

Mrs. Martin was kidnapped from her room in Tallapoosa, Ga., bound, gagged and taken by a group of unmasked men and women and dumped on a lonely road. Mrs. Martin, a Georgian by birth, is the mother of six children, one of them a war veteran.

Supreme Court Hits At All-White Jury

The U. S. Supreme Court has served notice upon the State of Mississippi that convictions of Negroes will not be sustained as long as there is "purposeful" and systematic discrimination against them in selection of juries.

The remarks came in a case involving the conviction of Eddie Patton, a Lauderdale County, Miss., Negro, sentenced to be electrocuted for murder of a white man. He was indicted by an all-white grand jury and convicted by an all-white petit jury under a process which automatically excluded Negroes from the juries. The unanimous Supreme Court decision was written by Justice Black.

PROTESTS BIAS: Clarence Mitchell, labor secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, tells Jesse N. Donaldson, postmaster general nominee, that Donaldson had done nothing to stop discrimination against Negroes in postal appointments and advancements. Mitchell made the charge before the Senate Civil Service Committee, but Sen. Chavez (D., N. M.) said that he believed that there would be no discrimination under Donaldson. Mitchell did not oppose Donaldson's confirmation, but sought to have the alleged bias discontinued. The committee named a sub-committee to investigate the allegation.

Miss. Station Admits 'Killing' CIO Program On Civil Rights

Radio Station WFOR last week gave the answer to the question on CIO's "America United" forum —"Our Civil Rights—Are They in Danger?"

The station, located in Hattiesburg, Miss., pulled the switch on the half-hour broadcast over the NBC network about 18 minutes after it had gone on the air. The program was too "controversial," the manager said.

"We're down in the deep south," the station director, C. J. Wright, Jr., told The CIO News, "and you got off on the racial question. We cut it off the air 12:19 P.M., Central Time, telling the radio audience that this is a controversial issue and that both sides were not represented."

Asked what he meant by "both sides," Wright said, "someone representing the south and someone representing the colored people."

Appearing on the program were Palmer Weber, research director of the CIO Political Action Committee, a native and long-time resident of Virginia; Leslie Perry of the Nat'l Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Frank Donner of the CIO legal staff, a native of New Jersey; and Fred Bailey of the National Grange.

Bailey, who disagreed with some points advocated by the CIO speakers, describes himself as "a died-in-the-wool southerner from the great state of Texas, who still feels that 'damn Yankee' is all one word."

The broadcast was one of a series arranged by CIO each Sunday at 1:00 P.M., EST, over the NBC chain.

CIO officials wrote a letter to call the incident to the attention of the Federal Communications Commission, which licenses all radio stations in the country.

THE speakers touched on all phases of American civil liberties. Weber remarked that "the big plantations, the power companies and the textile companies in the south" have helped to bar millions of southerners from voting.

Perry commented that a senatorial committee which investigated the 1946 elections in Mississippi found "numerous public officials of Mississippi (who) testified under oath before the committee that they had consciously made it more difficult for Negroes to vote . . . that they had threatened if they did vote there would be violence."

AN 'EYE-DROPPER' PROGRAM

The GOP's four-point "anti-inflation" plan reminds us of the fellow who showed up with an eye-dropper to fight a three-alarm fire.

The cost of living has increased 23% since the GOP put the skids under OPA. There is nothing to indicate we are nearing the end of price increases.

Salaried and hourly-paid workers have been using up their savings to meet everyday expenses. Those who live on fixed incomes such as pensions and annuities have had to take several notches in their belts.

The nation obviously is getting ready to embark on a long-range foreign aid program which will put an additional strain on our domestic economy.

The CIO fought against the premature death of OPA—and lost. It then proposed a program of mild economic controls—and was ignored or criticized by the GOP.

Later the CIO came out for price control and rationing of essential commodities. This brought a storm of protest from those who killed OPA.

Finally—just a few weeks ago—the CIO did something it had hoped it wouldn't have to do. It announced it was going to seek substantial wage increases to meet the high cost of living. This caused the expected furore.

President Truman, obviously realizing the seriousness of our economic plight, submitted to Congress a 10-point anti-inflation program which recognizes the need for drastic action.

As an "answer" to the President, the GOP proposed:

Extension for one year (to February, 1949) of controls over exports and rail transportation.

Encouragement of voluntary agreements by business with government for the allocation of scarce materials.

Restoration of higher rates of gold reserves which Federal Reserve Banks must hold against deposits of member banks and against currency issues.

WOULDN'T LET THEM LISTEN

A Hattiesburg, Miss., radio station recently cut a CIO-sponsored forum off the air in the middle of the program, denying listeners a right to make up their minds regarding whether the speakers were right or wrong.

The irony of it all was that the program was devoted to a discussion of civil rights!

WE COVER NAM MEETING

What happens when NAMfellows get together?

We thought our readers would like to know, so we sent Staff Writer Henry C. Fleisher to the recent convention of the National Association of Manufacturers at New York.

Fleisher was told, "Give our readers a look at the NAM through the eyes of a labor reporter." What he saw and heard is reported on Pages 6-7.

We think his report is "must" reading for those who want to know what big business is thinking about.

Publication of 'Subversive' List Was Terrible Blunder

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ATTY. GEN. TOM CLARK recently made public a list of about 90 "subversive" organizations as part of the government's "loyalty" program.

It was a foolish thing to do, because there is such wide disagreement over the meaning of "subversive" and "loyalty."

It was a cruel thing to do, because the organizations were "blacklisted" without being given an opporunity to attempt to establish their innocence.

And it was a dangerous thing to do, because democracy is threatened when the head of a governmental agency is compelled to assume the role of investigator, prosecutor, judge and jury.

THE government not only has a right to fire disloyal employes; it has an obligation to do so.

For years the government has had the power to discharge—and, in extreme cases, imprison—employes found guilty of treason, sabotage, disclosure of confidential documents and advocacy of the use of power to overthrow the government.

Nobody, except the guilty, objects to the judicious use of this power.

But the Clark "purge" list is something else entirely. It, in effect, punishes persons because of their associates and not because of individual acts of disloyalty.

THE organizations listed by Clark may be subversive—or they may be only organizations which Clark considers undesirable.

The personal opinion of the writer is that there are some very bad outfits among those named by Clark. However, that is not the point of this discussion.

The point is that the Truman Administration and Congress (through the Un-American Activities Committee) have embarked on a dangerous course in their efforts to stamp out what they consider subversive elements.

That their objective is a worthy one does not excuse their trampling on basic civil rights.

NEITHER Truman's executive order on loyalty nor any of the laws the experts have been able to find provide a definition of "subversive."

This means Clark and his associates had to use their own judgment in compiling their blacklist.

Thus Clark was given almost unlimited control over the economic life and death of thousands of government employes.

No man—regardless of his tolerance and wisdom—should be given such power.

WHEN Clark made his list public he did much more than establish a questionable standard by which the loyalty of government workers was to be partially judged.

He branded as disloyal thousands of private citizens. Maybe many of them are, but they should have been given an opportunity to try to establish their innocence.

They should have been given a hearing before they were declared guilty.

As it is, today they stand indicted without having adequate machinery for clearing themselves of the charge placed against them.

Most persons go along with the idea that special precautions should be taken in the selection of government employes, especially those holding confidential posts.

But they also believe that in the taking of these precautions top officials have no business trampling on fundamental civil rights.

Among these are the right to be considered innocent until proved guilty, the right to confront one's accusers, the right to a fair hearing if accused and the right to redress from false accusations.

Because Clark's actions did not give full consideration to these rights, the publication of the "subversive" list was a terrible blunder.

"Has That Union Delegation Left the Front Office Yet?"

'Two-Way Taft' At It Again

SEN. Robert Alphonso Taft (R., O.) has time and again accused labor of vacillating, of not being able to make up its mind, of loose thinking.

Here is what a daily newspaper, the Washington Post, thinks of Taft, as presented in an editorial, "Two-way Taft":

"This newspaper took account editorially of what seemed to be a concession to the facts by Sen. Taft on the probability of a meat shortage next spring and the need for meat rationing. Apparently our optimism as to the meaning of Mr. Taft's extemporaneous speech in New York was premature.

"Sen. Taft has now sought to wiggle out of any inference that he indorsed meat rationing. 'I didn't predict it, or suggest it, or favor it,' he has subsequently instructed reporters.

"THE dichotomy thus produced is interesting, to say the least. In his New York speech Sen. Taft was quoted as saying: '. . . by April there will be a great shortage of meat. It has been suggested that we put in rationing of meat by April, and we may do it. It has been proposed that we ration on the English system . . . We may do it. If we do it at all, I think that is certainly the way to do it.'

(Funk & Wagnall's Desk Standard Dictionary: "Dichotomy. Division into two parts or into two branches; division by pairs; branching by constant forking; a fork.")

"Later in the same speech the Senator was quoted as stating: 'Unless it is drastically necessary, I hate to do it, and yet we may.' Only Sen. Taft knows whether he 'favors' meat rationing in the event the shortage becomes acute; but if his remarks do not constitute both suggestion and prediction, then what do they mean?

"This is not the first time Mr. Taft has contradicted himself within the space of a few days. When the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, of which he is chairman, several weeks ago considered the proposals of Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, to increase bank reserves, Mr. Taft appeared to be critical.

"He showed concern lest such a move disrupt the credit necessary for business expansion. Yet in his speech in Philadelphia Dec. 1, Mr. Taft specifically indorsed Mr. Eccles' suggestion for controlling the increase in bank credit as one of the measures that may be desirable to combat inflation.

"In regard to meat, the Senator's effort to disavow the interpretations placed on his New York remarks is the more intriguing because of his use in the speech of the pronoun 'we.'

"By implication, Mr. Taft also was speaking for some of his Republican colleagues. Has there been a change of heart, or did Mr. Taft commit the party beyond his authority? The net effect of the contradiction is somewhat bewildering. Mr. Taft cannot have been right both times.

"THE conclusion, it seems to us, is either that he has indulged in some off-the-cuff remarks without reference to the facts—in which case he is talking nonsense—or that Sen. Taft is in disagreement with Candidate Taft. In any event it will be a neat trick if he can contrive to run in both directions at the same time."

Those G-Men Ask Many Polite Questions

THE telephone bell rang. The editor picked up the instrument, put the receiver to his ear and said, "Hello."

"This is Agent —— of the Federal Bureau of Investigation," said the man on the other end of the wire. "One of the assistant attorney generals has requested me to come over and ask you some questions about your July 14 issue."

"I'd be glad to talk with you," said the editor. "I'd been wondering if you fellows were ever going to get around to question me."

That happened late last summer—and it was the first indication that the CIO would be given an opportunity to test that portion of the Taft-Hartley Law dealing with political activity by union newspapers.

THE G-Man, a polite, smiling fellow armed with the proper credentials, arrived in a short time at the editor's office.

He wanted to know how the CIO News was set up, how it was financed, how it was distributed.

He was particularly interested in the July 14, 1947, issue, which carried a Phil Murray statement indorsing Judge Ed Garmatz of Baltimore, candidate in a special Congressional election.

He was given all the information he requested—and then some—and was told 1000 extra copies of the July 14 edition had been sent to Baltimore for distribution to CIO members.

SEVERAL weeks passed, and then the FBI agent called the editor again. He said he wanted to ask more questions.

"I'll tell you anything I can," the editor said.

Additional details about the CIO News and the July 14 edition were provided the courteous G-Man.

At the end of the question-and-answer period the editor said, "We're mighty anxious to get a test of the Taft-Hartley Law, so we're doing all we can to get a case in court.

"Can you give me any idea about how much progress has been made toward preparing a case against us?"

The FBI agent just smiled.

SEVERAL Washington reporters learned about the second visit of the FBI man to the CIO News office, so they called the editor.

To one lad who obviously knew little about the T-H Law and the procedure necessary to test its constitutionality the editor said:

"You just can't go to the Supreme Court and say, 'Please, Mr. Justice, we'd like for you to rule on that portion of the law relating to use of union newspapers in political campaigns.'

"You've got to violate the law and get a case in court before you can get a ruling on legality.

"Our contention, of course, is that the law abridges freedom of the press."

MORE time elapsed, then two FBI agents visited the national CIO office. This time they wanted to talk with CIO Pres. Murray as well as Editor Allan L. Swim.

Politely, they asked a lot of questions similar to those which had previously been asked the editor.

They wrote the answers down carefully on their note pads. They thanked Murray and Swim for their co-operation.

They said polite good-byes and left.

RUMORS about what's cooking behind the scenes in the Justice Department have been flying thick and fast.

Some of the wise ones around Washington say the case will get into court soon. Others say, "Don't try to hold your breath until it happens."

One thing is certain. Those G-Men were mighty polite guys!

'I'LL BE JUDGE, I'LL BE JURY'

British Labor Again Pays Honor To Six 'Martyrs of Tolpuddle'

BRITISH Labor last week again paid honor to the memory of the "Six Men of Dorchester," who are also called the "Martyrs of Tolpuddle."

This is why their memory is honored: On Dec. 9, 1833, a man named Edward Legg, made his way into a meeting of the Friendly Society of Agricultural Labourers of Tolpuddle, Dorsetshire, Dorchester, a farm village. The FSALT was the first farmers' union in history.

Legg, like James McParlan, his later counterpart in America (McPharlan is the man who spied on the Molly Maguires in Pennsylvania's hard coal area), won the trust of the union by his apparent earnest friendly manner.

HE WAS a professional stool pigeon. From his testimony, six union members were arrested and tried, charged with being "evilly disposed persons, bound by secret and unlawful oaths." The court allowed that to be the charge despite the fact that the George III law prohibiting secret oaths had been repealed eight years before.

Like the Tafts and the Hartleys of today, the landed gentry of that period were using the oath charge as a cover for their real intent: breaking the union because it was trying to raise an appallingly low wage scale and improve working conditions.

The gentry had welched on an agreement to pay the workers 10 shillings a week (then about $2.00 to $2.50), cutting the hands' pay to nine shillings, then eight, then seven. The workers were desperately poor and were forced to live on barley bannocks (flapjacks), with meat only on Sundays—and very little then.

He was the sole witness at the trial, which the great liberal Member of Parliament, Daniel O'Connell, denounced as a perversion of justice.

Judge (Baron) John Williams' decision came as a shock to early 19th Century England:

"Not for anything you have done, or anything it can be proved you intended to do, but as an example to others, I consider it my duty to find you guilty and sentence each and every one of you to seven years' transportation across His Majesty's high seas."

The six men—James and George Loveless, Thomas and John Stanfield, James Emmett and James Brine—were sent to the notorious Botany Bay colony, New South Wales, in a convict ship and put at hard labor.

O'CONNELL and Edward Bulwer (later Lord Bulwer-Lytton) started a crusade to gain pardons for the six men. They kept up their fight in Commons and formed an organization, the London Dorchester Committee, which raised funds and secured 250,000 names to a petition. A gigantic labor rally—first in England's history—was held in London.

Two years later, the government granted pardons to the six.

Who Is Labor?

"You talk of labor on the floor of this House as though labor was composed of villains, thieves and cut-throats. Who is this labor you talk about? Sixty-eight million American men and women—your neighbors, your friends, the people who live next door to you, the man who lives upstairs, the people who pay 80% of the taxes of the United States, the people who supplied 75% of the armed forces in time of war, the people who built this great country and who have contributed their time and money and their blood in every important moment of its existence, the people who today merely ask to be treated as Americans and seek a continuation of the guaranties of the Constitution and of the Bill of Rights."

Rep. Donald O'Toole (D., N. Y.)

Compensation Quiz

Q. While some states allow workmen's compensation up to as high as 70% of weekly salary or wages, is there any maximum payment?

A. Yes. Only Arizona has no maximum; in 37 states, the weekly maximum payments are $25 or below; in many states they are below $21; Connecticut has raised its maximum to $32, Oregon to $34, Wyoming to $36, Washington State to $38.

Q. When do payments begin?

A. Most states require that a disability last for at least for more than 7 days before benefits are payable. Usually, however, the compensation is allowable for that waiting period if the disability lasts more than 4 weeks.

RICH, GOLDEN CURTAIN PROTECTS NA

Publicity 'Kitty' Holds 3 Million

NAM HAS tossed nearly three million dollars into a giant publicity campaign to win friends and influence people.

In addition to its own expenditures, NAM has encouraged its member corporations to dig into their well-filled cash registers to publicize the big business line of propaganda.

The big goals for 1948: to make the public forget about those record-breaking $17½ billion profits piled up by industry this year, and to gloss over the tremendous growth of monopoly.

As Holcomb Parkes, NAM's vice-president in charge of public relations, told the convention: "What we've lost by letting them bury Horatio Alger." NAM will try to tell you that you, too, can open a steel mill or an auto plant. And NAM will try to clear your mind of "fantastic misconceptions" about the size of corporation profits.

Parkes told his story while Lammot duPont, presiding at the session, sucked contentedly on a pipe. Later, Richard Bennett, NAM press relations chief, boasted that he had helped provide material to Life magazine on a recent price story. Many editors use NAM's "statistics" constantly, he said.

And "Johnny" Johnstone, NAM's radio chief, suggested that "the time is fast approaching when we too may have to buy time" on the networks to push the big business story.

Parkes, a former trade paper editor and railroad publicity man who now heads the NAM public relations set-up, told the convention that the campaign had paid off—particularly since NAM's slip has been showing as a result of its fight against price control.

Here's how Parkes puts it: "We have been making progress when we might have lost some ground," public opinion-wise—what with all the attacks that have been made on the NAM in the past two years because we had the faith and courage to carry your views to the people of the nation."

Parkes points out that the NAM saw three "roadblocks" to permanent prosperity when it surveyed the nation right after V-J Day. You know what happened to "Roadblock No. One"—price control; and to "Roadblock No. Two"—the Wagner Act.

Now, NAM propaganda is getting ready to tackle roadblock No. Three—the tax question. If they win that fight, they'll undoubtedly find new issues on which to crusade.

Money is no object when NAM dives into a propaganda campaign.

The story of the three "roadblocks" was brought to an anxious public early in 1946 through paid ads in 265 daily papers and 1,876 small-town papers. (A full-page ad in the New York Times costs well over a thousand dollars.)

In the price control fight, NAM set out to overcome the pro-OPA views which it acknowledges were held by 85% of the people.

Without even so much as a blush, Parkes told the convention of the fight to beat OPA against the will of a majority of the people. As Parkes put it:

"Seldom in the history of public relations has there been a more difficult educational job—the job of presenting the economic truth about price controls so effectively that the majority of the people would reverse their opinion."

Into 127 metropolitan papers went the first NAM ad, "Paging Mr. Bowles."

Two weeks later another ad ("Would you like some butter or a roast of beef?") went into 327 papers. Others followed, on a similar scale.

The Industrial Press Service, sending free material to 5,500 country papers and 2,500 company house organs, carried 166 separate pieces of propaganda against price controls to millions of readers.

The same sort of campaign was used for the Taft-Hartley Bill. NAM's statement on labor legislation went in one ad to 25 million readers of newspapers. In April, it bought space in papers with 38 million circulation for four more ads, which appeared every two days.

With the tax fight barely begun, NAM has turned out 60 news releases on the subject, 228 articles in its free news service for country editors, 10 network radio broadcasts, 24 transcribed radio programs, 51 items in its various other propaganda bulletins.

Behind the scenes, NAM grinds out the propaganda week by week and day by day.

Its NAM News ($15 a year) is a weekly paper, primarily intended for members.

Three monthly glossy-paper bulletins are sent free to members of three special groups. "Understanding" is devoted to "cooperation between Clergymen and Businessmen;" "Trends" talks about building "Education - Industry Cooperation;" "Farm and Industry" reports on "problems of mutual interest."

"Program Notes," a lively 6-page bulletin, feeds the NAM line to women's clubs with a chatty, feminine type of patter. "Exchange" is a mimeo bulletin to remind businessmen there are dividends in paying attention to the community in which they live.

Denham at Home

It was a warm and hearty welcome that the NAM gave to Robert Denham, general counsel of the Labor Board. Reading from a prepared script, Denham gave a detailed description of the meaning of the Taft-Hartley Act; and he listed the changes which it brings to collective bargaining. He particularly reminded the employers that the closed shop is illegal, and that union security provisions are not valid unless the involved T-H procedures are followed by the unions.

TWO GOP 'JOES': This is the picture you'd expect to see at the NAM convention. On the left (probably the only time he's ever been there) is Joe Pew, head of Sun Oil, vice-president of NAM and a Republican big shot around Philadelphia. With him is Joe Martin, of Massachusetts, Republican speaker of the House of Representatives. P. S. The NAM doesn't like CIO political action.

BIG CORPORATIONS REAL POWER BEHIND THE THRONE

THESE are the companies which really run NAM. They're represented through top executives as at-large members of the Board of Directors.

Twelve are elected by member firms. Seven are appointed by the NAM president. Nine are selected from the trade associations which comprise the National Industrial Council, an affiliated organization.

General Motors
General Electric
Firestone Tire & Rubber
Eastman Kodak
Du Pont (two seats on the board)
Burroughs Adding Machine
O'Sullivan Rubber
General Foods
Walworth Co., New York
Thompson Products Co., Cleveland
H. L. Derby, industrialist, New York
California Packing Corp.
Fruehauf Trailer Co.
Ingersoll Milling Machine Co., Rockford, Ill.
American Rolling Mill.
Robert L. Lund, industry counsel, St. Louis
Intl. Harvester
Russell-Harrington Cutlery Co., Southbridge, Mass.
Armstrong Cork Co.
Westinghouse Electric
Corn Products Refining Co.
Inland Steel Co.
Manning, Maxwell & Moore, Inc., New York
Blaw-Knox, Pittsburgh

In addition, there are 89 state and regional members of the board—most of them representing small or medium-sized corporations.

Control of the NAM seems much the same as when the Senate Civil Liberties Committee conducted its investigation 10 years ago. Fifteen big firms contributed $569,000 to NAM between Jan. 1, 1933, and Oct. 31, 1937. The 15 donors, whose gifts were all higher than $20,000, were: duPont, GM, Natl. Steel, U. S. Steel, Monsanto Chemical, Westinghouse, Chrysler, Bethlehem, Texas Corp., Borg-Warner, Republic Steel, Socony-Vacuum, Swift, Standard Oil of N. J., and Eastman Kodak.

Consider Transfer

Some 2000 CIO Communications Association radio operators will transfer to the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association if the proposal is ratified by the ACA executive board and membership. The plan has been approved by the MEBA executive board.

Good Investment In Mind Changing

NAM feels that the investment in changing people's minds is paying off.

To see what sort of fruit was falling from the propaganda tree, NAM hired the Opinion Research Center to sample attitudes of people around the country.

Here's what they found over a two-year period since 1945: a jump of 10% in the number of people who can identify the NAM; a rise of an estimated 7 million people who allegedly favor the NAM program; a rise of 9% in the people who favor NAM's labor policy, which is based on support of the Taft-Hartley Act; a drop of 8% in the group which thinks NAM is mainly interested in high profits.

These figures may be true, or cockeyed as a Groucho Marx wisecrack—but NAM's public relations experts think they're true. And they're happy about it.

T-H Gives Indu To 'Get Tough

BY HENRY C.

IN A CORRIDOR of New York's Hotel handsome blonde woman was soundi friends. In a parlor behind them, the re Association of Manufacturers had just

"That's the trouble with the NAM," the lady snapped. "We've pussyfooted too long, and it's about time we stopped."

The lady was wrong. The NAM walked through its 52nd convention not with the gait of a pussycat or a tiger, but with the lumbering tread of a very determined old elephant.

To its 52nd Congress of American Industry, the NAM attracted some 3,000 businessmen from every state in the land. They plodded through a heavy three-day schedule of conservative oratory and pep talks.

There wasn't so much as an embarrassed cough or a blush over what had happened to prices since the NAM led the fight that killed OPA.

If any one of the 3,000 seemed worried that millions of Americans are being hard-pinched by inflation, he kept his thoughts well to himself.

The sense of need for quick and dramatic action to meet the economic crisis of high prices and lowered buying power, which one can feel throughout the country, never once penetrated the rich golden curtain that hung on the stage of the Waldorf's main ballroom.

The NAM convention — the vast majority of its speakers, its delegates, its resolutions committee—was concerned with other things:

- Taxes, particularly on corporations and high personal incomes, must be reduced, the members of the NAM assured each other.
- The federal budget must be trimmed by six or seven million dollars. How? By cutting housing funds, and social services, and the budget of the Labor Department.
- Foreign aid must be cut—and we must see that no country gets our help before it's agreed to kill its price controls and all other controls over production and distribution.

Asks Longer Week

- And — by no means least — business must get tough with labor across the bargaining table, particularly since management has the help of the Taft-Hartley Act, which has made employers the "equal" of labor.

On subjects such as these, the NAM talked and joked, passed resolutions and planned for the future.

Putting together the gist of three or four convention speeches, you get the outline of NAM's "program" to combat inflation. It's a slow-moving affair, and if prices go up while America waits for it to develop, millions of families will be flat broke.

The NAM doesn't seem concerned about delays ject.

Big business doesn't really expect labor to take that advice. William Grimes, editor of the Wall Street Journal, appeared before the convention with a warning that labor is in a pretty strategic position to get pay boosts.

Rather than argue over wages, the NAM speakers talked along two lines:

1. Productivity of workers must be increased—presumably through speed-up and the introduction of new machines.

2. Industry, armed with the T-H law, must be prepared to "get tough" at the bargaining table.

T-H Helps NAM

One of the keynoters was Frank Rising, a tight-lipped "humorist" who is head of an automobile parts trade association in Detroit. He offered a five-point program for bargaining that obviously stirred enthusiasm in the audience:

1. Increased productivity, with management going over the heads of the union if necessary to sell the speed-up story to workers.

2. Restoration of local bargaining (that brought applause).

3. Simplifying of job titles, so that unions won't be able to play one employer off against another.

4. "Systematic, orderly" performance of terms of the contract, with employers cracking down on any violation.

5. Restoring of the importance of economic, rather than political, questions at the bargaining table. (He wasn't altogether clear about that.)

NAM Counsel Ray Smethurst, a smooth character, admitted that many industrial relations directors are unhappy about the Taft-Hartley Act, because it ties them up with "legal encumbrances and strait-jackets."

Forget it, he told the NAM, the law's all on your side. What does the T-H law force employers to do? Smethurst asked, and then supplied the answers. It forces the boss to give 60 or 85 days' notice before a lockout. ("I haven't seen a lockout in 10 years") and it prevents you from making payment to labor except for services rendered ("and I know that doesn't worry you").

Not 100% Perfect

Management, he said, can sit down at the table as equals with labor for the first time in 15 years (FDR was elected 15 years ago), and it's time for the boss to feel his oats. The NAM's advice: demand unions' respect your rights; demand that they respect the contract; demand "fair and impartial enforcement" of the T-H law.

Half a dozen other speeches followed the same theme. Only a couple indicated that big business' attitude in the past hsan't been 100% perfect.

Cyrus Ching, former vice-president of U. S. Rubber and now head of the U. S. Mediation Board, talked turkey to the NAM boys (it was the 27th NAM meeting he'd attended, and he obviously felt at home with his friends).

"There were abuses by industry before the passage of the Wagner Act," Ching admitted, "but we have changed our ideas —we have gone through a process of evolution."

Ching complained, however, that too many businessmen still make "snide remarks and sneering jokes" about the government, which is, after all, the defender of free institutions. ("Listen to the son of a ——," said a man behind this reporter. "He's been in Washington only two months and he sounds like all the rest of them.")

It was Clarence ("Chet") Francis, head of General Foods, who really excited the convention and the NAM labor experts with his "statesmanlike" approach.

Talking on "the causes of industrial peace," Francis admitted that "too many employers somehow fell into the grave initial error of treating labor as a commodity. . . ."

He scoffed at the employer "who rushes out of his office past scores or hundreds or thousands of people whom he doesn't understand and who don't understand him, and goes home for the weekend to spend hour after hour trying to earn the confidence of a dog in order to teach him to hunt. . . ."

Francis didn't want to "underestimate" the value of the Taft-Hartley Law, but he argued "you can't legislate harmony into the hearts of men." We need, he said, workers who are informed, secure, have individual dignity, are properly paid and have "non-financial incentives."

You can't argue much with that or with Francis' ideas for better corporation personnel policy, or with his plea that America "unleash the constructive impulses of people in a war on poverty and misery—in a drive toward peace and plenty."

That sort of statement sounds fine behind the golden curtain of the NAM's convention at the Waldorf.

Does it have any real meaning out in the countryside of America?

Based on the record, the answer appears to be "no."

Elected

Morris Sayre, head of highly profitable Corn Products Refining Co., is NAM's president for 1948. His first public statement: it would be fine if the work week were longer.

NAM ROAD TO LOWER PRICES: TAX CUTS AND SPEED-UP

THE Natl. Association of Manufacturers held its annual convention in New York Dec. 3-5. Here's what's on the NAM mind, as indicated by the meeting:

1. NAM is proud of having led the way in killing price controls and forcing passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

2. NAM's next prime goal: to force tax cuts, particularly for the high income brackets. This looks like the No. 1 campaign for '48.

3. NAM practically concedes industry will have to give wage boosts this spring.

4. NAM will harp loud and often on "productivity"—(speed-up, to you)—and will attempt to sell public the idea that workers aren't producing all they should.

5. NAM has NO immediate program to bring prices down. It argues only that lower taxes—which aren't possible for months, at least—and greater productiveness will cut costs IN THE LONG RUN. Then, says NAM, industry will be in a position to pass savings along to the public.

6. NAM speakers advise industry to be sharper with unions in bargaining sessions, to take full advantage of Taft-Hartley law and frame strong counter-demands for presentation to unions. But, the attitude seems to be, "unions are here to stay."

7. NAM wants federal government to trim its budget plenty—particularly on housing, and welfare services.

8. NAM wants U.S. foreign aid program wrapped up in politics, particularly NAM politics. Resolution urges that no aid be given any nation which refuses to promise removal of price controls and all other controls over production and distribution of goods.

Delegates Just There To Listen

IT'S A curious, dull sort of show that the NAM puts on for its members. By contrast, even the least controversial union meeting looks like a Louis-Wolcott fight.

With the exception of two or three informal get-togethers, the NAM convention is run from the stage—lock, stock and barrel. Every word of every speech is prepared in advance. Nobody asks the delegates for their views; they're there to listen, and they appear to like it.

So carefully planned is the show that scarcely a newspaper reporter bothers to put a nose inside the convention hall. There's really no need to do so, for the text of every speech and advance releases on every action are available upstairs in the press room. Nothing unplanned happens at an NAM convention.

An estimated 3000 NAM members were on hand for this year's convention — the 52nd annual get-together. Any member may attend, and it appears that about one in five of the outfit's boasted collection of 17,000 businessmen-members attend the show.

NAM publicity representatives take pains to point out that the country's leading spokesman for big business is actually a collection of small businessmen. Half of the members, says the NAM publicity department, employ less than 250 workers, and about 70% of them have fewer than 500 employes.

Quiet Prosperity

The members in evidence at the Waldorf-Astoria don't look much like what you expect from the cartoons. There are no top hats, striped trousers or tailcoats. The group has a look of quiet, rather than flashy, prosperity.

Whatever their status or degree of wealth, the "rank and file" apparently approve NAM policies. Opinion Research Corp. (whose director published an article in Look Magazine recently showing that workers like the Taft-Hartley Act) has been hired in recent months to do a series of NAM studies.

The poll of NAM members showed 87% approving the organization's policies and 81% believing that NAM accurately reflects its members' viewpoints.

Despite this mandate from the "little" dues-payers, the big business crowd seems to take no chance that controls will drop from their hands. Founded originally as a select group of big businessmen, NAM's membership has broadened out considerably in recent years—but the old hands are still manning the fire pumps.

NAM Directors

Exhibit A is the NAM Board of Directors.

The Board has some 89 state and regional members. Almost all of them are "little businessmen": M. H. Rothert, Camden Furniture Co., Camden, Ark.; William Archer, Uncle Johnny Mills, Houston, Tex.; James F. Dewey, A. G. Dewey Co., Duechee, Vt., are typical of most of the regional board members.

But—the Board also has 25 national members, who comprise a practical blue-book of American big business. Among them are familiar names: GM, GE, duPont, American Rolling Mill, General Foods, Westinghouse, Intl. Harvester, Armstrong.

It's a fair guess that they dominate the monthly Board meetings.

The same story is repeated on the Resolutions Committee. At least 16 of the 55 committee members represent companies or associations that clearly are "big business." If there were fights within the resolutions committee, which seems unlikely, there were no "leaks" to the press.

There's one other factor to keep in mind in seeking to understand what makes NAM tick. That's the headquarters staff, and in particular its group of high-powered "experts"—Ralph Robey on economic affairs, Raymond Smethurst on legal matters, Holcombe Parkes on public relations, Walter Chamblin on legislation.

In an organization where the presidency changes hands every year, key members of the staff obviously have a major voice in the setting of policy. Staff members are speculating who will be the new executive vice-president, the man who actually runs the show; Walter Weisenberger, who held that post for many years, died last June 22—the day the Taft-Hartley bill became law.

NAM Head Just Misses Apoplexy

Earl Bunting, NAM board chairman, had some trying moments at a press confab on the opening day of the big business convention.

Bunting—who hails from Winchester, Va., hometown of ultra-conservative Sen. Harry Byrd—described the CIO's demand for 1948 wage increases as "insincere." He dismissed it as a "trial balloon" floated by Philip Murray to learn the attitudes of the public and of CIO members.

"What would you tell Mr. Murray if you were a $50-a-week steel worker?" a reporter asked Bunting.

"I'd tell him that price increases have eaten away two wage increases," Bunting said. "I'd tell him to look around for some other formula to meet the situation."

"You mean price control?" a reporter asked.

"No, I don't mean price control!" Bunting fairly roared. He added that he doesn't know anyone who does. "Do you want price control?"

"Yes," said the CIO News reporter—along with half a dozen other newsmen.

The NAM head changed the subject and quickly ended the conference.

CIO UNIONS PREPARING PAY DRIVES

CIO unions began charting their wage drives last week, following the CIO vice-president's announcement that "substantial" increases would be sought to overcome losses incurred by rising prices.

Among the first to submit demands were CIO maritime unions. The Natl. Maritime Union, whose contract is to be reopened for wage consideration Dec. 19, will seek a 25% boost and overtime rates. A spokesman for the industry said this would increase the basic wage of an able seaman from $191.99 a month to $239.99 and would boost his overtime from $1.06 hourly to $1.32½ an hour.

The ship operators were previously reported to have balked at CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association demands for 15% rises. The company spokesmen indicated their intention to hold out against increases above 5% during subsequent parleys.

CIO Longshoremen's case for an 18c an hour hike last week rested with West Coast Arbitrator Arthur C. Miller. The union based its demand upon increased cost of living, increased production, technological improvement and speedup. Arbitration comes automatically under a Dec. 15 reopening clause in the longshore agreement.

The CIO Rubber Workers announced that it was formulating plans for a national policy committee meeting, which would decide the nature of the union's wage demands. "If Congress continues its 'public be damned' attitude," said Union Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, "then labor shall have to take the only course left open to it—to demand wage increases to offset the increase in living costs during the last year. I point out that whether labor takes that course or not depends almost entirely upon the conduct of Congress in the next few days." The full policy committee comprises 300 members, he said.

WIN RAISES FOR 22,000: The Michigan Civil Service Commission recently ordered the pay of 22,000 state employes raised from $20 to $40 a month following a campaign conducted by the CIO Public Workers. Here a state employe is passing out literature, while Mort Furay, UPW regional director, and Vice Pres. Bob Bruitt of the Detroit Joint Board of the union, get a passerby to sign a petition to the commission urging the pay increases.

Religion-Labor Parley Scheduled

Representatives of organized religion and organized labor will meet together at the 15th anniversary conference of the Natl. Religion and Labor Foundation, Jan. 12-14, at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Anti-Labor Acts Flayed

THE 14TH Annual Conference of Labor Legislation, sponsored by the U. S. Labor Dept., last week called for repeal of anti-labor legislation passed by the states

Attending the meeting were state labor commissioners, accompanied by CIO and AFL advisers.

The commissioners called for state child labor legislation establishing a 16-year minimum for employment during school and a 14-year minimum outside school hours. Immediate action to insure education facilities to migrant children was also recommended.

Detailed reports were also adopted recommending safety, health and workmen's compensation improvements.

In his keynote address, Labor Secretary Schwellenbach pointed out that "amidst the sound and fury which accompanied the debate" on the Taft-Hartley Act, many state legislatures had quietly passed anti-labor legislation. The Labor Secretary pledged himself "to protect the welfare of the 60,000,000 workers in this country whom I represent in the administrative branch of the Government."

Upholds UAW's 'Seizure' of Local

U. S. Circuit Court Judge Breidenbach, Milwaukee, Wis., last week ruled that the CIO Auto Workers had the right to appoint an administrator over the affairs of the UAW Local 248 at the Allis-Chalmer plant in West Allis, Wis.

The administrator sought a court decision when local officers, who resigned recently rather than sign Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavits which they termed "undemocratic," refused to hand over books and records. The former officers termed the naming of an administrator "unconstitutional."

CIO Blood Donors Save Man's Life

CIO blood donors who responded to a radio appeal broadcast in Waterloo, Iowa, are credited with saving the life of G. A. Morarie, Morarie's sister, Mrs. J. E. Burg, called on the Black Hawk County Blood Bank sponsored by the CIO Packinghouse and Auto Workers in Waterloo, when her brother, critically ill in the hospital, began sinking rapidly and the doctors gave little hope for him.

Before the radio announcement was over, Mrs. Burg said, the CIO donors were lined up at the hospital

18,000 To Vote On Union Shop

THE FIRST large-scale union shop elections under the Taft-Hartley law will be conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board this week on petitions filed by the CIO Textile Workers, Emil Rieve, the union's president, announced.

Eighteen thousand workers in 19 mills of the American Woolen Co. will take part in the balloting. Eighteen of the mills are in various New England states.

The election dates were set after petitions, signed by at least 30% of the workers in each mill, were filed with the NLRB by John Chupka, head of TWUA's woolen and worsted division.

Under the law, a majority of all eligible workers must vote for a union shop before a union is permitted to ask for such protection. All the mills involved in the pending elections are now under union shop contracts.

TWUA has filed or is preparing union shop petitions in more than 80 other woolen and worsted mills, most of them in New England, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, Rieve said. Among these are A. D. Juilliard, Olneyville, R. I.; Forstmann Woolen Co., and Botany Mills, both in Passaic N. J., and two other American Woolen Co. units.

OAK RIDGE WORKERS WIN RAISE

A threatened stoppage of production of atomic energy at Oak Ridge, Tenn., was averted last week when some 2800 CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won 10c hourly wage increases plus wage differentials of 10c an hour for the second shift and 15c for the third shift.

The uranium separation plant is operated for the government by the Carbide & Carbon Chemicals Corp.

As negotiations with the private company bogged down and a walkout appeared imminent, CIO Pres. Philip Murray and CIO Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood attempted to obtain a settlement by conferring with the Atomic Energy Commission headed by David Lilienthal. The workers had previously voted to strike if negotiations failed.

At the meeting Murray proposed the establishment of a tripartite grievance board which would include a representative each from labor, industry and the government. He described the guarantee of some sort of grievance machinery as the major issue in the dispute with the company, which had been accused by the union of failure to bargain in "good faith."

Meanwhile House Labor Committee Chairman, Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.), seized the opportunity to propose widening the scope of anti-labor legislation. He set up a three-man subcommittee to determine whether the projected Oak Ridge strike would come under the Taft-Hartley Act. If it does not, he said, he will propose an amendment to the law.

The new contract, effective Dec. 8, will run for 18 months. The union may reopen it for wage discussion after eight months. Contract modifications covering 24 union demands will be drawn up and signed within a few days, a joint statement by the union and company stated.

New Assignments For UAW Leaders

New assignments by the CIO Auto Workers' board included the following:

Ford Department—Ken Bannon, president of Highland Park Ford Local 400, director, to succeed former Vice Pres. Richard T. Leonard.

Auto-Lite, Thompson Products and Borg-Warner departments—Vice Pres. Richard Gosser.

Aircraft, Airline Mechanics, McQuay-Norris departments and piston ring, L. A. Young and spring councils—Vice Pres. John W. Livingston.

Competitive Shop department—Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Agricultural Implement department—Harvey Kitzman, president, J. I. Case Local 180, Racine, Wis.

National PAC and Washington office—Reuther.

Research department—Nathan Weinberg.

The General Motors, Chrysler and Briggs departments remain under the direction of Reuther, Board Member Norman Matthews and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, respectively.

TELL PUBLIC THEIR STORY: What is believed to be the first labor-management-citizens committee in Texas starts at Waco with a radio broadcast. Labor's six representatives on the 18-man committee include three CIO leaders and three AFL leaders. Left to right, J. H. Kultgen, auto dealer, representing the public; Mayor Richard C. Bush, who instituted the plan; H. K. Brenner of the CIO Transport Workers, and George O. Jones, baking company president representing management.

Right Wing Wins In Wisconsin

THE Wisconsin State CIO Council last week reduced its number of vice presidents from 24 to 11, following the action with election of an all-"right wing" executive board.

Some 550 delegates attended the three-day convention in Milwaukee, which returned to office the council's two top executives—Pres. Herman Steffes, Auto Workers, and John M. Sorenson, Steelworkers.

With the adoption of a constitutional amendment the group moved to finance an accelerated educational and legislative program by increasing monthly per capita payments from three to six cents. The program includes continuation of the council's farm-labor public relations program, now being furthered by a series of bi-weekly ads in the state's rural weekly newspapers.

Earlier, the convention heard Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers declare that General Motors could have reduced its prices by $250 per automobile and still make a profit above the 1935-39 average. Political action, he said, is the only solution to problems faced by labor.

Also among principal speakers were George Weaver, director, CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; Kermit Eby, director of the CIO Education & Research Dept., and Clifford McAvoy, national CIO-PAC representative.

Resolutions adopted by the convention supported CIO wage demands, opposed "regressive" changes in the federal wages and hours law.

NAVY HONORS MURRAY: CIO Pres. Philip Murray receives a Navy Department citation for the CIO from Rear Admiral Felix Johnson. The citation was authorized by James Forrestal, former Secretary of the Navy and now Secretary of Defense, and Admiral C. W. Nimitz, chief of naval operations, in recognition of the aid given by the CIO to the Navy's Civilian Reserve Recruiting program.

In Connecticut

GOVERNOR PRAISES CIO AS COPS PUSH PICKETS

FOUR hundred delegates to the Connecticut State CIO convention last week took former OPA Administrator Chester Bowles' advice to "get up to your ears in politics" and called for intensified political activity in the next year.

Bowles is expected to seek the Democratic nomination for governor of Connecticut next year.

In the presence of Republican Gov. James L. McConaughy, the CIO severely attacked the state's new sales tax, terming it in a resolution "a merciless gouge on the people . . . foisted on the people" by Republicans. Delegates rattled jars of pennies as the resolution passed.

In his speech the Governor defended the sales levy, then praised the CIO for its intelligent leadership. The Chief Executive made no reference to the CIO Steelworkers' strike at the Hershey Metal Products Co. in Ansonia and Derby, where state troops are charged by the CIO with violence and breaking up picket line.

McConaughy had previously been visited by CIO leaders who requested withdrawal of the troops. New England Regional Steelworkers' Director Martin Walsh told the delegates the police had taken no action against perpetrators of the picket line violence, the strikebreakers, but had "pushed the peaceful pickets around."

Strikebreakers, he said, had driven cars at high speed through the line, injuring several strikers. Two pickets were carried a quarter of a mile on the hoods of strikebreakers' cars, and one, Joseph Falcone, he said, was beaten up with a blackjack as a brutal finale to the ride.

All CIO unions in the state protested by joining the strikers in a mass picket line.

Mitchell Sviridoff, international Auto Workers representative, was elected head of the Council, succeeding Edward J. Lavery, who was not a candidate. John J. Driscoll was reelected secretary-treasurer. Sviridoff was formerly a vice-president.

The state organization praised CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey for his support of the Marshall Plan in the World Federation of Trade Unions. Other resolutions denounced Republican members of Congress for their support of the Taft-Hartley Law and failure to take anti-inflationary measures.

Rhode Island CIO Told

INTEREST IN PROFITS LINK REPUBLICANS AND NAM

REP. AIME J. Forand (D., R. I., last week blasted the Republican Party and the Natl. Association of Manufacturers as being solely interested in profits and added, "The record shows they are getting them."

Addressing the 10th annual Rhode Island CIO convention in Providence, Forand referred to published reports of 50 companies which revealed net profit increases ranging from 25.9% to 246.9% in the past year.

Sen. Taft (R., Ohio), the Congressman said, "is a representative of the powerful Ohio gang—the group which operated independent of the Republican National Committee last year and made contributions of $1000 to congressional candidates and $2000 to senatorial candidates in nearly every state north of the Mason-Dixon line.

"The GOP-NAM boys are having their day. They are for aid to Europe with all kinds of strings attached. They are against control of prices for fear it may cut the fabulous profits they are making."

The NAM was further lambasted by speakers Emil Rieve, CIO Textile Workers president; Esther Peterson, CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers legislative representative; Rhode Island CIO Pres. Frank J. Benti and Sen. Theodore F. Green (D., R. I.).

Lashing out at the NAM's pressure for a longer work week, Rieve said, "If we were to work 48 hours in the cotton textile industry, we wouldn't produce any more cloth because there just isn't enough raw cotton available. What is true of cotton is also true of synthetic yarn, and yet they tell us we'll have to abolish the 40-hour work week." If the automobile industry adopted a 48-hour week it couldn't produce a single additional car, he said, "because there is no steel."

Sen. Green said the 65c minimum wage bill he sponsored in the last Congress is now "too low." A 75c figure would be more desirable now, he stated. "An area such as New England cannot feel economically secure until all such sweatshop wages are eliminated by proper governmental action," he declared.

Average wage of NAM lobbyists in Washington, Mrs. Peterson said, is $538 a week. She charged the real estate interests with maintaining a fulltime staff of 13 Washington lobbyists, drawing combined salaries of nearly $100,000 annually. Lobbyists for the canning industry, who are fighting an increase in the minimum wage to 75c an hour, receive $250 a day, she asserted.

Delegates re-elected the two top Council officers—Pres. Benti, and Secy.-Treas. Antonio DiPinto.

SPLIT N. J. COUNCIL BACKS PAY HIKES

THE New Jersey State CIO Council last week split over election procedure but solidly backed CIO demands for substantial wage increases and urged a 30-hour week without paycuts as means of maintaining full employment and high purchasing power.

The action was taken at the state body's 10th annual convention at Trenton. Future conventions will be held bi-ennially in odd-numbered years, in accordance with a constitutional amendment.

A successful move by the nominating committee to oust Vice-President James McLeish, Electrical Workers representative, resulted in a walkout by most of UE's delegates. Departing from the traditional practice of electing to the vice-presidencies the candidates recommended by a caucus for each international union, the majority report of the committee nominated Ernest Polak for the UE seat in place of McLeish, chosen by UE caucus.

Some UE and sympathizing delegates left the hall as a roll-call vote on the majority report was in progress. Leaders of the UE District 4 group which walked out later announced that they would recommend to their respective locals that per capita payments be withheld from the State organization until "such time as . . . we are permitted . . . to choose our own representatives on the State Board."

COUNCIL Pres. Carl Holderman expressed "regret" at the UE group's action and stated that the move would impair the State council's program "at a time when unified action is needed."

Delegates adopted a strongly worded resolution supporting the Marshall Plan and criticizing the Soviet Union as obstructing world peace. Another resolution urged defeat of the communists and fascists in local union elections.

A 10-point state legislative program urged cash sickness benefits, legislative machinery to insure labor rights guaranteed in the new constitution, a wage-hour law in intra-state industry, public housing, anti-discrimination statutes, extension of state rent control, a veterans' bonus, improved workmen's compensation, increased appropriations for teachers' salaries and schools, and opposed payroll taxes.

Assistant U. S. Labor Secy. John Gibson named "exorbitant" corporation profits as the cause of high prices. New Jersey Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll pledged strengthening of state social security. Republican opposition to Pres. Truman's foreign aid and anti-inflation programs was denounced by Rep. Mary Norton (D.-N. J.), who warned against attempts to destroy or weaken the federal wage-hour law.

Speakers included Academy-award winning actor Harold Russell, and Edward Yeomans, educational director, National Farmers Union.

Getting Results

A New Jersey CIO campaign to correct alleged abuses by the State Unemployment Compensation Commission has met with preliminary success, State Council Pres. Carl Holderman says.

In a letter to Holderman the Commission's Director Harold Hoffman disclosed that three CIO suggestions had been adopted and that a fourth was being studied. Hoffman requested the CIO to submit "any specific instances" where claimants had been improperly interviewed or mistereated by UCC personnel.

The CIO has requested Gov. Alfred Driscoll to investigate UCC practices.

FIGHT T-H: If the T-H Nat'l Labor Relation Board has its way an injunction will be issued to halt this picket line of Local 231 of the CIO Federation of Architects, Chemists and Technicians. The line is in front of Design Service Co., New York City. The Board says this is a secondary boycott against Ebasco, where the union is also on strike. Union replies that it is a strike to gain recognition.

Couple Give H-C-L Views In Broadcast

MR. and Mrs. J. E. Nay of Atlanta, Ga.—a typical CIO steel union family—gave their views to the nation last week on what we should do to fight inflation.

The couple was interviewed on the first in a new series of "Cross-Section, USA" broadcasts over the Columbia Broadcasting System. The broadcasts—of which the CIO is one of the cooperating organizations—will be heard every Saturday afternoon for the next 39 weeks.

In the course of the programs, CBS places its microphones around the country to get the viewpoint of workers, farmers and businessmen on major problems facing the country.

On Dec. 20—almost the six-month anniversary of passage of the Taft-Hartley Act—CBS will interview a member of the CIO Electrical Workers from a union hall in Buffalo, N. Y. Other CIO union members and officials will be heard in succeeding weeks from cities and towns across the country.

The Cross-Section USA interviews, which take place in factories, business offices, union halls and farms, are arranged by Dwight Cooke, producer and master of ceremonies. The shows are prepared in cooperation with CIO, AFL, NAM, Chamber of Commerce and the farm organizations.

They are broadcast on CBS stations Saturday afternoons from 3:30 to 4:00 EST; 2:30 CST; 1:30 PST; and are rebroadcast at 3:00 PST on the west coast.

CIO's views are also heard on the Natl. Broadcasting Co. network on Sunday afternoons from 1:00 to 1:30 EST, in the form of forum discussions; and CIO will have its own show on ABC each Tuesday night at 10:45 EST, starting Jan. 6.

CIO Shelters AFL Strikers

AFL Printers in Chicago, on strike against the city's six big daily papers, are using the CIO's regional office as headquarters.

The Sun-Times Building, which houses two of the struck papers, adjoins the building where the Illinois CIO regional offices are located, making it a convenient place for the strikers to meet.

At the start of the strike, CIO Regional Director Michael Mann sent a telegram to Local 16 of the Typographical Union, assuring the local of the CIO's fullest support and offering to turn over the regional offices to the strikers as picket headquarters for the duration of the walkout.

The offer was promptly and enthusiastically accepted by 1,500 striking printers at a meeting the following morning. Mann reports that the CIO office is now the central headquarters for pickets striking against the Sun and Times on a 24-hour basis.

"Judging by the expressions of appreciation they are constantly showering upon us," he said, "the offer was accepted in the spirit in which it was made."

Charles Howard, late president of the Typographical Union, was one of the men who helped establish the CIO.

'Quality' Human Story Showing Ignorance Causes Racial Bias

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE long train from the North had just pulled into Liberty Grove, a small town in the Deep South.

The old stationmaster pushed the green celluloid eyeshade to the top of his head, rubbing the red line it had left on his brow, and approached the attractive young woman in a tweed suit who was crossing the platform with her suitcase.

The stationmaster was very polite as he asked the girl if she wanted her luggage sent out on the local dray. He called her "ma'am." Taking the baggage tag he handed her, the girl wrote on it neatly, "Miss Patricia Johnson, care of Mrs. Dicey Johnson," and gave the tag back to him.

The old man peered at it closely. Suddenly his polite manner dropped away. An unpleasant look came over his face. "Are you . . . Pinky?" he asked sharply. Clearly annoyed at himself for the courteous way he had just been speaking to her, the stationmaster now began talking impatiently, rudely ordering the young woman to be quick and pay the baggage charge—and pay in advance.

The old, dark, secret shame rushed over the girl. Her pale face flushed. "Pinkey," granddaughter of Dicey Johnson who washed for the white folks, realized bitterly that she was again back at her home in the South.

PATRICIA JOHNSON had spent the last few years at a school and hospital in the North where her Negro grandmother had sent her on money saved from earnings made at the washtub. Old Dicey was set on her granddaughter becoming a trained nurse so that she could come back to Liberty Grove and help her people.

During her stay in the North, nobody at school or at the hospital where she took her nurse's training, suspected that pretty Pat Johnson was a Negro, and for a few short years she had enjoyed the rights and privileges for "whites only."

She had even become engaged to a young white doctor, the handsome red-haired Chester, but just before the date set for the wedding, Pat, unable to bring herself to tell Chester about her Negro blood, had suddenly run away and returned to her old home.

THIS is the background of the fine and exciting novel, "Quality," by Cid Ricketts Sumner, which tells the moving story of the trouble and anguish the poison of race hatred brings to the capable trained nurse and her truly magnificent grandmother, Dicey.

The story begins with the incident at the railroad station, which sets the tone of the book, for it shows that the old stationmaster who ruthlessly humiliates Pinkey is quite unaware that he has done a mean and cruel thing. Like other characters who appear later, he is merely following a pattern of conduct based on ignorance and stupidity which it has never occurred to him to question.

IT is a pleasure to recommend this book to all CIO'ers for several reasons. First, it is a swell story full of real people who come to life so clearly that you feel you know them personally. The grandmother particularly emerges as one of the finest characters in all American literature. Old Dicey, who can't read or write, who has spent her long life cleaning, scrubbing and washing for "quality" white folks who look down on her, is in fact a person of the finest "quality" herself.

Drawing on her deep religious belief for her support, Granny has acquired wisdom, understanding of people, patience, moral strength and a nobility of soul that gives her heroic stature as a person.

SECOND, let it be said for those who do not like "depressing" stories, that there is nothing in "Quality" to make you feel gloomy and hopeless. There is no lynching in the book. Some awful things do happen, and it will make you furious to read how low certain people can be, but in "Quality" the very evil they do acts to draw "the good folks" together, and this, as Granny puts it, "do hold my spirit up."

Finally, it is good to be able to recommend a fine book that can be bought for only 25 cents. Published originally several years ago by Bobbs-Merrill, "Quality" has now just been issued as one of the Bantam Books which can be bought at many newsstands and drugstores.

It can also be obtained direct from Bantam Books, Inc., 1107 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y., for 25 cents plus 5 cents postage.

Considering Overtime Pay Change

A struggle that will affect the income of a lot of white collar workers is taking place in Washington.

The Wage-Hour Division is holding hearings to determine whether it should change its rulings affecting overtime pay for administrative, professional and executive employes of industry.

Under present practice, administrative and professional employes who make over $200 a month are exempted from the wage-hour law, as are executive employes making over $30 a week.

The Wage-Hour Division, although not making any salary recommendation itself, has called attention to "changes in economic conditions which have taken place" since the regulations were first issued in 1940.

The CIO United Electrical Union, however, has recommended that the $200 exemption level be raised so that all employes earning less than $500 a month would be covered by the law. The proposal has raised a furious storm among business witnesses. While admitting that some small change should be made in the exemption rate, industry spokesmen have argued against changing definitions or other rulings involved.

In a statement filed with Wage-Hour officials, Sol Barkin, research director for the CIO Textile Workers, endorsed the UE's proposal for $500 exemption level.

He cited $1.75 an hour loom fixers in northern mills, $105-a-week printers in the dyeing and finishing industry, and $2-an-hour menders in the worsted industry as typical types who earn "too much" to be covered by the law's overtime pay provisions as they are presently enforced.

Murray Tells Europe:

U. S. LABOR 100% FOR MARSHALL PLAN

THE workers of Europe who are able to listen in on the State Dept.'s Voice of America Broadcast are listening these days to the short-waved voice of CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The Voice of America is sending out an address by Murray which was recorded in a Washington studio.

Murray, in answer to a series of questions from an announcer, is telling Europe's workers that American labor is wholeheartedly backing the European Recovery Program (Marshall Plan).

Here are excerpts:

Announcer: "Why does labor support ERP?"

Murray: "American workers still hold dear the goal of a world of good neighbors which our wartime President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, offered as a symbol of mankind's hope and aspirations.

"We know that hunger and sickness, poverty and distress are the real enemies in the way of achieving these goals.

"Distress in Europe, instability, unhappiness, cannot be confined—it will overflow national boundaries. Americans have always responded naturally to help people in trouble; and we do it also on the hardheaded basis that what helps our neighbor helps us."

Announcer: "It has been said that the ERP originates in Wall St. Do you think this is accurate?"

Murray: "I don't think that is true at all. In fact, I think it does an injustice to the American people as a whole. No, the impetus for ERP came from the people and their government. It is safe to say that we in the American labor unions have no intent to turn the ERP over by default to the Wall St. financial groups. We know that only the people can secure a people's peace—and that is precisely our goal."

Announcer: "It has been said that the ERP will enslave the workers of Europe. Do the unions agree?"

Murray: "The unions definitely do not agree with that idea at all. If this were a program of enslavement of free people, we would not support it, we would fight it with all our energy. But the unions of America are conscious of their heritage of freedom, and their support of this economic aid program is the best guarantee of its basic decency and democracy."

Announcer: "Does the CIO believe that the ERP will impose alien methods in European unions and industry?"

Murray: "No. Many of our union members were born in Europe, or they are the sons and daughters of people who came from Europe. Thus, we know especially well that each nation must work out its own destiny and frame its institutions to meet the needs of its people."

Announcer: "Does the CIO regret that certain countries, particularly those in Eastern Europe, have decided not to participate in ERP?"

Murray: "We do regret that. We would like to see all countries of Europe get together to help themselves cooperatively. The U. S. has grown and developed as an economic unit free from petty divisions and artificial trade barriers."

Announcer: "What are the unions doing at home to help the ERP?

Murray: "They are supporting a broad anti-inflation program which will help themselves here and make easier the operation of ERP. We are ready to do our part. We hope that you (European labor) will join us to make a better world."

Cotton Resigns CIO Legal Post

Eugene Cotton, assistant general counsel of the CIO and of the Steelworkers, last week announced his resignation from those two posts in order to practise labor law in Chicago. Cotton's resignation becomes effective Jan. 1.

Cotton has been retained as general counsel of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

CIO President Philip Murray expressed "the greatest of regret" at Cotton's decision to leave his present posts. He added, however, that "I am pleased to note that this forward step in his legal career does not mean the loss of his talents to the labor movement, to CIO, or to the Steelworkers."

Since They Killed OPA

Govt. Survey Shows Rents Skyrocketing

BY GLORIA CAPLAN

RENTS IN large cities have increased five times more in the first four months under the "voluntary 15% rent rise" act than they rose in the entire five-year period of strong OPA rent control.

This picture of "life under the Housing and Rent Act of 1947" was drawn last week by the U. S. Dept. of Labor, which attributed the major part of the increase to "voluntary" hikes permitted by the Act.

"The rapid change reported in the last four months contrasts sharply with the relative stability of rents under the stricter wartime rent controls. In the 32 months between September, 1939, and May, 1942, rents advanced slightly more than 5 percent, the Department reported, "but with the imposition of rent controls beginning in June, 1942, residential rents were cut back or stabilized, and in the five-year period from the summer of 1942 to July, 1947, rose only 1 percent."

Sharpest advance reported was in Chicago, where tenants were paying 9.5 percent more rent in mid-September than in mid-June. Smallest advances—around 1 percent—were found in Manchester, N. H.; Savannah, Ga.; New York and Buffalo, N. Y.

Responsibility for a portion of the increases was placed by the Labor Dept. on the Housing Expediter's Office, which has decontrolled 11 of the 17 areas whose local rent advisory boards recommended elimination of controls. In addition, the Department pointed to general rent increases of 5 percent in Louisville, Ky., and 10 percent in Klamath Falls, Ore., permitted by the Housing Expediter.

ATTENTION meanwhile, has been focusing on the nation's capital, where the fate of rent controls, scheduled to expire Feb. 28, will be determined by the regular session of Congress. Calling attention to the issue, a group of 750 tenants from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Newark and New York City last week converged on Washington to stimulate Congressional support for control extension.

The delegates, led by the New York City Emergency Committee on Rent and Housing, interviewed their congressmen and political leaders. They reported Acting Housing Expediter Tighe Woods as favoring the Celler bill to renew rent control another year with elimination of the 15 percent voluntary rent boost clause and reinstitution of enforcement power by the rent control agency.

One person, however, made the news last week with a defense of the unhappy plight of landlords. Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards, claimed "realty men were the most vulnerable group when scapegoats were being sought in the political year of 1948 . . ."

Some leaders of the realty lobby and the Washington Real Estate Board are under indictment in the Washington District Federal Court, charged with criminal conspiracy to restrain trade in the housing industry by eliminating competition through "commission fixing" agreements. The Washington group termed the action "persecution of free enterprise." The case is scheduled to open Jan. 12.

CONVICT LANDLADY

Widow of a former New York city official, Mrs. Blanche P. Stover was convicted of demanding a $500 bonus for renting an apartment in one of the many buildings she owns. In addition to a five-day jail term and a fine, she received a tongue-lashing from the judge.

MONEY FROM KITTY: Pres. Jack Butler, of Local 142, CIO Auto Workers, at Kaiser-Frazer Corp. accepts a symbolical check for $650,889 from Audrey Hughen, "Miss Tally Cat of 1947." The check represents the amount in the K-F employe Security Trust Fund "kitty," built up during the past year by the company's contributions of $5 for each car shipped from the Willow Run, Mich., plant.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Arthur J. March, International Representative, CIO Steelworkers of America, Winnipeg, Manitoba, reports the following results in organizing locals in that area:

"The employees of Service Station Equipment Co. had to have a government-conducted vote, resulting as follows: For company union 20, Steelworkers 136. These employes are now chartered under Local No. 4066. The employes of Dominion Bronze & Iron Co., Ltd., were certified by card checkoff by the Manitoba Labour Board. Number of workers in question, 39. Now Local 4075.

"Employes of Manitoba Bridge & Iron Works had to have a government-conducted vote, resulting as follows: Steelworkers 219, no union 19. The AFL, although trying since 1943, were not successful in being put on the ballot, due to the splendid work of our key people in the plant. They are now Local 4087 USA.

"The employes of Dominion Bridge Co., Ltd., were certified on a card checkoff. Again the AFL were not successful in obtaining enough signatures to be on the ballot. The number of workers in this plant number about 250 (Local Union number and charter not yet received)."

A. R. Hardesty, Regional Director, Dallas, Texas, advises of the settlement of the 1947-48 agreement with Lone Star Cement in Dallas and Houston. Wage increases of 5c, 7c and 10c per hour (6%) raise and shift differentials of 4c and 6c were included in the new agreement. Field Representatives Griesmeyer and Ellinger handled the negotations.

W. B. Taylor, Regional Director, Louisville, Ky., reports:

"New bargaining agency established in this region without benefit of NLRB. Strike settlement of three months dispute with Pepsi-Cola Louisville Bottlers including signed contract. Reinstatement of all strikers. Contract signed by J. E. Meeks, business agent, Local 20, United Brewery Workers. Strike handled by CIO representative Edward Sobak."

George Brown, Director of Organization, International Woodworkers of America, Chicago, Ill., wires as follows: "IWA 652, AFL 42, Chicago Mill, Tallullah, La."

The writer addressed the New Jersey State CIO Convention at Trenton on Saturday, Dec. 6, where the telephone workers' representatives—members of TWOC-CIO—were delegates for the first time. The writer had the pleasure of presenting them to the convention and they were received with great enthusiasm.

Robert N. Denham, General Counsel of the Taft-Hartley NLRB, has come forward with another very vicious ruling affecting the contract of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers with the Remington-Rand Corporation. This ruling, if permitted to stand, jeopardizes most every labor organization in the country, and if sustained gives to one man powers that are definitely, in the judgment of organized labor, contrary to American public policy and the laws of fairness. This makes more obvious the necessity for intensified political action and voluntary contribution to make this possible.

Sees Increase In Production

CONTRARY to widespread declarations from top management that worker productivity is decreasing or at harmfully low levels, it "actually is on the increase," CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight told the Society for the Advancement of Management in New York last week.

Knight, who also is president of the Oil Workers, took issue with a previous speaker, Elliott I. Petersen, manufacturing vice-president of Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., who had asserted that, "with wages outstripping worker productivity, a higher standard of living tomorrow can come only through greater production today."

Except during the war years, said Knight, "when production per worker was pretty much of a delusion because skilled workers had been drained into the armed forces and replaced with women and farm laborers," worker productivity "has shown a steady increase."

"In the old industry, and in many others," he added, "productivity has outstripped wages instead of vice-versa. From 1921 until the war years worker productivity increased about 7% a year. The graph was static during the war, but output a man again is on the uptrend and I have every reason to believe that the gain again will be 7 per cent this year."

Characterizing the "high cost of living as the real culprit in today's economy," Knight said that the CIO "has given up all hope that the cost of living can be rolled back this year and has decided upon another round of wage increases as the only alternative."

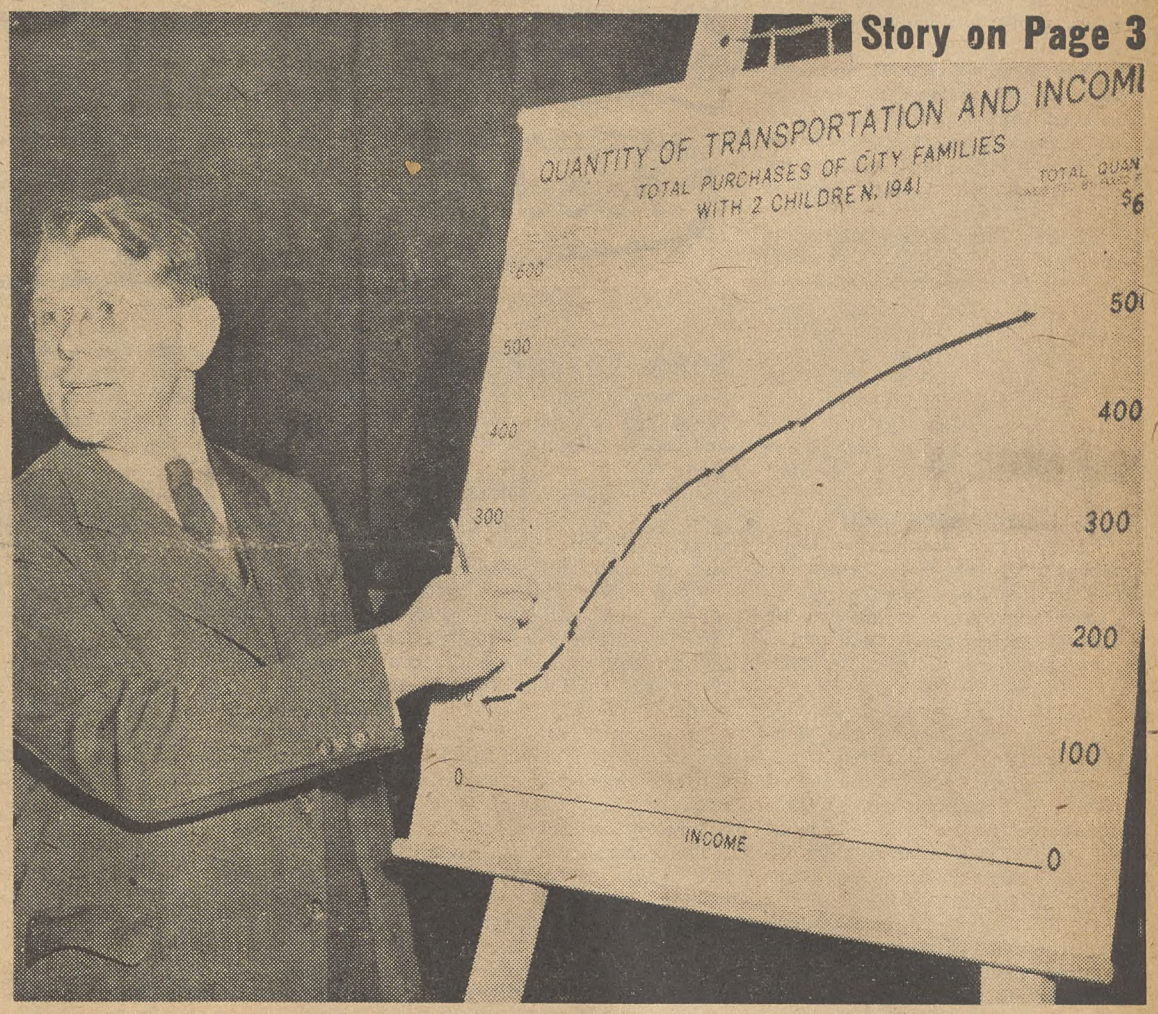
"FAMILY BUDGET" PROVES PAY RISES MUST BE WON



Story on Page 3

Cause and Effect: Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), one of the senators who was in on the death of OPA, looks—shall we say quizzically—as Ewan Clague (right) explains the transportation cost factor in the BLS' "City Worker's Family Budget." Clague was appearing before a sub-committee session of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report. The chart represents, in a rather complicated fashion, the amount of income a person spends on transportation. If you look closely, you'll see a point where arrows going down become arrows going up. That, according to BLS is a sort of breaking point. The BLS average guy spends that much; if you make less, your arrow goes down. If you make more, it goes up, it says there. Clague also exhibited other charts to demonstrate BLS' case.

Biz Tries To Give Profits 'New Look'

Big U. S. corporations are trying to kid the public into believing that business is not making the largest profits in history. It's a neat trick if they can get away with it, but CIO economists expose the sleight-of-hand performance in the Economic Outlook.

Inflation . . . . 1 Congress 0

Under Taft's leadership, Senate pushed through a tap-on-the-wrist rebuke to high prices... The bill, which the House later passed, carries out four mildest points of Pres. Truman's 10-point program. Red-blooded legislation is still needed; Congress acted to selfish ends.

BIG BIZ TRIES TO "HIDE" PROFITS

CIO Outlook Uncovers Scheme

LARGE American corporations are attempting to make their profits—the largest in history—do a "disappearing act" in order to lull public criticism, the CIO Economic Outlook charged last week in its December issue.

The Outlook, published by the CIO Department of Research and Education, voiced severe criticism of recent advertisements by large corporations which seek to minimize their profits by publicizing a low profit rate based on annual sales.

Figures assembled by the Outlook on seven large corporations showed that while profit returns on sales volume ranged between 2.5% and 7.9%, the profit return on net worth varied between 10.7% and 25.5%.

Business has "good reason to conceal this success—a success made possible by NAM-engineered inflation," the Outlook commented. "If the true profit picture is made known to the American people, there will no longer be any doubt in their minds as to who is responsible for the inflation. The sham of blaming labor and the farmer will be exposed."

Run Around

On the same basis, the Outlook said there was "no excuse for price increases except greed. Prices shot up and led to the highest profits of all time and a lower standard of living for most Americans."

Profit rates estimated on this basis are meaningless, the Outlook said, pointing out that "businessmen have always measured profits by relating them to their investment" since "this tells what the return is on each dollar invested." This method of profit computation shows a much higher rate of return to corporations than the more-publicized device of relating profits to sales volume, the Outlook added.

The magazine recalled that the method of comparing profits to investment, or net worth, "has always been the key figure in all corporation financial reports, tax returns and stockholder reports. The courts and government commissions very seldom even consider any other profit measure. This is the measure which allows comparison of profitability of one year to another, or one industry to another industry.

"It is only when presenting high profit figures to the innocent public that corporations make no mention of this profit measure," the Outlook commented.

A second method of computing profitability, the Outlook said, is by relating profits to "value added," which represents the total sales of the company less purchases from other firms for raw materials or services.

Using either of these methods, the CIO publication said, gives an accurate profit rate picture far higher than that which the companies are seeking to sell to the public.

In a chart entitled "Now You See 'Em, Now You Don't," the Outlook applied the three yardsticks to the profits of Armour & Company for 1946.

The company, it said, admitted net profits after taxes of $20½ million, but hid an additional $9½ million "reserve against inventory losses." This type of "clever accounting trick is forbidden by the Treasury for tax purposes," the CIO bulletin said, and the reserve has value only as a brake against sudden price drops. It added that meat company economists agree with the Agriculture Department that such a price fall is unlikely, and charged that the "reserve, therefore, is a deliberate device to distort the profit picture of the corporation."

Using a $30 million profit figure for Armour in 1946, the CIO economic publication pointed out that profits as a percent of sales were only 2.6%—and that this figure has been widely publicized by the company. Profits as a percentage return on net worth, however, amounted to 15.7%, and to 17% as a percent of added value.

The percentage figures for six other companies were also listed by the Outlook on the three methods of computation:

Company	% on Sales	% on Net Worth	% on Add. Val.
General Electric (9 months, 1947)	6.9%	20.8%	13.8%
General Motors (9 months, 1947)	7.9%	19.9%	24.3%
U. S. Steel (9 months, 1947)	7.7%	10.7%	12.5%
General Foods (9 months, 1947)	5.8%	16.5%	17.2%
General Mills (year ended 5/31/47)	2.5%	12.4%	9.5%
Lerner Stores Corp. (year ended 1/31/47)	4.3%	25.5%	41.7%

From the Guild Reporter

HARD TO CONCEAL: While big U. S. corporations conduct an advertising campaign to show they are not making record high profits, the financial pages of the press give the show away. The CIO Outlook reports: "Prices shot up and led to the highest profits of all time and a lower standard of living for the American people. Since that time, the farmer, the industrial worker and the salary earner have all been trying to keep up with prices." This collection of headlines gives big business' show away and proves that double talk by NAM and other business spokesmen can't hide the facts.

G O P HOPES TO SELL MEANINGLESS ANTI-INFLATION BILL TO VOTERS

EVERYBODY tried to get into the act last week as the Senate passed by a 77-10 vote a weak-kneed Republican bill which every one agrees won't do anything about inflation.

The House late last week passed the bill with majority leaders hopeful of building a record they can sell to the folks back home during Christmas vacation.

The Senate vote found traditional lines completely split, with three Republicans and seven Democrats voting against the Republican proposal. Most of the Democrats, seeking to avoid being challenged as supporters of inflation, voted for the bill.

A group of liberal and independent Senators opposed the bill as a meaningless gesture which would have no conceivable effect on prices. Among those opposing the bill were such liberal stalwarts as Morse (R., Ore.), and Democrats Chavez (N. M.), Hill (Ala.), Magnuson (Wash.), Murray (Mont.) and Thomas (Utah).

Before passage of the bill, the Republican majority beat down a series of amendments by Sen. Barkley (D., Ky.) designed to include Pres. Truman's program in the measure.

The bill, if passed by law, will authorize industry agreements to allocate basic materials without anti-trust prosecution if the pacts are approved by the Justice Dept.; will extend present export and transport controls, now due to die Feb. 29; and authorize a cut in the supply of grain to distillers until Feb. 1.

The bill bore the familiar Taft trademark. Sen. Barkley, leader of the Democrats in the upper house, said he voted for it only because "it was better than nothing." But he predicted Congress will have to come to grips with the inflation problem when the regular session starts.

Principal significance of the bill is its reflection of the concern felt by many Congressmen in both parties over the public's reaction to post-OPA inflation. Legislators who once boasted how they had killed price controls are now looking for a painless formula to bring prices down from the stratosphere.

None of them has yet found a magic phrase that will hypnotize the high cost of living, and many cannot hypnotize themselves to vote for price controls and rationing. Meanwhile, living costs continue to rise.

Hartley Does Spade Work For More Anti-Labor Laws

CALLS for more anti-labor legislation at the next session of Congress are being sounded by some Republican leaders.

Rep. Fred Hartley (R. N.J.), co-sponsor of the Taft-Hartley Law, opens hearings of the House Labor Committee Jan. 19. Up for consideration will be one of Hartley's favorite proposals—the outlawing of collective bargaining between a union and the management of more than one company at a time.

Hartley's proposal, described by its backers as a move to "break labor monopolies by stopping industry-wide bargaining," was knocked out of the T-H bill before it finally became law. But propaganda drums are being sounded in big business circles for enactment of the provision now.

Hartley, who has been stumping the country on a speaking tour, told a Kansas City advertising group that he wants to "go after" James Petrillo, head of the AFL musicians' union. The Jersey Congressman, who has said he will not seek re-election, voiced favor for a "right-to-work" bill which would make it a federal crime to "interfere with the civil rights of a worker to go to his own job."

Such a bill undoubtedly would be used by hostile employers as a strikebreaking weapon, union officials said.

Meanwhile, Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), who will face a strenuous campaign for re-election this fall, told Washington reporters the T-H bill—of which he was a prime mover—looks fine.

Ball, ignoring lots of things that have happened since last June, claimed that "no instance of a specific injustice created by the new law" has been called to the attention of the joint Congressional labor-management committee.

Ball said his group would like to hear from any individual or organization about any evidence of "specific inequities" in the T-H Law.

One of the big legislative campaigns—for weakening of the federal wage-hour law, with its provision for a 40c hourly minimum wage and for overtime after 40 hours a week—is also due to start in mid-January.

BLS BUDGET: STATISTICALLY GOOD, BUT DOESN'T SOLVE PROBLEM

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE long-awaited Bureau of Labor Statistics "Family Budget" doesn't claim to be the end-all solution for the American family's economic ills.

But, it does demonstrate that the prospect for the type of family used as a model, like the lot of a Gilbert and Sullivan's policeman, is not a happy one.

Here's why:

BLS, through its spokesman, Commissioner Ewan Clague, takes an "employed worker's family of four; husband, aged 38, who is the breadwinner; wife, aged 36, the homemaker; and two children, a boy 13 years of age in high school and a girl 8 in grade school."

The father is described as the "average worker in overalls," but t'aint necessarily so, since BLS says professional workers, presumably teachers, etc., are included.

BLS then lists budgets for 34 key cities. The detailed breakdown on the budget gives the following evidence that the family has little opportunity for outside interests and few prospects for the children's future advancement:

- There is no item for savings.
- There is no item for college education for either of the children. (Note that the boy would presumably be eligible for college within three years.)
- The family has no phone.
- Mr. Hoover's "two cars in every garage" gets a rude awakening: If the worker now has no car, there is no prospect of ever buying one; if he does have a car, he has no hope of ever replacing it.
- There is no allowance for beer —which is a source of relaxation for many workers. And, no hard liquor, bub.
- There is an allowance for 38.5 razor blades a year—which would mean the daily-shaving man would have to get an average of 9.7 shaves on each blade.
- The family is allowed only one daily and one Sunday newspaper —365 a year—and 32 magazines. The latter means the family could not subscribe to one of the weekly magazines—Time, Life, Saturday Evening Post, Colliers, etc.
- The four would rarely, perhaps no more often than every three or four years, get a vacation trip out of town.
- Husband and wife would share 167 packages of cigarettes a year (that's considerably less than a half pack a day between them); the husband could supplement his smoking with 38 cigars a year and 20 small cans of pipe tobacco.

(An informal check of 10 persons at the CIO office showed that one didn't smoke, six smoked a pack a day or 365 a year; one smoked a half-pack a day or 183 a year; one smokes 260 cans of tobacco a year; the 10th 130 a year. None smoked a cigar often enough to make any difference. The average cigarettes for the 10 would be 237 packs a year; the average smoking tobacco would be 39 cans. But, eight of the 10 have wives who smoke 350 packs a year; figure out for yourself what that does to the cigarette average.)

- The New Look doesn't even get a look-see. The wife could buy only one heavy coat, with fur, every six years and one heavy coat, without fur, every eight years.

WHILE all this is indicative that the budget is well out of line with the American ideal of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," the report, in its limitations, was further proof that Congress has done badly by BLS's vital services in the matter of appropriations.

BLS, with all the faults of its conclusions, has provided valuable statistics here; BLS, according to Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, should be given funds sufficient to do a complete job.

Clague explained the BLS budget first to an advance press conference of Washington correspondents and the next day appeared before the Western subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Clague explained that 34 major cities of the U. S. had been used for the study. The various budgets for the cities showed that Washington was the most expensive (you're telling us, says the CIO News staff) and New Orleans the lowest.

But, surprising to anyone outside the labor movement is the fact that except for New Orleans, Southern cities are not necessarily the cheapest in which to live. For instance, Mobile, Ala.; Norfolk, Va.; Memphis, Tenn., and Birmingham, Ala., rate along with Los Angeles in the list. But, another Pacific Coast city, Seattle, comes in second, hot on the heels of Washington and well ahead of the third city, New York.

In the lowest five, three are mid-continental cities—Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Kansas City, Mo.—and two are Southern or Southwest — New Orleans and Houston, Tex. By some unexplained statistics, the budget for Philadelphia, third largest city in the nation and largest in Pennsylvania, is $88 a year lower than that for Pittsburgh, second largest city in the State.

The Family: The four, according to BLS, live in a rented house or apartment, of five rooms, including kitchen and bathroom. There is electricity; the heating equipment should keep the room temperature at 70 degrees in winter; the dwelling is within reasonable commuting distance of major centers of work; the wife does all housework without any paid assistance, even laundry.

The food budget: BLS says this provides a diet that approximates the nutritional allowance recommended by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council. The specific foods and quantities "are not the selections of experts who may know much more about the 'best buys'; it may be possible to serve meat for dinner several times a week; if cheaper cuts are served on weekdays, a chicken or roast may be served on Sunday, a turkey on Thanksgiving."

Clothing: The budget "provides for variations in localities of distinctly different climate." Here's what can be bought:

"For the husband: one heavy wool suit every 2 years, one light wool suit every 3 years; five shirts and two pairs of shoes each year.

"For the wife (in addition to the coats): four dresses and three pairs of shoes each year.

"For the boy: one sweater, or jacket, two pairs of trousers, and three pairs of shoes each year.

"For the girl: one snow suit or heavy coat each two years, four dresses and four pairs of shoes each year."

Transportation: "Includes travel to work and high school and trips to shop, churches, movies, meetings, social visits. A trip out of town every 3 or 4 years for a vacation or to visit relatives; the auto appears to be less important in New York . . . Chicago . . . Philadelphia; there, travel is assumed to be by public transportation; in other large cities, families are assumed to have a car."

Movies: Husband, wife and daughter attend once every three weeks; son once every two weeks.

Other needs: Taxes, etc.; a small amount for personal insurance; union, etc., dues, church, etc., contributions.

Reporters reminded Clague and the other BLS officials that BLS figures show the average industrial worker makes less than $51 a week, which would be about $2,600 a year, or $400 below the estimated total cost of the budget for New Orleans, lowest city listed. The reporters wanted to know what happens to the average worker and what happens even to the worker making the budget figure if prices continue to rise. The answer: "they lower standards or go into debt; maybe they borrow on insurance or something else."

(Some union officials were quoted later as putting it more bluntly: "They'll either starve a little bit, or they'll borrow some more; what happens when they reach the end of borrowing capacity and more is still neded, God only knows.")

Families of more than four: The report stated that " a method for estimating costs of families of other sizes will be presented in a supplementary publication.

"In summary, however, the dollar costs of goods and services for a family of two persons is about 65% of the costs for a family of four; a family of three persons is about 84% of the costs for the four-person family; and for a family of five, about 114% of the total for a four-person family." For instance, in Kansas City — that's a low town — the estimated total costs and services for June, 1947, would be:

2-person family	$1780
3-person family	2301
4-person family	2739
5-person family	3122

Reporters posed Clague a hypothetical problem: Suppose all the workers now making the industrial average of $2600 improved their lot so that they came up to the total cost figure of the budget —using a median city, Los Angeles, as an example—to an annual income of $3251.

Wouldn't that, the reporters conjectured, tend to cause an inflationary rise in the total costs of goods and services required? Wouldn't that occur if the present system of no rationing and no price controls continued?

The BLS officials thought that well might be.

One reporter asked Clague how about the famous Heller Committee report?

The Heller Committee, set up by the University of California, used San Francisco as its "guinea pig" in a study of what a family of four—man, wife, two kids—needed in a budgetary way.

(The Heller report found that $75 a week would be needed in San Francisco, compared to $65 under the BLS Plan.)

BLS officials answered: "The Heller report includes 'aspirations'; our report is on present conditions and needs."

(Two days later, Walter Reuther, head of the CIO Auto Workers, spoke at the Washington Press Club. Reuther said that what his members wanted was enough to live and save on; enough to give their kids an education and enough to play around a little and that Congress, by failing to take action against prices, was depriving working people of those objectives. One reporter remarked: "That's what BLS and the Heller Committee need to make a real family budget.")

Rieve: 'Proof Higher Wages Are Needed'

EMIL RIEVE, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, commenting on the testimony of BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague, said:

"The BLS family 'budget' is proof that higher wages, better social security benefits and full employment guarantees are an economic must.

"The budget, we think, is too low—it hardly meets a 'necessary minimum.'

"Nothing is allowed for savings —although the boy is approaching college age—nor for insurance which would provide cash benefits during an illness.

"The food budget, $20 a week, actually allows only 24c a meal for each of the four in the family. The diet would be modest, with only six loaves of bread a week, 9 pounds of meat and 12 quarts of milk.

"It is obvious that families with more than two children would require a substantially higher income. If the mother has to work outside to help make ends meet, the children are likely to suffer and the additional costs result which are not allowed in the budget.

"With all its faults, the BLS in this budget summation has performed a valuable service in increasing the nation's knowledge of how people live. So, BLS should be given adequate funds for further exploration of this problem."

(Note that the rise in costs for Washington (up $473), the highest city, and New Orleans (up $31), the lowest city show that the inflationary pressure is almost the same in every urban city.

(Washington's expensive life is explained in part by housing. It costs 9% more than the second biggest housing city, Chicago, and 35% more than New Orleans).

What Is Needed

Note to BLS:

The average American industrial worker, making a little more than $50 a week, would have to make $15—or 30%—more to live up to the BLS "modest but adequate" budget and would need $25—or 50%—more to live up to the Heller Committee budget.

Differential?

In answer to a questioner who wanted to know if eating habits differed in various parts of the country, Dorothy Brady, BLS Cost of Living Division chief, said:

"Basically, people all over the country eat just about the same food. In the South, many people eat corn meal and fatback, not because they like it, but because they are too poor to afford anything else."

Christmas Bird!

The spirit of Christmas is in the air this week.

And so are turkey prices in the air—high up. Late last week, with the worst yet to come, prices of turkeys were running as high as 10 cents above the Thanksgiving price. That means a 20-pound turkey would cost $2 more than at the last holiday.

Win 16c Increase For Plane Mechanics

Members of the Air Transport Division, CIO Transport Workers, have ratified an agreement with the American Airlines calling for a wage increase of 16c an hour. Ten cents of the increase is retroactive to July 1, 1947.

WORST IS YET TO COME?

Many persons got the notion that business and industry—and their spokesmen in Congress—would take a breather after enactment of the Taft-Hartley Law.

It was a foolish notion—as events have demonstrated.

Rep. Hartley says the law which he and Senator Taft co-authored should be made more rigid. It should contain a ban on industry-wide bargaining and it should guarantee "freedom to work," says Hartley.

McGraw-Hill, the big publishing house, is now running a series of ads in the newspapers, advocating abolition of industry-wide negotiations and the application of anti-trust laws to unions.

Representatives of business and industry have been whittling away steadily at the Wage-Hour Law, which guarantees workers only $16 for a 40-hour week.

Attempts are being made to lengthen the work week and to eliminate the payment of overtime for the first six hours beyond the 40-hour week.

All of this has been going on during a period in which the cost of living has been increasing steadily and profits have been climbing to record heights.

It's a complete waste of time to look behind these events for a hidden, mysterious plot. The events speak for themselves and they tell:

1. Business and industry engaged in a successful political action campaign which resulted in a Republican-controlled Congress.

2. This Congress imposed sharp limitations on trade unions in an effort to weaken them and make them ineffective.

3. Enactment of the T-H Act was merely the "first round" and there is more—and worse—planned for the future.

4. Business and industry generally are following a policy of "getting while the getting's good."

It should be easy to understand why the CIO has mapped out two major programs for 1947.

It is going to conduct a campaign for substantial wage increases simply because its members have got to have more money to maintain a decent standard of living.

It is going to conduct a political action campaign in an effort to retire to private life men who have used their legislative powers to weaken the trade union movement.

ARGUMENT IN REVERSE

We keep harping on the subject of high prices because it's one that comes to mind every time we spend a buck for something we used to buy for 50 cents.

The angle we want to touch on this week is the effort of some industry spokesmen to sell the public the idea that high prices were the result of inflation, not the cause.

And we'll make it brief by simply stating that nobody has been able to find an industry spokesman who will argue that reduced prices wouldn't bring about a bit of deflation.

One thing the Governor of North Carolina didn't say to the Governor of South Carolina: "Let's not take in borders."

Should We Play 'Santa' to Those Who Need Our Help?

By ALLAN L. SWIM

OF course, we could let inhabitants of war-torn nations try to pull themselves out of the economic mire by their own boot-straps.

This might result in widespread starvation, rioting and bloodshed—and it might set the stage for the beginning of another war.

But it would ease our own economic burden and it would please those who keep repeating, "Uncle Sam shouldn't play Santa Claus to a Europe that hasn't got enough sense to stay out of trouble."

Yes, it would please opponents of the Marshall Plan and it would delight the isolationists.

SANTA CLAUS delivers ermine wraps to the rich and baskets of groceries to the poor—which means that Santa isn't always the same guy.

Nobody is proposing a long-range "ermine wrap" treatment for the war-torn nations. The CIO wants our nation to send "baskets of groceries" to those who are in great need—and in those "baskets" it would place the implements by which the needy could rehabilitate themselves.

FORGET for a moment the complexities of Europe and the difficulties of designing a long-range aid program that would bring the desired results.

Suppose, just for the sake of argument, that a great disaster befell one-third of our total farming area, destroying crops, seed, feed, buildings, fertilizer, implements and savings.

We would rush emergency aid to the stricken. We would obtain seed, fertilizer and implements—if they could be secured anywhere in the world—and make them available to those in the devastated area.

We would tell ourselves—and rightly so—that we could not afford to have such a large area out of production.

From a practical standpoint, the United States cannot permit large segments of the world to remain out of production for long.

THERE is a ready-made answer for those who claim Europe should be permitted to stew in its own juice: The last time it happened the stewing was followed by fighting.

And no war is won until the peace is reasonably secure.

We in the United States are having troubles that cause us great concern.

We're in debt. Our taxes are high. The cost if living is up. We have a critical housing shortage. We have a steel shortage.

But we're in fine shape compared with the rest of the world. Employment is at a record high. Our production is great. Business is booming.

Ours is the only nation in a position to provide the foreign aid that is needed.

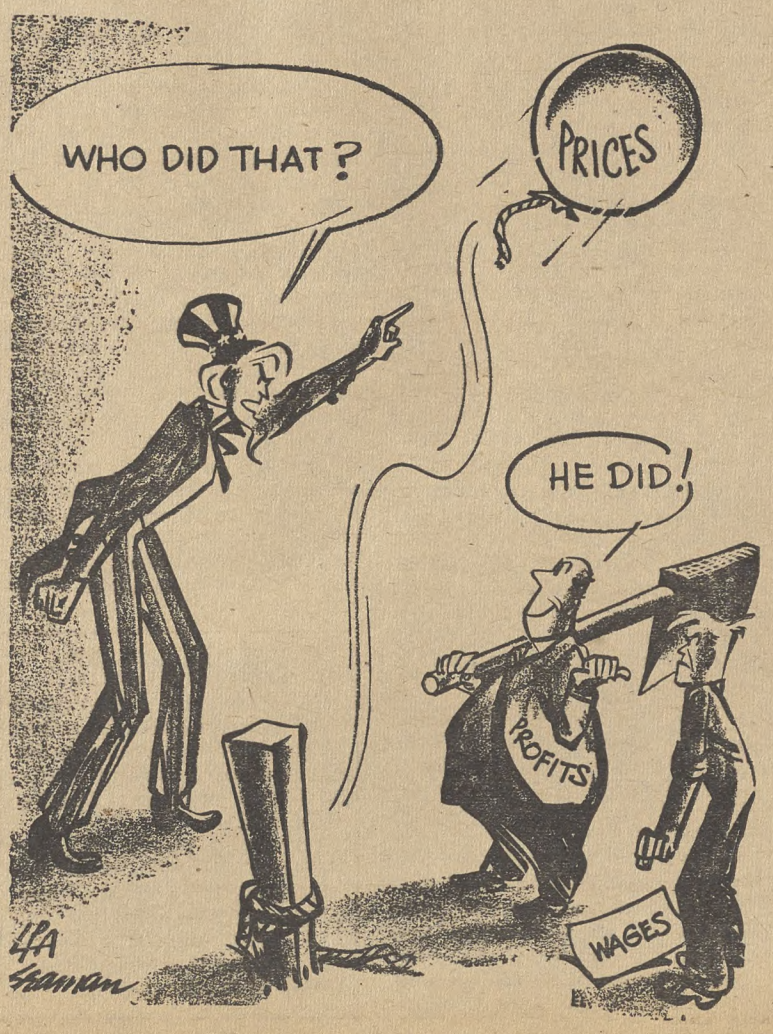
MEMBERS of Congress and officials of the State Department are not going to finance the aid we provide to war-torn nations. The financing will be done out of taxes collected from all of the people.

So the people should speak their minds on the subject—and speak them freely.

They should tell Congress whether they want to play Santa Claus in a reasonable manner or whether they want to reject the pleas for help.

They should tell Congress whether they want our aid program used as a political weapon or as a weapon to prevent economic collapse abroad.

And they should be prepared to face the consequences—and the expense—of any course of action chosen.



Greek Labor Law Brings Protests

WIDE publicity has been given to a new law, passed Dec. 8 by the Greek Parliament, which outlaws strikes, provides severe penalties, and threatens the death penalty for strike leaders. Announcement of the legislation has caused widespread rumblings of protest in union ranks, both in the United States and abroad.

Information received by Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, gives some additional light on events that led to the strikebreaking law.

During the autumn, while the Greek government was fighting the guerrilla forces in the north, a national wage policy committee was formed in Athens, capital of Greece. On the committee were spokesmen for unions, employers and cabinet officers whose problems are concerned with labor-management relations.

One by-product of the committee's work was a series of collective bargaining agreements—the first since before the fascist Metaxas regime came to power before the war. The agreements, covering workers in several industries, raised wages by some 19%.

Shortly after these agreements had been worked out, the government was thrown into a state of panic by a threatened strike of public utility workers. This union is headed by one Makris, a right-wing labor leader and an influential member of the Greek Parliament.

Makris asked for a higher wage boost for his utility union than was received by the other unions. The strike threat was made at about the same time that the Greek government was casting an anxious eye at the general strikes in France and Italy.

Apparently seized with a fit of hysteria, the Greek cabinet pushed through Parliament a vicious anti-strike law providing penalties which range from six months to life imprisonment, and in certain cases provide the death penalty for labor leaders.

In the face of well-merited protests against this use of brute force in handling disputes over workers' income, the Greek government hastened to announce that the law is limited to "emergencies which jeopardize the national interest."

But this is obviously a face-saving device which scarcely will undo the damage caused by repressive legislation.

It is expected that labor unions in the United States and throughout the democratic world will voice strenuous criticism of this law, and will seek to impress the Greek government with the criminal foolishness of its action, and to remind that government of the adverse effects of its policy on the still new democratic trade union movement of that country.

Workers and governments throughout the democratic world have long since realized that harsh, brutal and unjustified legislation of this sort never serves any policy except to create ill will and conflict.

If the Greek government wishes to see the development of a democratic, responsible labor movement, it will quickly repeal the December 8 law. Responsibility and respect are never won with a whip or a gallows.

They Had Many Things In Common

IT was one of those chance meetings that have unexpected consequences.

John Raber had devoted most of his time to his 700-acre farm near Bristol, Ind.

Clement Nitka was kept busy serving as president of United Paperworkers Local 1049 and as chairman of the Elkhart County (Ind.) CIO Council.

Raber and Nitka got together—purely by chance—back in February 1945. After kicking the conversational ball back and forth for a while Nitka invited Raber to the next meeting of the CIO Council.

NITKA and Raber pointed out at the meeting that farmers and city workers have much in common.

Raber said that "other groups" kept farmers and industrial workers apart.

"If we got together," Raber said, "we could achieve much and keep America from being divided into separate classes such as exist in countries like India."

Before the meeting ended it was decided that the council's Executive Board would meet with County Farm Bureau directors and discuss "the things both of us have in common."

THE joint meeting opened in an atmosphere of mutual distrust—but this soon disappeared.

The two groups decided to form a Rural-Urban Council with an Advisory Committee set up to prepare programs for Council meetings.

The Committee was to be composed of five representatives from each of four groups— the Farm Bureau, CIO, AFL and National Grange.

Nitka and George Neff, County Farm Bureau chairman, were elected co-chairmen of the Council. Both still hold office.

The Council started holding regular meetings, with one session each three months converted into a mass meeting for the public.

THE Council's Economic Committee suggested late in the summer of 1945 that a co-op be established.

The Council approved the suggestion, filed articles of incorporation, bought a small grocery store in Bristol and hired a manager.

The store paid a 9% patronage refund on sales and 4% interest on stock during its first year of operation. Sales during 1947 were much greater than during the previous year.

A few weeks ago the Rural-Urban Co-op board of directors authorized the establishment of a co-op store in Elkhart.

DURING the late summer of 1947 the drive to enact the Taft-Hartley Act got under way.

It was then that labor decided a stepped-up political action campaign would be needed.

And it was on Nov. 1 that the Elkhart County Farm Bureau adopted a resolution expressing its desire to—

". . . collaborate with other groups of similar aims and purposes for the purpose of encouraging suitable candidates agreed upon, to announce for principal offices on major party tickets for all suitable offices, especially legislative offices in the State and National Congress."

EVIDENCE that the Farm Bureau took the meaning of co-operation seriously is revealed in another portion of the resolution, which says:

"We protest the action of the National Farm Bureau Board in supporting the passage of the Taft-Hartley labor law. We believe that such action was uncalled for."

Raber's comment on what resulted from his meeting with Nitka is:

"Here, in Elkhart County, we are proving that farmers and city workers can join together for the benefit of all of us."

'To Make The Marshall Plan Succeed, Drop UMT Proposal'

THE following statement has been issued by these well-known clergymen and educators: the Rev. Allan P. Farrell, S. J., associate editor of "America"; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor emeritus, Riverside Church, New York; Rabbi Harry Gordis, professor, Jewish Theological Seminary; Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president, Howard Univ.; Dr. Alonzo F. Myer, professor, New York Univ.; Dr. Ralph McDonald, secretary, department of higher education, Natl. Education Association.

"America must choose either to help reconstruct Europe or to pass compulsory military training. It cannot do both without injuring the American economy. During the next four years the Marshall Plan will cost the U. S. about 20 billion dollars. Peacetime conscription would cost in all close to 20 billion.

"The yearly cost of conscription would be between three and five billion dollars, according to an article in the 'Readers Digest' by Hanson Baldwin.

"Aid to Europe will, of course, provide markets for American products as well as prevent the growth of Communism. Communism is unlikely to spread among people whose needs are being met.

"Universal military training, far less frightening than the atom bomb, would neither scare Russia nor prevent the growth of Communism, if all our other vast military preparations have not produced these results. Instead, it would withdraw much needed labor from the production of consumer goods in this country.

"IF we cannot add three to five billion dollars each year to our military expenditures without the possibility of economic collapse, it would be folly to pass conscription.

"Not only must a choice be made between reconstruction and conscription, but if the Marshall Plan is going to cost about 20 billion dollars, there ought to be a reasonable assurance that it will succeed. Insistence on the passage of compulsory military training now would certainly imply lack of confidence in the Marshall Plan.

"Moreover, a provocative move like the adoption of conscription would seem to imply that the reconstruction of Europe was just another aspect of the power struggle between Russia and America and not really intended to help achieve peace.

"To give the Marshall Plan of reconstruction the best possible chance to succeed the proposal for compulsory military training should be dropped."

CIO is People

CIO isn't just a bunch of initials. It isn't something far away. CIO is your neighbor, or the fellow who lives on the lease, in the camp, or in the house next door, or down the street.

The family next to you at church, your friend in the lodge, the people you see in the stores—it's folks like these who make up CIO in East Texas . . .

When folks think of East Texas, they think of oil. And when you think of oil, think of the people who drill, produce, pipe and refine the oil—members of the Oil Workers International Union, CIO. Men and women working day in and day out in a most hazardous industry so that your car can run . . .

CIO is just that in East Texas.

East Texas' future depends on good wages and decent working conditions. That is what CIO is for. That's why many of your fellow citizens belong to CIO unions.

So the next time you read about 'dictators' who run unions, just remember your CIO neighbors. You'll find that CIO unions are run by the members, that they are democratic right down to the core. You'll find that there are no fat union treasuries, that dues are reasonable, and that there are no highly paid officers.

(From leaflet, "Meet Your CIO Neighbors, the East Texas Oil Workers," published by Oil Workers International Union.)

Rand Case Is Clarified By Denham

ROBERT N. Denham, general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, has clarified his "proceed at your own risk" statement in the Remington Rand—CIO Electrical Workers case.

His action undermines the strategy of Rand, which had used the statement to justify refusal to bargain with UE. The union agreement with Rand, reached after a strike last summer, runs until April, 1949.

UE announces it has informed the company it is prepared to confer at once on collective bargaining matters for the 10,000 employes. Otherwise, warned UE, Rand must take responsibility for the probable result, "industrial unrest."

LAST week, the UE executive board voted to throw the full weight of its international organization behind Rand employes.

At the same time the union wired its support to striking AFL printers in Chicago.

Following the two-day board meeting UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald announced plans for a Jan. 5-6 wage conference of several hundred delegates represent-

Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) last week drew attention to the Rand situation on the Senate floor.

THE Denham clarification came as a result of an exchange of correspondence between CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman and Denham.

Pressman ponited out in his letter that Rand had contended that it was prevented by T-H from dealing with a union which had chosen not to use NLRB facilities. The company, Denham said, also contended that it could refuse to honor an existing contract with the union or enter into any future contract even though such contracts would not include a union security provision. In his letter Pressman pointed out that T-H did not justify the position of the company and suggested that the statement which the company attributed to Denham had no foundation in fact.

BUSY POLICEMEN: Policemen (above) are too busy saluting the American flag even to think of interfering with this parade of the strike sympathizers. Mass. Council Calls For More PAC Activity, Hears Carey on WFTU

THE Massachusetts CIO last week called for all-out drives to intensify political activity and to achieve wage increases to meet inflated living costs.

Some 600 delegates to the state CIO annual convention at Boston adopted 18 resolutions concerned principally with these two aspects of the CIO program. The main resolutions sought repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, wage boosts, full employment, support of the CIO-PAC, repeal of state anti-labor laws and improved social security.

The five top officers of the Council were unanimously re-elected. They are: Joseph Salerno, president; J. William Belanger, secretary-treasurer; Salvatore Camelio, Michael Ryan, and Leo N. Messier, vice presidents.

The CIO's role in the World Federation of Trade Unions and the U. S. role in creating world stability were emphasized by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey. Referring to the CIO's effort ot promote support for the Marshall Plan within the WFTU, Carey stated:

"If anyone is in conflict with the basic aims of the Marshall Plan, he then is also in conflict with the democratic aims of both the WFTU and the CIO."

Aid under the program should not be given "as a means of coercing free but needy people in the exercise of their rights of independence and self-government or to fan the flames of civil warfare," Carey said.

Hitting at those who term the plan a Wall Street proposal, Carey pointed to Sen. Robert A. Taft and other big business spokesmen who are opposed to the Marshall Plan and asked: "Who speaks for Wall Street? Is it Taft, or is it the CIO?"

Mechanics of a successful PAC organization were outlined by Natl. CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll, who urged intensification of the PAC contribution drive.

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers also concentrated on the necessity for union members' activity on the political front to protect gains made on the economic front. "Unions," he stated, "cannot dictate to the Congress of the U. S. But the people of the U. S. can dictate to the Congress. Either the people will or the NAM will."

Los Angeles CIO Fights Blacklist

A fight against the Hollywood blacklist pattern as a probable model for all industry is under way in Los Angeles, with the CIO Council heading the attack.

To rally public support against the blacklist pattern, the Council sponsored a delegated conference. Invitations were sent to all AFL, CIO, Railroad Brotherhood unions and community organizations to send representatives.

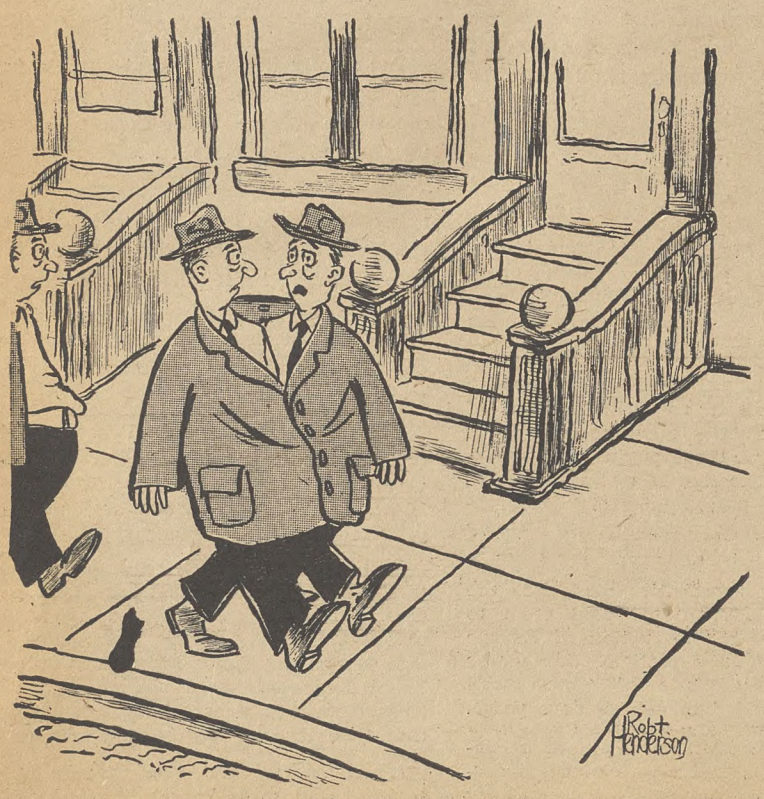
Speakers for the conference included George Roberts, Rubber Workers district director and national PAC coordinator for California; Albert Maltz, one of the writers blacklisted; Joe DeSilva, AFL Retail Clerks secretary; William S. Lawrence, ILWU regional director and council PAC chairman, and Philip M. Connelly, council secretary-treasurer.

The Payoff

Rep. James W. Wadsworth, Republican from Genesco, N. Y., got up in the U. S. House last week and suggested that members of Congress contribute to the world's needy by giving up the $222,000 travel allowance they get for attending this extra session.

He got a big hand from Congressmen present.

But when the vote came, the "No's" could be heard all the way to the cashier's window, according to PM. The vote was 143-to-27.



Saving on clothes is not such a good idea, after all.

Giant Line CIO Reply To Police Curb

A line of pickets 1000 strong marched for two hours before the gates of the Hershey Metal Products Co., Dec. 12, as a challenge to state police on the question of picketing rights. The demonstration was staged by the Connecticut CIO council in support of the four-month-old strike of the CIO Steelworkers. Police attempted no interference with the picketing, despite intimations that they would, according to Labor Press Associates.

Occasion for the demonstration was an earlier interference with picketing by state police. On Nov. 26 the state CIO council sent pickets to the Hershey plant to support the strikers. While the line was moving past the gates, cars of strikebreakers and scabs suddenly drove out of the plant yard, and before the pickets could get out of the way, several were knocked down.

Two pickets, to prevent being run over, had to leap onto the hoods of cars. One was carried a quarter of a mile and at the end of his wild ride, was beaten up with a black-jack by the strikebreakers.

Local authorities called for state police. When state troopers arrived they limited pickets to three, despite the fact that the picketing had been wholly peaceful and that all the disorder and violence had been acts of strikebreakers.

The action of the police was protested to the Governor and a few days later, at the state CIO convention, the call was issued for a new, mass demonstration to test the rights of picketing. With 1000 pickets—representing all international unions of the CIO in Connecticut—showing up, the demonstration was the biggest thing of its kind ever staged by Connecticut labor, council officials said.

Issue Pamphlet To Aid Santo

THE story of a war veteran who was "good enough" to fight and die for his country if need be, but not "good enough to live in it," is told in a new illustrated pamphlet, "John Santo, American," just published by a defense committee of the CIO Transport Workers Union, 153 West 64th St., New York, 23, N. Y.

The pamphlet (which sells for 10 cents) opens the union's national campaign to defeat the attempt to deport Santo, National Director of the TWU, as an "undesirable alien."

"There is no decency, no fair play, no justice in these deportation proceedings," CIO Pres. Murray declares in a foreword to the pamphlet.

Santo, born in 1908 in a part of Hungary now belonging to Rumania, came to the United States when he was 19. He has applied for citizenship repeatedly since 1935, first as a civilian, later as a soldier in World War II, and finally as a veteran with more than three years service. Each time his application was turned down.

Real reason behind the efforts to deport Santo, the pamphlet charges, lies in his continuous fight through the union, to improve wages and working conditions of New York City's subway and bus employes. That these activities are the real "crimes" held against him by powerful interests seeking to get him deported, states the TWU pamphlet, is shown by the number of times he has been arrested at the height of a strike or a union drive for higher wages.

In 1941, for instance, following the winner of the big bus strike, "the ink had scarcely dried on the contract guaranteeing the strikers' gains," reports the pamphlet, "when John Santo, one of the leaders of the strike, was in handcuffs on his way to Ellis Island." Another time, in September 1947, while Santo was actively preparing for a bus strike, he was suddenly arrested.

'Newspapers Without News'

CHICAGO newspaper publishers are ushering in a new era in journalism—"newspapers without news."

In an effort to break the month-old strike of the AFL Typographical Union, the Chicago publishers are using a process that so delays the publication of news that it has little news value, according to the Guild Reporter, publication of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

The Guild paper states that few news pages contain copy prepared less than 12 hours before publication.

"Much of it is 24 to 48 hours old," the Reporter says. "One paper has placed all feature pages, including the movie page, on a deadline four days ahead of publication."

* * *

Why the Delay? The papers are being prepared by a combination of "varitype" and photo-engraving.

Before the varitype process is completed so that the typewritten characters fit into a column of type, the copy prepared in the editorial room must be typed twice. Headlines are written and sent to the art room where headlines are set by pasting individual letters together with Scotch tape.

Pasted pages are then made into zinc etchings into which engravings of pictures, and advertising displays are fitted.

* * *

Wasting Newsprint: Because the size of the typewriter characters, much additional space is required to print the same amount of news set in the linotype matchine's smaller type.

Family of Five Live in A Room

Holderman Files Charges

PRES. CARL HOLDERMAN of the New Jersey CIO Council last week filed charges with CIO Pres. Philip Murray against delegates who walked out of the recent State CIO convention.

In requesting an immediate public hearing, Holderman charged that the group had acted contrary to CIO policy by "refusing to support the Marshall Plan, which in essence, was supported by the recent CIO national convention, encouraging withdrawal from the State Council . . ." and "encouraging local unions to withdraw support of the adopted State CIO-PAC program."

In a report to Murray, Holderman stated that the majority of the delegates "urged that wherever right-wing candidates were available from an international union that such candidates should be supported . . .

"When it became apparent that the left-wing candidates would be defeated the leader of the Electrical Workers announced that their delegates were withdrawing from the convention and not participating in the vote. Whereupon, some delegates from that union, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Office & Professional Workers; Fur Workers and Packinghouse Workers withdrew."

Holderman reported that local unions of these unions have since been advised by their regional or district officers to withhold payment of all per capita tax to the State Council.

"In their statements," Holderman said, "they charge undemocratic practices and procedures. This we deny categorically. The voting procedures in this convention are the same as have been used for 10 years and at no time have any of the protesting unions made any attempts to change them."

The protesting group claimed that the Council had departed from its traditional practice of electing to the vice presidencies nominees selected by a caucus of each union. A majority report of the nominating committee had submitted the name of Ernest Polak as the UE representative instead of James McLeish, selected by UE caucus, and the report was upheld by the delegates who remained on the floor.

Five Prominent Vets Call Conference To Get Action On Housing Measures

FIVE prominent ex-GIs—two of them Congressmen—moved last week to promote and solidify veterans' support for the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill.

The group reported that it has addressed letters to the commanders of major veterans organizations requesting their participation in a veterans housing conference in Washington, D.C., on March 1-2. Sponsors of the conference are Rep. Kennedy (D.-Mass.), Rep Javits (R.-N. Y.); Robert F. Wagner, Jr. (son of Sen. Wagner, D.-N. Y.), New York Planning Commission; Paul R. McCauley, Kansas City Housing Authority, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., son of the late president.

Javits told a press conference that he was hopeful that 1500 veterans would participate and that no one veterans organization would be dominant.

He charged private enterprise with failure to produce sufficient houses to relieve the acute shortage suffered by lower and middle income families, adding that the only solution now is public housing.

Kennedy stated that the T-E-W bill was the only comprehensive solution yet proposed. Asked whether he believed workable the suggestion of Rep. Frank L. Sundstrom (R.-N. J.), chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Housing, that public housing be provided only for the "indigent and lower income group," Kennedy replied that no program without a comprehensive public housing provision for all groups would meet the problem.

Sundstrom's suggestion was contained in a recent report to the members of his housing committee.

Meanwhile tenant pressure on rent control gained momentum.

In Miami representatives of local tenants prepared to protest the Miami Rent Advisory Board's recommendation to raise area rents 15%, to be followed on March 1 by total decontrol.

M. M. Singer, of the Miami State CIO; Ann Abrams, Miami FDR Club, and Durmett Roth, Dade County Fair Rent Council, were scheduled to confer in Washington with Housing Expediter Tighe Wood, Secy. of the Treasury John Snyder and Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.). The delegation announced that it will urge Wood to veto the rent board's proposals.

Las week Florida State CIO Council Pres. Charles Smolikoff demanded removal of the advisory board members. "The whole board is packed with real estate people," he said. "They no more represent the people of Florida than do the duPonts."

Asks Civil Service For $750 Increase

A meeting in Washington, D.C., of 200 CIO Public Workers, representing 20,000 government employes, recently set the increase sought for civil service workers at $750 a year. A bill proposing the wage hike is being drafted for introduction in the regular session of Congress next year.

Living costs for government workers have risen 66% since their last wage boost two years ago, the union stated. Bills to up government salaries were introduced in the last session of Congress, but no action was taken. Public Workers in New York City, meanwhile, were seeking $600 annual raises for state employes. An eight-cent hourly increase was secured for 700 school lunch employes in the city.

UOPWA Wins Award

An arbitration award by Sidney A. Wolff recently granted CIO Office and Professional members at the Columbia Broadcasting Co. in New York City a $6 weekly wage raise. In addition, minimum rates were raised by $2 and $2.50 a week in the seven lower wage categories and the company was ordered to erect a fund equal to 1 percent of the weekly salary total to correct pay differentials among workers doing similar work.

Authorize Strike Against Three Cablegram Firms

A STRIKE at Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., the Commercial Cable Co. and the cables division of Western Union Telegraph Co., on Jan. 1 has been authorized by officers of the CIO Communications Workers and delegates representing the union members at the three companies.

Mackay and Commercial Cable are both subsidiaries of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. About 2500 workers would be affected by the walkout.

Negotiations began in mid-November, a union spokesman said. The contracts expire Dec. 31.

Union demands include a 30% wage increase and other benefits. Lawrence Kelly, ACA vice president in charge of the radio and cable division, accused the companies of "trying to squeeze more work at less pay out of fewer employes" and of trying to use the Taft-Hartley Law to reduce current standards. The union is among those which is boycotting the National Labor Relations Board.

ACA President Joseph P. Selly said he had requested the New York State Mediation Board to intervene. Although the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service has announced appointment of Walter Maggiolo to begin mediation efforts, Selly said that past experiences with the State Board had won the union's confidence and that the ACA therefore preferred its services. The company, however, did not receive the state board's mediation efforts with the same enthusiasm and refused to attend a meeting called by it.

The ACA's negotiations with Western Union for 7000 New York employes have also bogged down, and although the union has authorized a strike vote, no action has yet been taken.

Phila. Man Cleared Of Disloyalty Charge

Edward L. Fabrican, 36, Philadelphia, one of 12 government workers suspended in Philadelphia on charges of disloyalty to the U. S. has been reinstated to his previous job as chemist in the Philadelphia Naval Base.

The announcement was made by President Nathan L. Edelstein of the Philadelphia Council of the American Jewish Congress, which helped Fabrican prepare his appeal before the Loyalty Board of the shipyard, July 21st, following his dismissal. Fabrican was fired June 20 on five counts of disloyalty, all of which he denied. In a letter form Undersecretary of the Navy, W. John Kenney, dated December 2, 1947, Fabrican was absolved of the disloyalty charges.

DOCTORS KNIFE HEALTH PLAN AS SOP TO AMA

SOME 12,000 San Francisco city employes, who for eight years have benefited from a city health service system, are organizing to defend the plan from the knife of disapproving physicians.

Believed to be the only compulsory health plan for municipal employes in the U. S., the HSS has been upheld by proponents of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health insurance bill as an example of the advantages of such a program. It provides hospital and medical care for all city employes except war veterans, who receive care at Federal government expense, Christian Scientists and those who had obtained adequate health insurance before working for the city.

HSS lingered on the brink of extinction after 922 of the 1,000 doctors who served it resigned last month. The resignations were tendered en masse by the San Francisco County Medical Society with an explanatory letter. The walkout resulted from the plan's failure to grant municipal employes the "same freedom of choice to select the type of medical hospital care that is allowed the employes of the State of California and the City of Los Angeles," the letter said.

Dr. Alexander S. Keenan, HSS medical director, saw in the move an implementation of the American Medical Association's campaign against compulsory health insurance. The AMA strongly opposes the national W-M-D bill.

KEENAN charged the resignations stemmed from the "movement in the American Medical Association to kill compulsory health systems," adding that the association "felt that this system of city employes had to be destroyed."

Efforts to abolish HSS began last January with an article in the San Francisco County Medical Society's bulletin by Dr. Ralph Scorel, society chairman.

"We recommend that the so-called 'social experiment' which the medical profession of San Francisco has conducted with the Health Service System of San Francisco be terminated," he wrote.

"The medical profession has publicly professed to be unalterably opposed to compulsory health insurance, and as long as we continue to participate in this system, we are inconsistent, we are living a lie."

The following months the HSS treasury was heavily burdened by an "epidemic" among city employes. It received bills for 1160 days spent in hospitals by employes and doctor bills amounting to 35,847 units. During the previous February hospital days total 750 and doctors bills amounted to 26,000 units. Since the city was not in the throes of an epidemic, Dr. Kennan concluded the doctors were giving "too much medical service."

(Physicians are paid by a unit system under which each visit is valued at a given number of units.)

The strange "epidemic" prevailed through March and April. One HSS spokesman cited the case of a doctor who presented a bill for 41 professional visits in one month to a home where two children had simple cases of measles. The system's governing board refused to honor the bill until it was scaled down.

In May Dr. Kennan decided to stop what appeared to be obvious excesses. He sent a letter to each of the participating doctors stipulating that only emergency cases were to be sent to the hospital without his authorization, reminding his colleagues that the city had suffered no epidemic.

AFTER this the health of city employes apparently "improved" greatly, for the bills swung back to normal, but the medical society had been supplied the ammunition it needed. Photostatic copies of the letter were used as "proof" that the system was providing "second rate" medical attention.

In November the 922 resignations arrived, and the doctors insist that they will not return until a "voluntary" plan has been substituted.

Last week CIO and AFL unions joined with civil service organizations to fight for HSS through the "League to Uphold the Health Service System." Meanwhile some 85 medical stalwarts who stuck with the employes attempted to keep the system above water until the city's Board of Supervisors could determine its fate.

Textile Wins Five-Month Walkout

A 19-WEEK strike at the Ludlow (Mass.) Manufacturing Co. ended in victory for 900 CIO Textile Workers last week following a final 24-hour negotiating session with state and federal mediators in attendance.

The union reported it won an immediate 5c an hour increase and another 10c an hour effective Jan. 5, a minimum wage of 92c an hour, five paid holidays, seniority in layoffs, rehiring and transfers.

The strike began Aug. 5 when the company refused to go along with the New Bedford-Fall River wage rise pattern adopted by northern textile mills.

The wage settlement includes both the raise won last August by all New England cotton-rayon workers and the recently negotiated 10% increase for the same group.

Telephone Workers Will Issue Paper

Starting in January, the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee will publish an official monthly newspaper, it has been announced by Allan S. Haywood, TWOC chairman.

The newspaper, entitled the Telephone Organizer, will be edited at 401 Broadway in New York by Oscar Jager, who is also editor of the AUTW Voice. The paper will supplement existing journals of TWOC affiliates and is in no way intended to supplant them.

POLL SHOWS HOUSING PRICES WORRY VETS

NOW that the war has been over two years, what do veterans consider their outstanding problems? The Army Times wanted the answers, and conducted a poll of ex-servicemen to find out.

The magazine found that the really big problems are housing and the high cost of living—which are also bothering a sizeable portion of the entire population of these United States.

Fifty-nine per cent of the ex-GIs replied that housing is the biggest vets' problem, and 21% replied that the real worry was living costs and related matters such as inflation, price control and insufficient wages.

Here are some of the questions and the answers:

	Yes	No
Do you favor restoring Federal price controls on food, clothing, etc?	66.1%	33.9%
Do you favor continuing Federal rent controls beyond Feb. 29, 1948?	91.6	8.4
Do you favor Federal funds for large-scale vet housing projects?	80.8	19.2

Replies to other questions:

	Yes	No
Do you favor revision of the GI Bill to include substitute provisions for those not able to use present educational and loan benefits?	86.4%	13.6%
Do you favor direct Federal home loans to vets in place of loan guarantees?	84.0	16.0
Do you favor cost-of-living increases in GI allowances, pensions, etc?	90.0	10.0
Do you favor substituting a Federal cash bonus for the GI Bill?	50.1	49.9
Do you favor the proposed universal military training program?	86.7	13.3
Do you favor the Marshall Plan for aid to European countries?	70.3	29.7
Would you favor extending Marshall Plan to other parts of the world?	52.2	47.8

The answers to these questions show that veterans intend to do something about these problems:

	Yes	No
Do you want the voting records of all members of Congress on all major issues?	97.4%	2.6%
Do you favor political action for or against candidates, irrespective of which political party they represent?	93.8	6.2

AVC Says No Laws Needed To Put End To Racial Bias In U. S. Armed Forces

SECRETARY of National Defense James Forrestal was urged last week to end racial discrimination and segregation in the American armed forces in line with the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

The petition to end discrimination in the armed forces came from Chat Paterson, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee (AVC).

Calling attention to the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights which asks enactment by Congress of legislation to end discrimination in the armed services, Paterson said:

"The end of racial discrimination and segregation in our armed forces need not await legislation, since these practices are not necessitated by law but have become policy through years of usage."

In a letter to Secretary Forrestal, Secretary of Navy Sullivan, Secretary of Army Royall, and Secretary of War for Air Symington, Paterson declared that the experience of the Army in the European theater of operations offers conclusive proof that integration can be accomplished without the dire injury to our fighting forces which some predict.

"In fact, the results achieved indicate that full and complete integration is the only way in which the fighting forces can be most effectively and efficiently mobilized," he said. "Wastage of manpower resources by continuing useless, outmoded, and immoral practices of racial discrimination based upon theories of racial superiority which are no longer intellectually respectable is a luxury, demonstrated by the last war, which this country can ill afford in modern total warfare."

THIS IS HOW THE CIO PUBLIC WORKERS MET IN THE CANAL ZONE

CIO Radio Ban Studied by FCC

A PROTEST against censorship of a CIO radio program by WFOR, Hattiesburg, Miss., is being studied by the Federal Communications Commission.

In a sharply-worded letter, CIO Publicity Director Allan L. Swim last week criticized the station's action in cutting a CIO-sponsored discussion of civil rights off the air. On the program were two CIO spokesmen, a representative of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People and an official of the National Grange.

Swim wrote the FCC:

" . . . The broadcast was a well-rounded presentation of a subject which is receiving deep and thoughtful attention from the American people. This presentation of viewpoints on a subject basic to American democracy was interrupted and censored by the station management at WFOR.

"We regard the action of WFOR as one of extreme seriousness and a major violation of the principles of free speech. We request the Federal Communications Commission to take the strongest possible action under the law in handling this case.

"We respectfully urge that due consideration of the incident be made in the light of the FCC's standards for public service by radio stations, at such time as the license of WFOR comes up for renewal."

Begin Balloting

Marine radio officers of the CIO Communications Association started balloting Dec. 15 on a proposal to affiliate with the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

Labor's World

GREETINGS to the CIO have been sent by the General Federation of Japanese Trade Unions in line with a decision taken at the labor body's "second general meeting" in October.

"The sound principles and actions the CIO has pursued . . . gives us a strong impetus and guidance," K. Matsuoka, chairman of the federation, wrote to the CIO.

He said that some 5,600,000 Japanese workers are organized into unions but added:

"The regrettable fact is, however, that the trade union movement in Japan has not been placed on a firm rock in spite of the numerical increase of membership."

The General Federation, he said, will carry the torch of "democratic trade unionism in Japan and we sincerely hope that the CIO will extend friendship and assistance to us."

* * *

CANADIAN WORKERS are as concerned about inflation as folks on this side of the border. When the Dominion Parliament opened early in December, they were greeted by spokesmen from the Canadian Congress of Labor, to which CIO unions in the Dominion are affiliated.

Shortly before Parliament convened, the CCL came forth with a program much like that of CIO Pres. Murray which was sent to members of the U.S. Congress in mid-November. The Canadian unions called for re-imposition of price controls and of excess profits taxes; removal of new excise taxes on Canadian consumer goods; and raising income tax exemptions to $2,000 for married persons.

CCL representatives placed the program on the desks of members of Parliament and asked for point-blank reactions to the proposals, with a warning that their statements would be reported to union members home.

The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, which has a large measure of labor support, was the only party backing the unions' proposals, while greatest opposition came from Progressive Conservative members.

HERE AND THERE: Longshoremen in Sydney, Australia, have announced they will load no more bricks for export because too many Australian workers have been forced by the housing shortage to live in over-crowded slums . . . Charges prepared by U.S. prosecutors at the latest Nuremberg war crimes trials seek to prove that German big business used Hitler as a tool for their own plans. Prosecution will offer documents to show that big German monopolists started rearming two years after World War I, and that Hitler served as a handy front for their plans . . . With the cost of living in Mexico up 325% since 1939, workers in Mexico City publishing houses are on strike for higher wages. Union says prices have almost doubled since they last negotiated wages in 1945.

FRIENDSHIP FOOD: American unions are proud of the part they played in collecting the more than 8,000,000 pounds of food on this ship. Made up of donations from every state in the union, the cargo is on its way to Le Havre, France, for distribution to the people of Europe. The ship is shown here in New York harbor passing the Statue of Liberty which, symbolically, was given to the U. S. by France.

CIO URGES MORE SHIPPING TO AID MARITIME IDLE

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY has presented to Pres. Truman the CIO's program for the maintenance of a strong U. S. Merchant Marine.

At a press conference at which he was flanked by CIO Shipbuilding Pres. John Green and CIO Maritime Union Pres. Joseph Curran, Murray declared:

"We cannot effectively help other people if we allow any portion of our own economy to become depressed, or allow our own people to be without jobs or security.

"Today, over 270,000 seamen and shipbuilders are idle because of a lack of a positive martime program in regard to world rehabilitation. American shipping interests, in order to dodge American taxes and American wages, have transferred many ships to Panamanian and Honduran flags.

"This abolishes jobs, diminishes purchasing power, denies the Government necessary taxes, and allows vitally necessary skills to become lost. 951 ships have been transferred to other countries. This means jobless American seamen, jobless shipbuilders.

"To accomplish our purposes:

"1) American relief commodities must be carried on U. S. flag vessels;

"2) The authority of the Maritime Commission to operate, charter and sell ships for U. S. flag operation must be extended;

"3) The authority to charter and sell American vessels for transfer to foreign flags must not be renewed after February 28, 1948.

"4) The enemy fleets of Germany and Japan must not be rebuilt;

"5) Scarce steel must not be exported from the U. S., or diverted by countries receiving foreign aid, for the building of ships which are duplicates of ships that are already available;

"6) We must have an immediate large scale construction program of vessels which are in short supply in the world's merchant marine, particularly of passenger and tanker tonnage. The projects thus far proposed are too little and will be too late.

"7) We must extend and strengthen international trade and world trade agreements.

EVENTS CHEER FOES OF ANTI-NEGRO BIAS

BY GLORIA CAPLAN

FOES of anti-Negro discrimination were encouraged by three developments last week.

● The Supreme Court announced it would grant hearing to nine Negro strikers who were sentenced to jail by an all-white North Carolina jury.

● The Natl. Council for a Permanent FEPC, optimistic for the first time over prospects for Congressional action on a Federal Fair Employment bill, reported commitments from several top Republican leaders to push the bill to the floor of both Houses during the 1948 session.

● The President's 21-member Commission on Higher Education denounced segregation in the schools, particularly in Washington, D. C., and recommended that "public education at all levels . . . be equally accessible to all without regard to race, creed, sex or national origin."

In requesting a review of their case by the high court, nine North Carolina Negroes charged that although their race comprises 45% of the 150,000 people in Forsyth County, Negroes have been systematically barred from the juries. The county sheriff stated that about 12 Negroes have been called for grand and petit juries in the past 10 years.

The Negroes had been arrested last October as a result of a picket line fight in a CIO Fur and Leather Workers' strike in Winston-Salem. Charged with disorderly conduct and assault, they received sentences of from 30 days to 18 months on the roads. Seven of the defendants are women. The sentences were upheld by the North Carolina Supreme Court.

That the Supreme Court would order another trial before a mixed jury appeared possible in view of the court's decision in a similar case two weeks ago. The high tribunal ordered a new trial for Eddie "Buster" Patton, Mississippi Negro, who charged that he had been sentenced to death by an all-white jury.

The outlook for permanent FEPC legislation brightened, the Natl. Council for a Permanent FEPC reported last week, following conferences with Republican Sens. Taft (Ohio) and Smith (N. J.). The Council's co-chairman, A. Philip Randolph, stated that Taft had promised to attempt to get the Ives-Chavez-Fulton bill out of the Senate Committee on Labor & Public Welfare by Jan. 15. The Council said that the Senator had voiced his intention to vote for cloture in order to limit debate in the event that a filibuster ensues.

A conference with Rep. Clarence Brown (Ohio), House Republican Whip, brought the assurance that he would support the measure, the Council reported. However, he stated that he could not commit himself on whether the issue would be made party policy, since he doubted that the GOP could control all its Congressmen.

The Southern Conference on Human Welfare last week gave impetus to the battle against segregated schools with publication of a special issue of its news organ, the Southern Patriot, devoted to segregation in education.

The Southern Patriot found "equality of opportunity . . . a mere myth in the 17 states and District of Columbia where separate schools are maintained by law."

Carey Lauded For "Rights" Report

CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, Bishop Francis J. Haas of Detroit and Boris Shishkin, AFL research director, last week received special recognition for "distinguished service to the cause of fair employment performed as a member of the President's Committee on Civil Rights."

The citation was made by the Natl. Council for a Permanent FEPC at a board of directors meeting.

The three recipients were praised for the "broad knowledge and deep sympathy" they contributed to the writing of the Civil Rights Committee's report.

Truman Group Asks Education For All

A broad program which would extend education—elementary, secondary and college—to a higher level has been proposed to Pres. Truman.

The proposal from the President's Commission on Higher Education, admitted the program poses a "truly staggering job," but declared it can be done.

Here is the program:

1. High school education must be improved and should be provided for all.

2. Education through the college sophomore year should be available.

3. Financial assistance should be furnished needy students.

4. The present tendency of increasing tuition and other student fees in the senior college beyond the 14 year, and in both graduate and professional schools, should be reversed by lowering tuition costs in publicly controlled colleges and by aiding deserving students with a program of scholarships and fellowships.

5. Public education at all levels should be equally accessible to all, without regard to race, creed, sex or national origin.

URGE BETTER EDUCATION: Extension of free schools to the college sophomore year is included in recommendations being presented here to President Truman by his commission on higher education. Emens, president Ball State Teachers College, Muncie, Ind.; Mrs. Agnes Meyer, journalist and social worker, Washington, D. C.; Francis J. Brown, executive secretary of the commission; Dr. Earl J. Reuther:

INDUSTRY, CONGRESS MUFFED CHANCE

CONGRESS has had its chance—and muffed it.

Industry has had its chance—and muffed it.

Therefore, declares Walter Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, America's organized workers have no other choice but to take a step not of their own making—proceed to seek further wage increases.

Reuther made his statement last week at a packed luncheon of the Washington Press Club. Correspondents, publicity men, lobbyists, government officials and union representatives were in the audience. Among the guests was Franklin Roosevelt, Jr.

Reuther declared "General Motors—how I like to talk about GM!—resisted our efforts in 1946 to secure a wage increase without an accompanying rise in prices. Yet, GM's profit statement for the first six months of 1947 showed $400 million before taxes. That's 20% of net worth. If every car price had been reduced by a minimum of $250 per car, GM still could have made 8% after taxes."

The UAW chief was questioned by reporters on a variety of subjects (his replies on Henry Wallace and comment on the BLS budget appear elsewhere in the CIO News); his other replies:

Communists: "They are small in number in the labor movement. But, they know where they are going. You beat them by being more aggressive."

OPA: "We don't need the old-time OPA, but a new rational approach. If steel, for instance, is channelized to the producer without a lot of intermediate steps, there could be no black market."

Parts-makers' strikes: "Those strikes had little effect on production, since the shortage of sheet steel kept auto production down. Our members in many plants were often laid off for two or three days a week because of steel shortages."

Industry: "It has no faith in the future of America, or else it would expand, which is the only remedy to reduce shortages. The private economic Congress at the Waldorf-Astoria (the NAM convention) advocated longer work weeks, a step it knew wouldn't help reduce shortages."

HEADED FOR A STRIKE?: An expert on industrial strikes, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers, appears to have the form to produce another type of strike, as he opens the union's All-American Bowling Tournament, started as a protest against the American Bowling Congress' discriminatory policy.

5 Unions Come To Aid Of Farm Co-ops

EFFORTS to subject farmers' cooperatives to "unjust taxation" were strongly criticized last week in a statement issued by five CIO unions.

"The attack on farm cooperatives now under way in Congress and the big business press is clearly the product of the same monopoly forces that put over the Taft-Hartley Act," the statement said.

Rep. Wright Patman (D. Tex.) recently described the lobby against the co-ops as one of the richest and most dangerous in Washington. Top organization lobbying for the co-op tax scheme is the Natl. Tax Equality Assn, which has been described as financed by big business.

The five unions signing the statement were: Packinghouse; Mine, Mill; Farm Equipment, Fur & Leather, and Food & Tobacco.

"As representatives of organized labor," their statement said, "we realize our close ties with working farmers. We pledge our unswerving support to the farmers in the fight to prevent the enemies of the common people from destroying their cooperatives through unjust taxation."

Film Shows Ex-GI Learning of Unions

How Veteran Joe Smith, attending college under the GI Bill of Rights, learned the value of unions first-hand is shown dramatically in a new 26-minute sound film, "People's Program," made for the Los Angeles CIO Council by H. Arthur Klein.

Climax of the film is the big united Labor Day parade in Los Angeles showing the colorful floats entered by various West Coast CIO unions to dramatize the CIO's stand on important issues of the day.

Pictures Ltd., 141 N. Orange Drive, Hollywood 36, Calif., is handling distribution of the film.

New Orleans CIO Petitions UN Group

The Greater New Orleans CIO Council has urged the United Nations Commission on Human Rights meeting in Geneva to include in the proposed World Bill of Rights a guarantee that "anyone who lives by wages has the right freely to organize in democratic trade unions."

The CIO group further urged that no "legislative impediment should be raised against advancement" of this aim. In an appeal to U. S. Commission member, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Council said, "We believe economic democracy is requisite to political democracy; that we cannot have one, in fact, without the other; that we must have both or we will have neither."

Excuse, Please

The name of Secy.-Treas. Albert D. Viller of the West Virginia CIO Council was inadvertently omitted from the caption of a picture on this page of the Dec. 8 issue of the CIO News. The picture showed the presentation of the council's check to purchase a carload of flour for the Friendship Train which collected gifts to combat hunger in France.

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO Regional Director Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, reports: Textile Workers won NLRB election Bemis Bag Company, Los Angeles, CIO 89, no union 6. Representatives Harry Stillman and Anthony Ramuglia were in charge.

CIO Regional Director Joseph M. Walsh, Wilkes-Barre, reports: Textile Workers won NLRB election in two Wilkes-Barre mills of Hess Goldsmith Company, TWUA-CIO 220, no union 71. TWUA Regional Director Charles Sobol was in charge.

CIO Organizing Committee Director Van A. Bittner announces: Central Glass Co., Bristol, Va., FGC&SWA-CIO 21, AFL 1, no union 4; Bullard Mill Works, Fayetteville, N. C., IWA-CIO 24, no union 20, void 1, challenged 1; Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., Mill Unit, Tallulah, La., IWA-CIO 652, AFL 42, no union 21, void 11; Reynolds Lumber Co., Albany, Ga., IWA-CIO 120, no union 35; Watkins Lumber Co., Albany, Ga., IWA-CIO 25, no union 17.

The Committee won one NLRB election in Georgia last week and three more are scheduled to be held the latter part of the week.

The employes of the American Fork & Hoe Co. in Columbus, Ga., selected the CIO International Woodworkers to represent them in dealing with management.

Voting in a privately conducted election held in Atlanta, Ga., the employes of the NACO Fertilizer Co., Wilmington, N. C., voted three to one for the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union as their bargaining agent. The balloting was supervised by a local law firm, James & James.

The union had previously filed a petition with the NLRB seeking an election. However, the delay and the red tape now surrounding the NLRB, by reason of the Taft-Hartley Law, caused the company and the union to agree to a privately conducted election. The official tally showed 32 votes for the union and 10 against.

In Rock Hill, S. C., one of the most highly touted sections of the Taft-Hartley Law is the provision for a decertification election—a method through which a group of workers in a union plant may petition for an election when the employes may vote on whether the plant shall be "un-unionized."

However, even this section of the T-H Law apparently fails to contribute anything to industrial peace or aid in solving labor problems. Both the employes and management at Samarkand Rug Co. and the Rock Hill Yarn Mill here decided they could not wait on the Taft-Hartley encumbered NLRB to conduct a decertification election. They held their own secret ballot with the result that the CIO Textile Workers Union won by a vote of 72 to 48 and will continue to represent the workers in both plants.

Background of the case is this: The Textile Workers won the bargaining rights in the two plants (both owned by the same people) in 1946. When the contract expired last Spring, the company and the union were unable to get together on a new agreement. The company maintained that less than a majority of the workers belonged to the union.

The dispute continued through the summer, with the workers becoming more and more dissatisfied. Finally a small group filed a decertification petition with the NLRB, and sat back to wait for the action that never came. Then Franz Daniel, CIO Director for South Carolina, suggested to management that a secret ballot be conducted right in the plant to settle the question. It was agreed and the workers reaffirmed their faith in the union. The decertification petition has been withdrawn and a new contract has been signed.

I TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO WISH TO OUR OFFICERS AND MEMBERS AND YOUR FAMILIES A MERRY AND BRIGHT CHRISTMAS!

Murray, Haywood Named Mediation Board Advisers

TWO top officials of the CIO were named last week by Pres. Truman to serve on a 12-man advisory group set up under the Federal Mediation Board. The Board is headed by Cyrus Ching, former rubber company executive and a leading figure in the War Labor Board.

Named to the group from CIO were Pres. Philip Murray and Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Four other labor members were also appointed: Clinton S. Golden, former steel union vice-president who is now labor expert for the U.S. mission in Greece; AFL Pres. William Green; Pres. William Hutcheson of the AFL carpenters; and Pres. Harvey Brown of the machinists union.

Six management members were also named: Pres. Ben Fairless of U.S. Steel; James Black of Pacific Gas & Electric; Paul Hoffman of Studebaker Corp.; George M. Humphrey of the M. A. Hanna Co., a shipping firm; Lewis Lapham of the American Hawaiian Steamship Co.; and Charles E. Wilson of General Electric.

PAC Packages

"I firmly believe that only through united political action will the working people be able to retain the hard-earned benefits won through their unions."

That succinct definition won Albert W. Miller, Orange, N. J., of the CIO Electrical Workers, a $15 first prize in the November N. J.-PAC contest. He immediately contributed the $15 to a "good cause"—PAC.

Jesse Marchese, CIO Playthings Union, contributed his $2 prize—"it can do more for the PAC program than spending it for a couple of drinks."

PCA BID TO WALLACE CAUSES FUROR

THE third party bid by the Progressive Citizens of America to Henry A. Wallace last week caused a widespread political commotion that is still astir.

A number of attacks were made on the Presidential indorsement move while the PCA executive committee members and Robert Keeny, PCA co-chairman, defended the step.

Among the attackers were:

Dr. Frank Kingdon, the other co-chairman, who turned in his resignation, declaring: "I could not support Wallace if he runs for President as a third party candidate and must automatically sever my connections with the PCA." Kingdon is a candidate for Senator in the New Jersey Democratic primary. He had urged Wallace to seek the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who declared his union is opposed to a third party in 1948 and that third party moves are not "consonant" with CIO policy.

(On April 13, 1947, at a CIO National Legislative Conference in Washington, CIO Philip Murray said:

("PAC is not a third party. It must never be regarded as a third party."

(At a press conference during the 1947 CIO national convention at Boston, PAC Director Jack Kroll said: "a third party is out of the question for PAC in 1948.")

Potofsky also said, "as to speculation concerning the action of ACW officers and members, who are in the American Labor Party, in the event of a third party ticket, we wish to to make it clear we will meet that situation if and when it arises."

Bartley C. Crum, one of the original Willkie backers and co-counsel for the Hollywood witnesses accused of contempt of a Congressional committee, resigned from PCA, declaring "I would never vote for Wallace for President."

J. Raymond Walsh, New York State PCA chairman, forecast in his nightly radio commentary program over WMCA that Wallace, far from getting 5,000,000 "protest" votes in 1948, would get only 500,000 and that the poor showing would "kill the chance of progressive politics in America for a long time, possibly in the rest of your life." He said the PCA indorsement would be attacked by conservatives and labor leaders as a "Communist operation" and this would be the "kiss of death."

Walter Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, speaking at a Press Club luncheon in Washington, said Wallace was a "lost soul."

Idaho PAC

Representatives of every CIO union in Idaho, including auxiliaries, have organized an Idaho State Political Action Committee.

The speakers included Jesse Vetter, President of North Idaho and Eastern Washington Farmers' Union; John Clark, President, CIO Mine, Mill Workers; Al Hartung, First Vice-President, CIO Woodworkers; Mrs. Verda W. Barnes, Field Representative, CIO-PAC; Al Skinner, Mine, Mill, PAC Director; Earl Nimz, President of Inland Empire District Council No. 10, IWA, and Fred Siefken, Secretary of the IWA Council.

Temporary officers elected:

Chairman: Howard Lee, Mine, Mill, Kellogg, Idaho; Vice-Chairman: Mrs. Jeanne Sassaratt, Women's Auxiliary, Coeur d'Alene; Secretary-Treas: Cecil Johnson, Woodworkers, Coeur d'Alene.

Each local union and auxiliary in the state will elect a delegate to the State PAC executive committee, which will meet in the middle of January. Permanent officers will be elected then.

Los Angeles PAC

The Los Angeles CIO Council's PAC has launched the biggest registration campaign ever to hit the city.

First job, to get more deputy registrars, was being concentrated among CIO housewives and workers who have time off between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m., and can go down to the county registrar's office, be deputized and briefed in their duties.

Second aim was loosed at a PAC meeting which approved a six-point program designed to register the 50% of CIO's membership in this area presently estimated as ineligible to vote.

UE Calls For Enforcement

IN reply, Denham wrote to Pressman:

"The inaccuracy of the quotation largely rests in its incompleteness. The statement was made over the telephone to the Associated Press shortly following the announcement of the dismissal of the Remington Rand cases and was in reply to an inquiry as to whether this action would bar Remington Rand from having anything to do with the UE, which as you know, has not complied with the provisions of the Act.

"The reply actually was substantially to the effect that the Act does not prevent Rand from entering into any contract they may desire to with the UE, but if they incorporate a union security provision they will do so at their peril; and, of course, the closed shop contract is specifically forbidden by the law.

"As you know, the Act specifically provides that a contract with a certified labor organization, entered into prior to the effective date of the Act, is not affected by any of its provisions.

"Although the Board has not specifically passed on the question, it seems to me that, under the above provisions, such contracts would be expected to stand during the statutory period of validity, unaffected by the compliance or non-compliance of the contracting union."

Rand has for years fought unionization of its employes. The notorious Mohawk Valley plan, a strike-breaking device, was allegedly used by Rand, and other methods of union-busting have been charged against the firm. Last summer, it appeared for a while as if the Mohawk plan was being revived. UE says its Rand members are stronger than ever.

MARCH OF DIMES PIN-UP: Terry Tullos, 3-year-old polio victim of Laurel, Miss., will appear in the March of Dimes posters. CIO Pres. Philip Murray has indorsed the campaign which will be held by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis January 15-30. Stricken with polio before he could walk, Terry is expected to regain the full use of his legs, thanks to the March of Dimes.

Murray Urges Affiliates To Aid March Of Dimes

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has urged all affiliates to contribute to the March of Dimes campaign, to be conducted Jan. 15-30 to aid the victims of infantile paralysis.

Murray wrote int'l. union presidents, regional directors, industrial union councils and local industrial unions:

"Funds collected in this campaign will be used for two eminently worthwhile purposes: To help the Nat'l. Foundation for Infantile Paralysis in its constant efforts to give assistance to those who have suffered the ravages of polio; and to commemorate in a most praiseworthy manner the Jan. 30th birthday anniversary of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"With the passing of time, the spirit of our late President shines ever brighter. Not the least of his contributions to the cause of American humanitarianism was his championing of the people, who, like himself, had been faced with one of nature's most pernicious diseases.

"I suggest that all our affiliates contribute as much as they feel they are able to the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Birthday Memorial Committee, 9 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y. You may wish to consider making your gift in multiples of $66 as one means of honoring the anniversary of the late President's birth."

Needs Charity On $55 a Week

IN the land of plenty there were these indications that the inflationary crisis was pretty nearly out of hand:

The New York Times, in its annual appeal for the city's '100 Neediest Cases," cited these:

● "Four of the B Children live in boarding homes. The other four are in a small tenement with their mother. Mrs. B is a diabetic. Brooding over her scattered children has made her condition worse. The father has worked hard as a sign painter, but his seasonal occupation brings in at best $55 a week . . ."

● "Two years ago, Jimmie L. now 14, began to have epileptic seizures. He became afraid of his friends. His classmates' ridicule of his front teeth intensified his feeling of shame. The psychiatrist say straightening the teeth will help to improve his mental attitude. But, Jimmie's parents, with four other children, cannot meet this expense, can barely manage on Mr. L's wages and supplementary public assistance allowance, which total $59.80 a week."

Longshoremen Win 8c, More To Come

CIO West Coast Longshoremen last week won increases of eight cents an hour with a promise of more to come on Feb. 10.

The wage hike was awarded by West Coast Arbitrator Arthur C. Miller, who ruled that the amount would be revised upward in accordance with the cost-of-living rise for the June 15-Dec. 15 quarter. The additional rise will be based on the Dept. of Labor computation to be announced Feb. 10, but is not to exceed the 18c an hour originally demanded by the union.

With the eight-cent increase, average hourly pay for dockworkers is $1.65 and overtime pay is $2.475 an hour.

For about 25% of the membership elimination of differentials brought the hourly raise up to 60c. Additional gains included recognition of Saturdays as overtime days, liberalized vacations and improvement in safety rules.

In reeply to the shop owners' plea of inability to pay wage increases, the arbitrator said:

"The employers and the longshoremen have never been partners or joint venturers in the employers' business:

Kentucky Unionists Set Pattern For Political Drive

The year just ahead—1948—is one of decision for the CIO and its Political Action Committee.

The President, the entire House of Representatives and one-third of the Senate will be up for election. A number of important state and municipal posts also will be at stake.

The CIO contends that a number of our lawmakers must be retired to private life if the nation is to travel a safe and sane course in the future.

CIO members in Louisville, Ky., recently demonstrated that a lot of "elbow grease" must be combined with political know-how if CIO is to keep that date in '48.

The Louisville Story is interesting reading. It tells how a group of ordinary American trade unionists tackled a tough job and won a political victory. It is typical of what other cities and states did on a small scale last November and what others in PAC can expect to do in 1948. Story on Pages 6, 7 and 8.

'Many Rates of Profits Must Subside,' Advisers Tell Truman

Economic group proves increased productivity and longer hours are not answer to nation's problems. Declares that greater purchasing power must be achieved for all. Insists labor's cooperation must be sought in study of so-called "restrictive conditions." Profits are accruing at rate of 16.2%, U. S. agencies find. Stories on Page 3.

CIO Asks World Labor Back U. S. 'Aid-Europe' Program

The U. S. foreign aid program is no Wall Street bogeyman but the best possible way of promoting world recovery. That message was carried last month by CIO leaders to the executive meeting of the World Federation of Trade Unions at Paris. CIO leaders urged that the foreign aid program is right up the WFTU alley. Story on Page 12.

Biz Press Flays GOP 'Price' Bill

NEARLY all 531 members of Congress are back home this week, finishing the remains of Christmas turkeys, shaking hands with constituents and—in the case of those who voted against OPA in 1946—trying to make the voters believe they've taken action against inflation.

The Taft four-point program was rushed through Congress in the final days of the special session of Congress, but it failed to tackle the key problems of price increases, shortages, and rationing.

Widely publicized by the Republican leadership as an "anti-inflation" bill, the measure was in actuality a stab at some "easy" way of handling the question of high prices. The bill extended export and transport controls, barred grain for distilleries for an additional month, and made possible the getting together of big companies for sharing of scarce materials without fear of anti-trust action.

If the GOP wants the public to believe that this is an anti-inflation program, it will first have to convince the business press.

The New York Times business section quoted industrial leaders as predicting that the new legislation came too late to stop another round of price increases.

Fear Higher Prices

Indeed, said the Times (not known for crossing up the views of the business community), the same top businessmen "expressed fears that the Government effort may . . . spur higher prices and large scale buying."

Basis for the worry is that if Pres. Truman signs the bill, even so mild a measure as this would result "in placing the blame for high prices solely upon industry."

The NAM and other corporation groups which claimed sole credit for having killed price controls in mid-1946, are now anxious to shift the blame for present soaring prices.

The Wall Street Journal, in a survey of conditions throughout the midwest, voiced fears that buying power may slump badly during 1948 in the 13 states in the Mississippi valley.

The business paper reported that the "nation's living rooms are beginning to fill up with radios" and that other consumer goods have begun to reach the limit of their markets as a result of high prices and restricted buying power. Added to that, the Journal said, is the fact that farm production will slump during the next 12 months.

Aid Plans First

"For the housewife, all this spells high grocery bills," the Journal comments. "For the needy European, it may mean less grain."

And for Congress, needless to say, it means additional problems.

The new session opens on January 6. Up for consideration will be a host of bills and projects barely touched upon during the special session.

A first order of business will be Pres. Truman's request for a 17-billion-dollar aid program over the next four years, with nearly 7 billion to be appropriated in 1948 to cover the first 15 months of the foreign aid program.

Many Republicans, and some Democrats, are sharply critical of the sums asked by the President on the basis of estimates made by the 16 European nations which cooperate in the Marshall Plan program.

Sen. Taft, Republican leader in the Senate, said he would seek to push a piecemeal program based on annual requests rather than upon a four-year lump sum estimate. Sen. Ball (R., Minn.), who comes up for election this November, described the four-year commitment as "foolhardy."

The GOP's version of a foreign aid program will probably come from Rep. Christian Herter (R., Mass.), who led a Congressional tour of Europe last summer. It will probably call for a considerably smaller sum, and it may ask for the formation of a government corporation along the lines of the conservative RFC, to administer the funds.

In any event, foreign aid will have a top place on the Congressional agenda early in 1948.

But the chances are that Congress will have to grapple directly with the price situation before it goes home to campaign for the coming elections.

Economists agree that prices will continue to rise, and politicians agree that the public is angry and ready to place the blame on those who killed the effective wartime controls.

Hence the desire by Congressmen of both parties who voted against OPA to accomplish a double mission: to escape blame for the price rise, and to adopt whatever measures may be popular to stop the steady climb of prices.

Truman's Buying Power Is Down Two-Thirds Yet His Job Is Sought By Many Men

"THE men who run the country are turning out to be the real 'forgotten men' of this inflation period," according to the U. S. News. "They are still waiting for a raise.

"Members of Congress have increased their own pay 50%. However, nobody is even suggesting that these men (the President and his Cabinet) should get more pay for running a $40,000,000,000 business.

"Mr. Truman gets $75,000 in pay, the same as received by William Howard Taft in 1909.

"The $75,000 pay for the President amounted to $59,626 after taxes back in 1939. Today, after taxes, Mr. Truman has $37,580 left. That is a cut of more than $22,000. But, there is the factor of living costs. When that is counted in, Mr. Truman's 'real' income, on the 1939 base, turns out to be $22,363, a reduction by nearly two-thirds."

Department Store Union Wins Boost

Gimbles and Saks department store employes in New York City got an unexpected Christmas present last week in the form of a $6 a week general pay increase, retroactive to Aug. 1.

After the offer had been unanimously accepted at a series of meetings, the 3500 workers, members of Local 2, Retail, Wholesale Employees, were told by William Michelson, their president, that as a result of their quick acceptance, an advance of $50 on the retroactive pay would be given to them on Christmas Eve, along with regular weekly pay checks. He estimated that back pay per worker would amount to nearly $150.

Protest Greek Strike Legislation

The Greek government's action in outlawing strikes and providing the death penalty for strike leaders was characterized as "fascism in open form" by John J. Stanley, Secretary-Treasurer of the CIO Office and Professional Workers, in a telegram of protest to the Greek Embassy.

In a parallel wire to Pres. Truman, Stanley declared that "the freedom of labor to strike is inalienable wherever democracy is cherished." He urged that the American Mission in Greece "speak out against this outrage and that full support be extended to Greek trade unionists in their fight against this fascist measure."

'We Will Do Our Utmost'

The following CIO Christmas message by Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey to the workers of Europe was broadcast over the State Department's "Voice of America" program:

"I know that I speak for the working men and women of the U. S. when I voice our deep-felt wishes to the people of other countries for a happy Christmas season and for a bright New Year that will offer hope of a brighter future.

"The CIO has always felt the most cordial sentiments for freedom-loving people everywhere. Through the years, millions of CIO workers in the great production industries such as steel, automobile, electrical, textile and rubber, have kept strong the vision of a united world of peace and security. In deed, as well as in thought the voices, American workers are seeking to bring this ideal into reality.

"As the Christmas season begins to close a year that has been filled with serious problems, the American workers of the CIO again restate their desire for action that will bring peace and liberty to the world.

"We are supporting to the utmost programs of the U. S. for generous economic aid to nations and peoples who need help for reconstruction.

"We denounce and condemn those who hope to strengthen themselves by opposing aid to hungry and discouraged people, just as we denounce and condemn those who hope to strengthen themselves by extending that aid. Both of these viewpoints deny the dignity of man the worker. Starvation and discouragement should not be made political bargaining pawns. We want to see a world of free, undominated peoples who can cooperate among themselves as good neighbors.

"The CIO Christmas message to the world is this:

"We will do our utmost to help reach that better world of real brotherhood for free people. A happy Christmas to all of you workers wherever you may be."

CIO Backs ITO World Plans

CIO stands firmly behind efforts of the United Nations Intl. Trade Organization to work out means of encouraging trade and employment throughout the world.

The statement was presented to the ITO meeting at Havana, Cuba, by John Brophy, CIO council's director, who served as CIO's adviser to the U. S. delegation. The meetings have been held for several weeks.

The draft Trade Charter, which will be submitted to the various nations when it reaches its final form, is based on six ideals for greater world trade: a balanced and expanding world economy; industrial and general economic development, particularly in "under-developed" nations; access to markets, products and production facilities by all countries; reduction of trade barriers and tariffs; development of trade on a basis that will not force nations to develop restrictive practices, reduce employment or slow down their economic progress; and development of mutual understanding and cooperation to help solve international trade problems.

Brophy said that a "point of great significance" in the proposed charter is the fact that it brings together questions of trade and jobs. Chapter II, he said, "pledges member countries to take action designed to achieve and maintain full employment and high demand" in each nation through appropriate steps.

Brophy said the trade proposals look toward a reasonably balanced international commerce "so that one country's employment program should not handicap another's."

"A charter to promote full employment as well as to reduce trade barriers is the answer to those who feared in the past that tariff reductions by themselves might throw American workers out of jobs," Brophy said.

Under the ITO charter, the U. S. will be committeed not only to negotiate tariff reductions—which will encourage trade—"but also to take seriously its obligations to try to maintain jobs for all, under the Employment Act of 1946."

Glass Union Beats Decertification

The first decertification attempt under Taft-Hartley within the CIO Glass Workers fizzled recently when Rohm & Hass employes at Bristol, Pa., voted 583 to 263 for retention of the union.

The union stated that its majority of 320 votes nearly quadrupled the margin by which it won a collective bargaining election a year ago, indicating the growth of confidence in the union, it was felt.

Economic Report Declares:

'MANY RATES OF PROFITS MUST SUBSIDE'

16% Return Achieved on Investments

AS 1947 limped into its final gasps, one thing was incontrovertible: profits of American business were stratospheric.

Three different sources had this to say last week about profits:

1. The Council of Economic Advisers, in its second annual report to Pres Truman, said: "Many rates of profits must subside while reasonable profitability is established in other areas."

2. The New York Times reported: "Despite the disturbing international influence on American industry, earnings of the nation's industrial manufacturers were at record levels for the first nine months of this year."

Grading of Butter Spread All Over

Buy that pound of salt butter with a grain of salt.

Or at least that's what two PM reporters found out last week in a survey of 12 New York chain and independent stores.

The two were told by 11 stores that the butter was AA-top-grade. The 12th said it was A grade. After buying 12 pounds, the reporters took the butter to the New York Agriculture Dept. office. Tests there showed that the butter was (price in parentheses):

One pound too poor to grade (98c); 1 pound Grade C ($1.00); 1 pound Grade C ($1.11); 1 pound Grade B ($1.00); 1 pound Grade A (98c); 1 pound Grade A (97c); 1 pound Grade A (99c); 1 pound Grade A ($1.00). Three pounds were Grade AA as represented. The 12th store was not listed. (One grocer claimed his butter was better than Grade AA, which is called 93 test. But, when tested, his butter showed, not 94 or better, but 92, which is Grade A.)

3. The Federal Trade and the Securities and Exchange commissions, in a study, found that the average for all manufacturing corporations for the first half of 1947 was 16.2% on stockholders' equity. This is clear profit, after taxes.

The Economic Committee report, prepared by Edwin Nourse, chairman; Leon Keyserling, vice-chairman, and John Clark, had three divisions of major interest to working people. They were:

A. Increased production and longer work week: "Will our present economic problems — inflation, high cost of living, threatened recession, and all the rest—be solved merely by 'production, more production, and still more production?'

"Or may full production, in catching up with market demand, force disastrous price breaks, result in production cutbacks and then prove to be its own undoing?

"Businessmen have been glad to make the most of the scarcity argument to absolve themselves of responsibility for high prices and to hold out hope that fuller production will automatically remedy the situation.

"Prominent leaders in business and public life have proposed that the standard work week be lengthened from 40 hours to 44 or even 48. This done, they say shortages would rapidly be brought to an end, prices would come down, and all would be well.

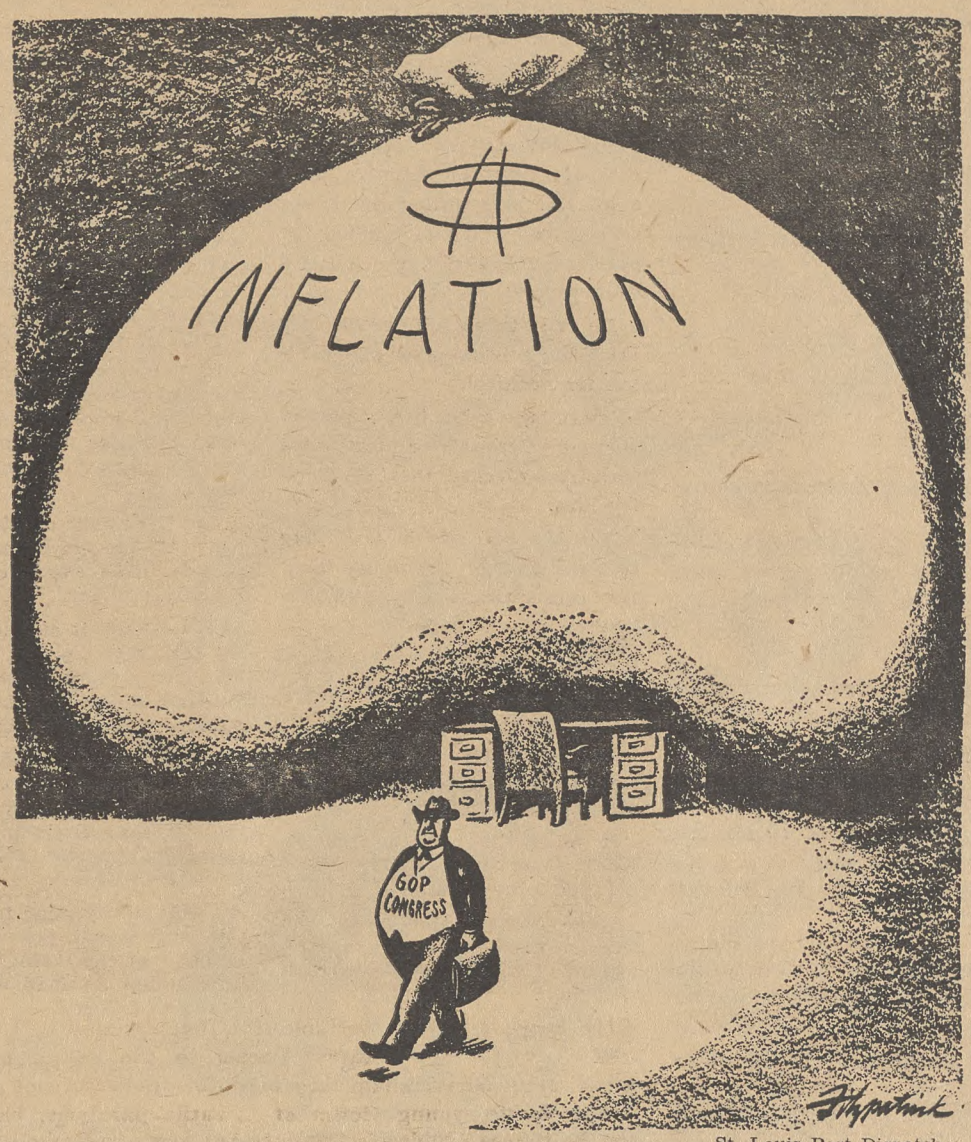
"This proposal, however, leaves several unanswered questions. It is evident we cannot all work longer hours and thereby end present shortages. Even in those manufacturing lines where materials are adequate, it is not clear that merely stepping up the amount of labor effort would meet the real economic problems which confront us."

B. Consumer purchasing power: "The small number of well-to-do will not be able to absorb the possible output of goods. If we are to achieve and stabilize maximum production, we must have much higher consumption in all the lower and middle ranks."

C. Labor's position: "The first step toward breaking down the resistance to technological change should be toward convincing those who, in resisting, see they are making a mistake even from the viewpoint of their own personal interests.

"In essence, cooperative efforts of labor and management to reduce or remove restrictive practices are inseparably connected with their joint and several contributions toward maintaining an economy of maximum employment, production and purchasing power."

The report also hit at "gross imbalances" in wages and salaries.



St. Louis Post Dispatch

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Bonds Hit By HCL

A war bond bought in December 1941 for $18.75 and cashed in today is worth a total of $12.45—interest included.

This was revealed in a Federated Press survey based on official cost of living figures, which show that soaring prices have eaten away at the prewar dollar—now worth about 60c.

If a bond-holder cashed in a 6-year-old $18.75 bond today, he would have accumulated enough interest to receive $20.75 in cash. But that $20.75 would buy only as much food, clothing and other products as $12.75 would have bought in 1941.

On a $100 bond bought for $75 in December, 1941, the purchaser would get $83 in cash today. But that $83 would go only as far as $49.80 would have gone at the time the bond was bought.

THE FTC-SEC study leads many to pose this question:

"What does a 16.2% return on investment mean?"

The answer is: It means that if you invested a million dollars in a firm having a 16.2% return, and left your money and earnings in the business for 15 years, you would have about $10 millions. One million gets you $10 million at the rate of 16.2%.

Remember, the 16.2% is only an average rate. If you invested in paper and allied products, where the average rate of return is 24.6%, you would only have to wait 10 years for the $1 million to become $10 million.

The 16.2% compares with preceding years as follows:

1929	8.1%	1938	2.7%
30	2.5	39	6.9
31	1.0	40	8.8
32	3.0	41	12.3
33	1.4	42	9.7
34	2.5	43	9.5
35	4.7	44	8.5
36	9.2	45	6.9
37	8.7	46	8.9

Democratic Nations Have Price Control

By LESLIE FISHMAN
Of the CIO Education & Research Dept.

THE most frequent objections being raised to reimposition of price controls is that they are by nature undemocratic.

A study of the facts proves this is untrue.

The U. S. would certainly not be any less democratic if OPA had continued beyond 1946. Similarly, as we look about us in the rest of the world, those nations which all of us would consider among the most democratic continue to have price control, not because they necessarily want it, but rather because the situation demands it.

Something's Up

Wholesale prices rose steadily during the week ending Dec. 13 to reach a new postwar peak, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says.

The index stood at 161.4% of the 1926 base period, having risen 1.8% in the past four weeks and 15.5% in the past year.

Outstanding foreign examples that have been eminently successful with price control are Australia, New Zealand and Sweden. One could hardly question the democratic nature of these countries.

ACCORDING to the United Nations Statistical Bulletin, the cost of living in New Zealand since 1943 has increased some 3%; in Australia, about 6% over the same period; in Sweden 10%. These figures compare with our record of 28%, almost all of which has come about since OPA was wrecked.

An even more striking comparison can be made with Norway, a nation whose economy suffered to a greater degree from the war. The U. S., Sweden, Australia and New Zealand were among those fortunate few the war did not touch directly.

The inflationary pressures these nations are undergoing are primarily the result of pent-up demand.

Norway, however, has, in addition to these pressures, the tremendous disadvantages of a reduced supply due to the damage inflicted by the Nazis on its farms and its industrial machinery. This undeniably democratic country has not only successfully controlled upward movements in its cost of living, but has actually lowered it. Its cost of living index rose from 160 in 1945 to a high of 167 early in 1947. Since then it has fallen to 163, an overall advance of about 2% since 1945.

IN ADDITION to those unanswerably successful applications of price control, we also have the example of our neighbor to the north, Canada.

The Canadians are in temperament, make-up and living standard very close to Americans. Price control there, as agreed by all parties, was successful until pressures from the U. S., resulting from OPA's death, became too great to withstand. As the Canadian Minister of Finance pointed out: "Perhaps the greatest threat to the stability of prices in Canada comes from the rise of prices in the U. S. and to a lesser extent in other countries."

The examples cited above should be more than sufficient to unmask the lie that price control is undemocratic. Exactly the opposite is the case.

We Must Do Better in '48

So let's take inventory for 1947.

Business and industry did right well by themselves during the past year. Profits and prices hit all-time highs. Dividend payments were nothing to cause complaint.

Agriculture, generally, did OK, too, though some farm groups got caught in the high-price squeeze.

Labor—both organized and unorganized—took it on the chin.

The world at large made only slight progress toward the everlasting peace that is so badly needed.

Business Advocates 'Business As Usual'

Big business, which promised the death of OPA would be followed by prices "consumers would be willing to pay," pushed many prices so high that consumers were unable to pay.

Industry spent a lot of time and money trying to convince the public that industry was the victim—and not the maker—of inflation. There was no visible evidence that it made any real effort to reduce prices or even keep them from advancing.

Near the year's end some leaders of business and industry expressed concern over the direction in which the nation was heading, but none of them seemed willing to advocate drastic action to avoid an economic crisis.

They turned thumbs down on price control, figured out new schemes for hindering the progress of unionism and followed a program of "business as usual."

Congress Makes Terrible Record

The Republican-controlled Congress paid slight heed to the pressing needs of a nation suffering from the after-effects of war.

It refused to face the housing problem realistically, turned a cold shoulder on social legislation and delivered a mighty haymaker to the chin of organized labor.

Congress and the Administration trampled on civil rights by launching "subversive" investigations which did not permit the accused to confront their accusers.

And our lawmakers went home for Christmas after a special session during which they shied away from real curbs on inflation.

Labor Forced To Seek Wage Hike

Near the end of 1947 it became obvious that working men and women would have to have more money if they were to enjoy a decent standard of living.

That's why the CIO announced it was launching a campaign for substantial wage increases, and it expressed belief that industry could grant wage hikes without increasing prices.

Earlier it had become obvious that business and industry were using legislative machinery in an effort to make labor unions weak and ineffective.

That's why the CIO—and other union groups, too—decided to conduct a campaign during 1948 to retire to private life those office-holders who voted for the Taft-Hartley Act.

That's the "inventory" picture—and it's not a pretty one from labor's viewpoint. It shows conclusively that—

We've got to do better in 1948 than we did in 1947. If we don't, we're likely to prove again the old rule that depression follows inflation.

Business Is Having Trouble Explaining Its Bad Behavior

By ALLAN L. SWIM

BIG BUSINESS rode high in the saddle during 1947 and frequently jabbed in the spurs where it hurt labor most.

Business can pat itself on the back for doing an effective job—a job that sent profits and prices soaring and sharply curtailed the purchasing power of the nation's wage earners.

It can take full credit for smashing price control and denting rent control.

It can brag about how it pushed through Congress a legislative monstrosity called the Taft-Hartley Law.

But big business is beginning to have trouble explaining away the consequences of its misbehavior.

LABOR—both organized and unorganized—took a bad beating during the year just ending.

It was caught in an economic squeeze and given a political pushing around.

It raised its voice in protest, but if those in the saddle heard the noise they paid slight heed.

Wage earners and those who live on fixed incomes were the victims of what some writers call "reaction."

The year is nearly over and reaction to "reaction" has set in.

THE National Association of Manufacturers, spokesmen for big business, ran some newspaper ads "explaining" that the death of OPA wouldn't result in high prices.

High prices came, so NAM recently ran some more ads, this time "explaining" that high prices weren't really the cause of inflation but merely the result of it.

All of which was just so much gobbledygook to the guy who tried to stretch his pay to cover mounting expenses.

This guy, however, had a simple explanation: He didn't have enough money to buy what he needed.

BIG BUSINESS, through a Republican-controlled Congress, made hash of the Wagner Act and provided itself with a neat little bludgeon called the Taft-Hartley Act.

And it whittled away at the minimum wage law—a law which guarantees workers only 40 cents an hour when at least 75 cents is needed to maintain a half-way decent standard of living.

Its "experts" brought out a tax proposal which FDR, were he still alive, would no doubt have termed a plan to provide relief for the greedy but not for the needy.

And it effectively blocked efforts to use governmental machinery in an effort to solve the housing problem.

LABOR took it on the chin, but the blow wasn't of near-knockout calibre. Somebody apparently forgot that labor grows strong on tough opposition.

Business created some nearly perfect political issues and even aroused the staid old parent of the CIO into launching a political action program (which it calls by another name).

And it's interesting to note that the professional poll takers are saying that the voting public has been losing its fondness for the Grand Old Party.

It's hard to predict what 1948 will bring, but a couple of things seem certain.

Labor will go after and obtain substantial wage increases—simply because workers have got to have more money to make ends meet.

Many members of Congress who gave labor a pushing around are going to have to trot out some political miracles if they are re-elected.

And big business will begin learning what it should have known for a long time—that the public eventually gets fed up with long promises and short performances.

'Plagiarism' --O.K. This Time

The following article, "More Plagiarism Desirable," was written by the Rev. George G. Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Dept., Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference.

"Yesterday was clean-up day. I was rummaging through a very untidy accumulation of bulletins, newspapers, magazines, etc., preparatory to consigning the whole caboodle to the paper drive. I paused to glance at a resolution passed recently by an important trade union group in the Southland in defense of the Federal minimum-wage law.

(Ed. Note: The Union group was the CIO Louisiana State Political Action and Education Committee.)

"My attention was caught by a paragraph which seemed to have a familiar ring. Therefore be it resolved, the resolution read, 'that we believe it is obvious to all men of good will that the immense number of propertyless wage-earners on the one hand, and the superabundant riches of the fortunate few on the other hand, is an unanswerable argument that the wealth, so abundantly produced in this age of technical and industrial advancement, is far from being rightly distributed and equitably shared.'

"Do you recognize the language? It is taken verbatim from paragraph 60 of the encyclical Quadragesimo Anno.

"IT is safe to say that Pope Pius XI would not object to the plagiarism.

(Quadragesimo Anno, issued in 1931 by Pope Pius XI, literally means "In the 40th Year." It refers back to the Rerum Novarum—literally "of or concerning the New Things"—encyclical issued in 1891 by Pope Leo XIII. The English title for Quadragesimo Anno is "On Reconstructing the Social Order"; that of Rerum Novarum is "On the Conditon of Labor.")

"Would that some of the critics of the Fair Labor Standards Act might follow the example and turn to the social encyclicals for legislative guidance! Would that some of the influential individuals and organizations which have been sniping at the Act were as interested in encyclical teaching as they are, for example, in the heartless and discredited theories of laissez-faire economics! How much better it would be for the underpaid workers, and indeed for the prosperity and welfare of all of us, if the Chamber of Commerce—to single out one of the worst offenders—were more encyclical-minded.

This "organization of businessmen, recently submitted to the House Labor Committee a brief attacking the whole principle of minimum wage legislation as such. Incredible, but true. 'Prosperity,' says the Chamber's economist, Dr. Schmidt, 'is the best cure for low wages. Furthermore, that cure comes about through the natural workings of the market.'

"He is calmly and cold-bloodedly propagating, at this late date in American history, a type of economic individualism openly repudiated in the encyclicals and one that ceased to be fashionable 10 or 15 years ago.

Proof Positive Publisher Erred

THE organizers felt pretty good about the situation. They weren't sure that victory was in the bag, but they had that "victory feeling."

The publisher of the local weekly newspaper, however, didn't share their enthusiasm or their belief that the workers in his town were interested in the CIO.

In fact, he even felt that his subscribers wouldn't be interested in reading about union activities.

Whereupon, he sat down at his typewriter and wrote a letter to the public relations office of the CIO Organizing Committee.

"FOR some time we have been receiving your releases relative to strikes, threats, etc., but we never use any of it, and it is really a useless expense and waste of paper for you to continue it," the publisher said.

"This is primarily a farming community and 90% of the people are not interested in labor unions and strikes, etc., so we feel that the less read about them the more respect they will have for labor. The most of them feel that most labor disputes will result in higher prices for them.

"There is one sawmill here employing mostly Negroes, and the AFL has had a half-hearted union there for some time, and the CIO has been trying to take over. My observation is that the Negroes are not enthusiastic about either, as they do not like deductions from their wages."

PUBLIC relations representatives did a bit of checking and found:

The sawmill employed approximately 1000 persons.

Sawmill workers and their families represented about half of the town's total population.

There was real interest in the CIO among mill workers.

So, a public relations representative sat down at a typewriter and turned out a letter to the publisher.

THE letter said: "I should like to explain our reasons for mailing you news releases.

"We assume that newspaper publishers, especially those of country weeklies, which exert such a wide and unusually beneficial influence, are interested in publishing news of events affecting the lives and well-being of the people of their community, their state and their country.

"It is a fact, shown again and again, that wherever labor has organized it has led to better wages, better working conditions and general economic improvements for the majority of citizens in the community."

THE next portion of the letter called the publisher's attention to the fact that his position in the community was greatly different from that of the average mill hand.

"Has it occurred to you, Mr. ——, that you are in a privileged position in your community?" the letter asked.

"You are in the enviable position of being able, if you desire, to tell the people all the facts—such as the fact that corporation profits, even after taxes, are at an all-time high. That could be a factor in high prices, too."

THAT'S about all there was to the letter —except some statistics. These told a simple story.

The NLRB had just held an election at the sawmill and 715 employes had cast ballots.

Twenty-one voters signified they didn't want to be represented by any union.

The vote for the AFL Carpenters was 42.

And 652 voted in favor of the CIO International Woodworkers!

TOUGH GUY!

Greed Has No Foresight--NAM Farce In Advertisements Causing Tragedy

By VAN A. BITTNER
Director, CIO Organizing Committee

FOR MANY days, the reading public has been confronted with advertisements from the NAM against any kind of price control.

The line between comedy and tragedy is so infinite that it is hard to be drawn, and the only way that tragedy and comedy can be analyzed in this NAM position is that they are using comedy in their advertising to bring about a tragedy in our country.

The NAM has a right to take a position on any public question—that no one should deny it—but our complaint is it occupies the hypocritical position of being against price control. Actually, all they mean is that the people through their government should not control prices, but prices should be controlled by members of the NAM and others of big business.

If the NAM in its advertisements would say definitely and truthfully it is against Government control of prices, and stand 100% for prices to be controlled by NAM members and other extortionists, then we would all know exactly what is meant. Of course, I understand the NAM will not do this, because it knows that if the people knew the truth, the truth would make them free.

In its ads, the NAM goes so far as to say that women and children in any foreign country where the people, through their government, have price control should be allowed to starve to death. This is greed and extortion at its maximum.

WE have always had price control in the U S. and every other country since the beginning of history, and what is true of price control is also just as true of rationing.

The amount of food, clothing and the general standard of living of working men and women and their children has always been determined by their income, which is the most effective means of rationing known. The only difference is that up until this war, prices were controlled by manufacturers and other processors of goods to sell.

Even the Government has helped the NAM and other extortionists to control prices over a long period of years previous to the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

This price control was manipulated through a protective tariff, under the guise that this sort of control was helpful to the American working man and his family, just as the NAM is now saying that the Taft-Hartley Bill is helpful to unions. Both positions are untenable and untruthful.

We all remember the late twenties, and when we reached 1933, after years of control of our government by such institutions as the NAM and its ilk, our economy was busted wide open. It was necessary for Roosevelt, in the very first act of his Administration, to close every bank.

AFTER these historic facts, which no one can deny, we wonder why the NAM cannot see the folly of its ways. However, this is very easily explained. Greed has no foresight. Therefore, let the NAM tell the American people that they are pagans in the field of economy, and as pagans, hypocrisy means nothing in their moral conception of the welfare of the people.

I am neither a Socialist nor a Communist, but just a plain American who is warning the NAM and others of their stripe that it had better awaken to the interests of the people or it will bring about the same economy in the U. S. as their brother extortionists brought about in England.

It Couldn't Happen To A Better Guy

From U. S. News:

"Mayor Hubert Humphrey, of Minneapolis, is being groomed as an anti-Communist labor candidate to unseat Sen. Joe Ball in the 1948 election.

"Minnesota business groups are worried. They are quietly looking for a 'war hero' as a third candidate.

"But, Joe Ball has a bigger worry than all this. Minnesota law permits senatorial candidates to file as late as August. After the June GOP convention (Harold E.) Stassen might decide the Senate looks pretty good."

"The Sun shines bright on my old Kentucky home . . . and the birds make music all the day."

CIO members, reading in November of the PAC-indorsed Democratic comeback in Kentucky, had cause indeed for elation after a year of Taft-Hartleyitis.

Professional politicians, however, knowing the strength of the Kentucky GOP machine of Gov. Simeon Willis, sought for the news behind the news.

All they had to do was to look in Room 478, Starks Bldg., Louisville. There, the Jefferson County, Ky., CIO-PAC had set up its offices right next to those of CIO Regional Director William B. Taylor. There, PAC had installed as its director Roy Cooper, a veteran Democratic leader who is hep to the Bluegrass political scene. There, PAC and Cooper had mapped a registration and voting drive that clicked. There, PAC expects to keep its date for '48.

THE Jefferson county formula was drawn up by Cooper and the PAC officers who engaged him. They are PAC Chm. William H. Beatty, Steelworkers; Co-Chm. Bill Taylor, Dan Bedell, Auto; Walter Case, Transport Workers; J. E. Meeks, Brewery; secy.-treas. Lillian Yadon, Textile; recording secy., Henry Wise, Amalgamated. Each local union has two members on the PAC committee; one is on finance, the other on indorsements.

The Jefferson county formula is pretty basic. It requires a lot of work. It requires more than just enthusiasm. It requires more than a just cause. It works if a lot of elbow grease is applied.

Here is the basic procedure (keep an eye on the pictures, too):

(a) Cooper, aided by his secretary, Maxine Capel, secured membership lists from every one of the county's CIO locals. (Incidentally, Louisville and its suburbs make up Jefferson County.)

(b) They printed filing cards.

(c) They secured a map of the county, engaging an artist to break the map into precincts (blue numbers), wards (solid column), legislative districts (green line), senatorial districts (red line). Magisterial regions also were listed for the county, which makes up the entire 3d Congressional district. Population: Louisville, about 360,000; rest of county, 75,000; registered voters, 175,000.

(d) They then bought a copy of Caron's Louisville City Directory. (Most cities have similar directories.) The street division of the directory was taken over to the Registration Board where the ward and precinct of each person in the book was by his name. This was simpler by the fact that one in the same block, least one side of the blo the same classification b etc. For instance, Lawr Morris, president of Tex cal 2, was on page 122 directory. That put him 4th Ward, 12th precinct.

(The Starks Bldg., C PAC office, is in the 6th 1st precinct. Louisville's Churchill Downs, whe Kenutcky Derby is run, in the 6th ward, but mu ther south in the 16th pr

(e) The next step was sult the map and brea voter in the street list do ther into legislative, et tricts. The map shows, tally, that Louisville's wa from the Ohio River (exc 1st, which starts inland) all across the city. There wards. Also, it is int that the east side of t in general is a blues (well-to-do) area: the wards are industrial in th and working class resid the south; the western which are also on the Ohio, are working class; called middle class g lives in the southern an ern wards.

(g) Ward and precinct lists are set up from the information now on hand. The lists are checked against the Registration Board's records and each voter is marked in one of these ways: NR—not registered; D—Democrat; R—Republican.

(All this paintstaking work last summer developed an astounding fact: 73% of Jefferson County's CIO members were not registered.)

WHO'S WHO:
Lillian Yadon

Modish, quick-thinking Lil Yadon (pronounced Yay-don) came into the labor movement because she was a good soft-ball player. She was hired 10 years ago by Louisville Textile Co., to become its star "floating short," which is the 10th player on a softball team, technically called "short fielder." In the plant, she was a winder. She participated in a sitdown strike and then joined the CIO Textile Workees' Workers' staff in 1939. Now, she is one of the only three women joint board managers in Textile. She's a native of Louisville, and visits her locals every day.

(h) A letter was sent out to every one on the CIO list marked NR. The letter started; "YOU ARE NOT A REGISTERED VOTER!" and reminded all that "corporations and financial interests elected to office those who have smashed OPA; raised prices; raised rents; and ignored housing needs—in addition to anti-labor legislation." The letter had a black-bordered box at the bottom, recalling that June 23, 1947, was "Black Monday," the day the Taft-Hartley bill was passed over Pres. Truman's veto.

(Louisville had another "Black Monday" on Aug. 6, 1855, when many lives were lost and property damage ran high in "Know Nothing" riots against Catholics. Today, Louisville has a large number of Catholic churches and parochial schools.)

NEXT PAC step was the registration drive, which ran from Aug. 12 to Sept. 5 in 1947.

The first week in August, shop stewards were called together; leaflets were distributed in the plants saying that the next day at noon a speaker would be at the gate; the following day, the speaker—oftentimes Bill Taylor—made his address; a day later, leaflets were passed out in the mornings saying that busses would be waiting at 3 p.m. to take the first shift to the Registration Board (all registry is at one place.)

The process was repeated at all the larger CIO plants—textile; paper, steel, auto, etc.

(i) After the registry period, Cooper's office went back through its routine and added the newly-registered to the lists and found the non-registered CIO members had been reduced to 50%.

(j) For each of the wards where there are CIO members, a ward chairman, with a co-chairman for the north and south portions of the ward, was appointed. They have full charge of their ward and will work closely with Cooper's system, which includes the use of blueprints of every precinct. Precinct—259 in city, 66 outside—captains are named and then will pick block workers, who report to their captains.

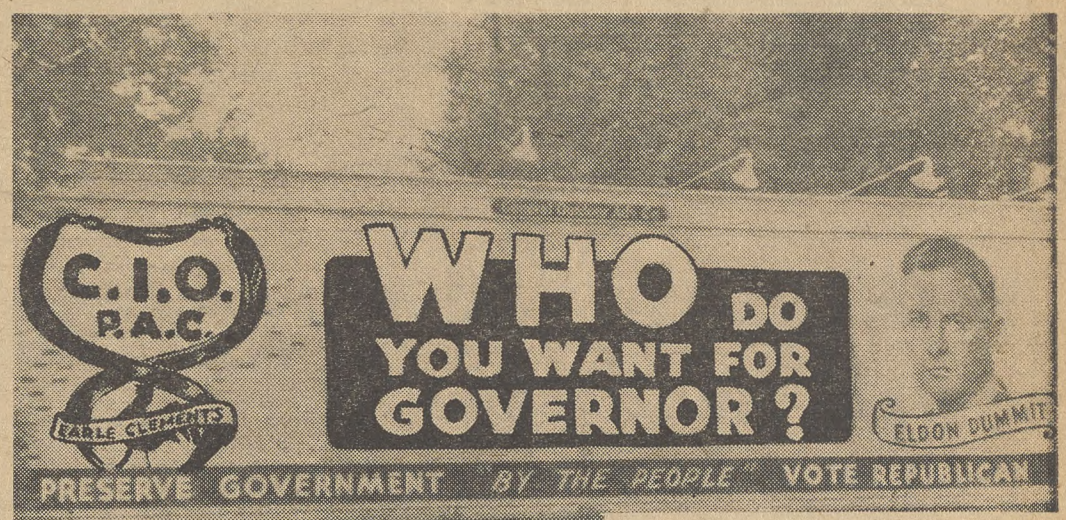
7. There was close liaison between Jefferson County PAC and its brothers from across the Ohio in Indiana. The Southern Indiana PAC indorsed 13 candidates (both Republican and Democratic) in New Albany and Jeffersonville, won 12 of the elections. Here, Lil Yadon confers with Arthur Collins, Jr., (Shipbuilding), chairman of the Southern Indiana group. Nick Marsella (Amalgamated) is chairman.



8. When you're active in PAC, you unfortunately are the subject of vicious attacks. Perhaps, the best way to end such tactics is to make sure that PAC works. Here is a billboard which the Republicans plastered all over Kentucky. Other forms of attack: blasts at 'northerners," race-baiting, labor-baiting (Clements voted against Taft-Hartley).

6. Another union that participated in the PAC drive was Taylor's own union, the Auto Workers. UAW officers at the Louisville Ford plant (sparrows fly through the plant, often alight on the assembly lines) are shown here in the plant cafeteria conferring with Lil Yadon. Dan Bedell, PAC co-chairman, talks to Lil, Slick Morgan, Mooney Redwitz, Chester Embry, William Connor, George Gardner, C. S. Witten (president of UAW Local 862) and Frank Burnett

9. After the election, PAC rechecked its lists. Here, PAC worker, Sarah Marrs (Paperworkers) interviews Steelworker W. B. Reddix, lead foreman. She found Reddix is registered; his son, W. C., also a USA member, is only 19.

Louisville Shows How PAC'll Keep That Date

none — or few — CIO members (such as the 1st and 2d wards) chairmen, captains and other workers will be sent in from other wards.

(Those are the basic, down-to-earth steps. In addition, of course, a lot of spade work must be done by international representatives, literature must be distributed at plant gates and elsewhere, rallies must be held (the PAC pre-election rally was Kentucky's largest labor rally), Radio speeches must be made, workers must be trained to answer arguments against their candidates, etc. You don't get much sleep or recreation while PACing.)

COOPER and the PAC committee are busy at work now on the vital job for 1948—getting everybody to vote. (Cooper's advice to practical politicians taking jobs similar to his: don't be on any committee governing your actions.)

Is this an easy job? Cooper says a vehement "no". For example, there is occasional resistance to registering.

The PAC worker has the logical answer to the several types of resisters.

There's the voter who says "oh, hell, all politicians are crooked; what's the use of registering and voting?" In reply, the PAC worker says that all politicians are not crooked. "But," says he, "suppose there are some, who's to blame? Get in there and vote and get honest people in office. And remember, you can't beat the guys responsible for high prices and other inflationary measures; you can't retire the guy who is out to wreck your union without voting."

Then, there is the citizen who says, "I'm a Republican (or a Democrat) and, you PAC people have indorsed a Democrat (or a Republican)." To them, PAC replies, "first we want you to register; then we want you to vote. If you're a Republican, back primary candidates who fight inflation and labor-busting; if you're a Democrat, also see to it that your party puts up the people's champions."

(As most PAC workers know, you have to take a lot of libel, slander, insults and calumny when you're trying to do PAC work. Kentucky was no exception. The GOP plastered the states with anti-PAC sign boards (see picture on Page 7); radio speakers like Congressman Thruston Morton (R. Ky.), of the 3d District (that's Jefferson County), did some alleged race baiting on the air; a paper called "Labor Management News" carried cartoons labeling various state CIO and AFL leaders as "Count" Weiler; "King" Monsky, "Duke" Ansboury, "Baron" Cohen, "Lord" Caddy and "Prince" Taylor. Bill Taylor was downright hurt because he was not given a higher title.

Cooper, versed as he is in practical politics, knows that the drive to make that date in 1948 is one in which no one can let down. At stake will be nine Congressional seats, plus the Senatorial seat now held by Republican John S. Cooper, who voted solidly wrong in the recent regular session.

Particularly at stake will be Morton's 3d Congressional seat.

IF PAC carries through, Cooper and the other PAC leaders feel, the victory of November, 1947, can be brought to its full realization in November, 1948.

In the recent gubernatorial election, 2d District Congressman Earle C. Clements, Morganfield (Cathy Capps, of the CIO News, is from Morganfield) defeated Atty. Gen. Eldon S. Dummit (Willis could not run again under the state's one-consecutive term law).

In Louisville, 12 PAC-backed democrats (including an AFL leader) ousted 12 Republican aldermen (there is one alderman for each ward).

In Jefferson County, six PAC indorsed canididates won in seven races. No primary candidates were indorsed by PAC because of limited time; next year, indorsements are planned.

(Comparisons of Kentucky votes are fascinating. In the 1946 Congressional race, Thruston Morton defeated the veteran Democratic incumbent, Emmet O'Neal, by 61,899 to 44,599 votes. This November, Clements carried the county, 59,407 to 52,615. In the 1943 Governor race, Democrat Donaldson lost to Willis by 8000 votes; this year, Clements won the stale by 85,000 votes.)

Another PAC aim: get indorsement acceptances from 25% of candidates so that PAC can have all-important polls-watchers. Inspectors also are needed.

(There is no indication yet whether Gov. Clements will appoint Col. Cooper, Col. Taylor, Col. Beatty, Col. Yadon, etc.)

Summation: There, you have the Louisville story. In this cosmic age, the Old Kentucky Home is not so far away any more. This might have been your state, your city, your town, your ward, your precinct, your block.

It wasn't easy; 1948 won't be easy. It'll take guts; it'll take spirit; it'll take manpower; it'll take perseverance. Above all, it'll take work—hard sweat-of-the-brow work. But, it can be done. It must be done. That's the date in '48.

Loo-uh-vil

Louisville, named for France's Louis XVI, is close to what is perhaps the richest spot in the U. S.—Fort Knox's gold depository. Famed for the Kentucky Derby, the mint julep and the Louisville Slugger baseball bat, the city isn't completely glamour. It has plenty of industry, main of which is, as every bourbon drinker can plainly see for several drinks, spiritous liquors. There are also tobacco, food, rail repair, lumber products, autos, textiles, etc. The city is 36.9 square miles and growing since suburbs are being absorbed. If you want to go there, you can use at least nine railroad lines, many buses, several plane lines, Ohio river boats or drive in by routes 31E, 31W, 42, 60, 150, and others. Two sights of many to see: Louisville U., oldest (1837) municipal university in America; the Ohio River rapids (river falls 26 feet in 2 miles). History: Louisville's site was probably visited by the explorer La-Salle; the suburbs played haven for the exiled Louis Phillippe of France; famed residents included J. J. Audubon and Actress Mary Anderson. And, remember, Mr. Reader, that any similarity between the Louisville article in this paper and the one in the Dec. 20, 1947 issue of the Saturday Evening Post is purely coincidental.

WHO'S WHO: Wm. B. Taylor

This colorfully-talking, youthful-looking labor veteran of 43 got his baptism in the Chrysler sitdown. He then became an Int'l. representative for the CIO Auto Workers, assistant director of the UAW Ford division, negotiating first Ford contract. Then, did organizing in California aircraft industry. In 1943, joined CIO staff, assigned to oil organization. In 1946, he went to Kentucky as CIO Regional director, succeeding Joseph Cannon, who retired.

WHO'S WHO: Roy Cooper

A Navy veteran of World War I, he was a Democratic party group man for 16 years. Group men are in charge of precinct work. He knows Kentucky politics and politicians from A to Z and from Z to A. He's a UOPWA member.

G. R. Hathaway Named Georgia PAC Head

GROVER R. HATHAWAY, Director of District 9, CIO Packinghouse Workers, was elected chairman of CIO's Political Action Committee for Georgia at the PAC's annual convention, held in Atlanta.

Following his election, Hathaway called upon all members of the CIO to share in the political task facing the organized labor movement in this state. He said:

"The PAC job to be done in 1948 can only be achieved by the cooperation and sincere effort of all members. We must work with other liberal groups to win. I urge all members to share the load."

HATHAWAY

Hugh Gammon, chairman of the Georgia Seventh District Political Action Committee was elected vice president of the State unit. Charles Mathias was elected secretary without opposition, while Leonard Hull was chosen treasurer.

C. J. McClarty, R. C. Guiney, and Miss Ila Kemp were elected to the board of trustees.

The Georgia PAC voted unanimously to set up committees in the Second, Fifth, and Seventh Congressional Districts. It was pointed out that much of the CIO strength in Georgia lies in these districts.

It was noted that Rep. Cox, of the Second District, and Rep. James Davis, of the Fifth, have never been friendly to the organized labor movement in Georgia. In the Seventh District, however, Henderson Lanham cast the sole Georgia vote against the Taft-Hartley Bill.

Following the lead of the CIO in Georgia and the National CIO, the PAC voted to organize joint farmer-labor committees for discussion of mutual problems and for mapping program to serve the needs of farmers and industrial workers.

Resolutions were also voted requesting the continuance of rent control and demanding the return of price control.

Hathaway, who is vice president of the Georgia State Industrial Union Council, succeeds Joe Pedigo, manager of the Northwest Georgia Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers.

Gets New Post

James Myers, associated for many years with the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America as industrial relations secretary, will join the staff of the National Child Labor Committee on Jan. 1 as assistant secretary for membership.

It's Almost Worth Weight In Gold

A new all-time high price of $40 per hundred pounds was paid for top grade steers at the Chicago stockyards last week.

The previous record was $39 paid Dec. 9.

15 to 1 Ballot For Union Shop

The CIO Shipbuilding Workers at the New York Shipyard, Camden, N. J., won an overwhelming vote of confidence recently when employes voted for a union shop by a margin of 15 to 1. The balloting followed close on the heels of a 19-weeks strike which ended last month.

Results of the NLRB election, as reported by the union, were 3307 for a union shop, 199 against, 10 void. Only 133 of those eligible failed to vote.

Similar elections are scheduled for Bethlehem and Federal yards in the near future. The poll is necessitated by a Taft-Hartley provision requiring approval of a majority of the employes in the bargaining unit before a union shop can be established.

Intl. Union Pres. John Green hailed the victory in a letter to the local's Pres. Harry Carson.

Union "electioneering" consisted of one question-and-answer leaflet and a vote-reminder canvass of all eligible workers by shop officers.

Bid For Miami Rent Rise May Be Turned Down

ACTING Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods last week unofficially indicated to three Miami tenants' representatives that he would turn down a Miami rent advisory board request for removal of controls in the area on March 1 if Congress keeps the rent lid on beyond the scheduled Feb. 28 expiration date.

The local board, consisting of eight real estate, hotel and business men, three city officials, two lawyers and a veterans' organization spokesman, last week sought Woods' approval for a general 25% rent hike and decontrol after February.

M. M. Singer of the Miami CIO, one of three Miami residents who met with Woods last week to urge rejection of the proposals, stated that the Acting Expediter appeared opposed to a 25% increase. Whether he would approve a lesser rise, if it were requested was not known.

IN Chicago, meanwhile, tenants, veterans and labor groups, battling a proposed 15% rent hike, won the second round in as Woods stood by his original rejection of the local rent board's recommendation.

The Housing Expediter had turned down the request on Nov. 6, since it did not include any substantiating data. On Nov. 13 the board asked Woods "what information you would need in addition to that which you already have." Woods was formerly chief examiner of the Chicago OPA rent board.

In replying to the letter last week Woods pointed out that his information indicated that Chicago landlords were receiving higher rentals than the average for 33 other large cities.

In September he said, the Chicago rent index was 127.6 as compared with the combined index for 34 large cities which was "only" 113.6.

"As you can readily see, the data available in this office do not substantiate your recommendation for a 15% overall increase."

The local board now may resubmit its proposals, based upon its own substantiating evidence, Woods explained.

The board was recently enlarged by 10 members after criticism that it was dominated by real estate representatives. Its complexion appeared last week to be unchanged, however, when Mike Mann, CIO regional director, and one of the new board members, remained the lone dissenter as the group voted to stand by its original request.

Mann denounced the meeting as a "farce" and criticized the board's exclusion of the press or public from the sessions.

Ebasco Strike Reveals Power Shortage

Walkout Now 4 Months Old

YOU doubtless have read of the gasoline shortage, the steel shortage and all manner of shortages, but so far most newspapers have printed little of the power shortage.

The Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, Local 231 of CIO Office and Professional Workers, which has been on strike for almost four months at Ebasco, New York, points out that there is a real power shortage, and that it is growing worse.

Ebasco is the engineering subsidiary of the Electric Bond & Share Co., reported to be the world's largest public utility holding system.

The union quotes the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Federal Power Commission to prove there is a shortage in rural and industrial areas.

Claude R. Wickard, head of the Rural Electrification Administration, recently made public a report of a special committee of engineers and power specialists who said that the rural power shortage is having a serious effect on "the maintenance of food production" and on "the economic and social well-being of the farmers and the nation as a whole.

LOCAL 231 says that the power monopolies are not only taking advantage of the shortages to get higher prices but are provoking the shortages. It says that its own experience with Ebasco helps substantiate the charge.

But, first, a word about the 400 strikers.

These men are top flight professional engineers—mechanical, civil and electrical engineers and architects. They design the power plants, the hydro-electric stations, gas and water works which, their union asserts, are needed to relieve the critical power shortage in the nation today.

"The company had failed to make a single constructive offer to these engineers after two months of stalling in negotiations," the union reported. "Just before negotiations were broken off last summer, the union warned the company that it would be jeopardizing the nation's power needs.

"BUT the company apparently wanted a power shortage. It threw the Taft-Hartley law against the strikers, and then revived every tried and tested union busting practice—including the hiring of Walter Gordon Merritt, notorious for his unionbusting—but the strikers hold firm.

"They feel they are holding the front line for all labor against the Taft-Hartley law. Union membership has brought them outstanding national salary gains and job security. They have reached new heights of security in a badly underpaid field."

Right in Season: Members of Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, Local 231, CIO Office and Professional Workers, carry Christmas trees as they picket the offices of Ebasco, engineering subsidiary of Electric Bond and Share Co. The trees had electric lights operated by small batteries. The strike is almost four months old.

N.Y. UNIONS AID CO-OPs

A PROGRAM for fighting high food prices and other inflationary pressures against consumers is being developed in the New York area by representatives of organized labor and the cooperative movement.

In response to many requests from unions for assistance in organizing cooperatives, reports Consumers Cooperative Services, a committee was formed to help direct labor's interest in co-ops into constructive channels through area-wide planning.

The committee was set up by the New York Metropolitan Cooperative Federation, Consumers Cooperative Services, Inc., Eastern Cooperatives, Inc., and the Council for Cooperative Development. Chairman is August Gold, a director of CCS.

CIO representatives attending the preliminary conference included Sam Eubanks, Newspaper Guild; Samuel Jacobs, Textile Workers; Julius Sum and Alton Levy, Local 338, Retail & Wholesale Employees, and Mrs. Barbara Wertheimer, Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The conference discussed the current move of unions to use their halls as depots for selling foodstuffs to their members in case lots and other methods for extending the advantages of consumer cooperation among union members, both through joining existing co-ops and organizing their own.

Injunction Rule Reversed By 2 Scranton Judges

IN the ancient courthouse at Scranton, Pa., close by the statue honoring the founder of the United Mine Workers, John Mitchell, last week came a reversal in attitude of the court on slapping injunctions against CIO unions.

Judge Michael J. Eagen flatly turned down the request of attorneys for General Metal Fabricators, S. Scranton, for an injunction against Local No. 127, CIO Electrical Workers. That union, headed by UE Rep. Frank Kozik, was called in after the strike of 60 employes had started spontaneously the week before and the employes asked Kozik to take over.

Judge Will Leach two months ago issued a far-reaching injunction in the same court against CIO Communications workers Rep. William Lamey and nine WGBI radio station employes, among other things restraining the union and its friends from even publicizing that a strike exists. Within a week, Lackawanna County employers followed the same procedure and Judge Leach issued injunctions without hearings against UMW District 50 and Teamsters' Union locals which had gone on strikes. The WGBI radio injunction is being appealed to the State Supreme Court by the ACA—assisted by the State CIO and CIO Councils of Scranton and Wilkes-Barre.

Eagen served notice that he will not issue a preliminary injunction which would tie the hands of labor organizations. Attorneys for General Metal had rushed to Leach only to be told he is retiring from the bench Jan. 1, and he declined to act. Attorneys went to Eagen who announced he would not short-circuit the existing procedure and would merely grant a rule to show cause why injunction should be issued but only after both sides had had a chance to give testimony.

Later, the attorneys went before Judge T. Linus Hoban, who also declined to slap on a writ against the UE strikers without a hearing. He issued a "show cause" order for an open court hearing for which the UE local is preparing.

All labor officials of Northeastern Pennsylvania have protested against the rash of strike-breaking preliminary injunctions that have followed the pattern set by Leach in the radio case. WGBI strikers have received financial assistance from several AFL and UMW locals and continue to picket the radio station daily, although the injunction restrains them from using a sound truck in Scranton and distributing leaflets in front of stores which advertise on their radio station.

Asks Machine Supervisors

INDUSTRY'S spokesmen continued in recent weeks to parade to the witness stand and urge various plans for wrecking, emaculating or downright repealing the Fair Labor Standards (wage-hour) Act.

The daisy of all, however, was that proposed by Reuben Haslam, associate counsel for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers. Haslam urged that, in addition to recognition of the executive status of supervisors of employes, recognition also should be given to the executive status of supervisors of machines.

Observers took the suggestion to mean, in its extremity, that a stenographer, who in effect "supervises" her machine, would thus become exempt from FLSA if Haslam wins his point. And any machine operator could conceivably be excluded from coverage.

Haslam also wanted concession that a profession may be acquired without a college degree.

Meanwhile, John Edelman, legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers, declared that Southern cotton mill operators had lined up with NAM in the anti-FLSA drive.

But, Edelman, charged, this drive to eliminate the 40-hour week and overtime pay is hypocrisy. For, he said, Southern and other textile mills are "right now about to curtail hours of operation because of shortages of cotton and rayon and other fibres."

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Regional Director Ewald Sandner, Newark, N. J., reports: Following is result of an election held in the Graphic Mfg. Co., North Bergen, N. J.; Total eligible votes 29, voted 26, United Rubber Workers, 26.

In charge of organization was District Director O. H. Bosley, assisted by Joseph Ugrovitch, Representative, URWA.

Thomas E. Andert, Chairman and Director of Organization, Optical and Instrument Workers Organizing Committee, St. Louis, Mo., advises that an election was won at Clinton Optical Company, Rochester, N. Y.—Optical and Instrument Workers Organizing Committee CIO, 17, no union 1. The organizer was James O'Reilly.

George Brown, Director of Organization, IWA-CIO, Portland, Oregon, advises as follows: "D.R.B. Logging Corporation, Springfield, Oreg., 25 to 22. Timber Inc., Sweet Home., Oreg.; IWA 17, no 2."

CIO Organizing Committee

In New Orleans, La., members of CIO have launched a project designed to furnish the veterans hospital there a minimum of 60 pints of blood per month for the next year—a saving of $18,000 to the veterans administration.

The program was launched by Local 201, United Chemical Workers, at the Johns-Manville plant. The company has set aside a room at the plant where a team of doctors from the hospital may call once a week to take blood from the union volunteers.

Professional donors receive from $25 to $30 per pint for blood, it is said. On that basis, the dollar value of the union contribution amounts to $1,500 per month, it is pointed out. Hospital authorities say they have need for 100 to 150 pints a month. Other CIO local unions in the area are arranging to join in the program with the possibility that the total blood needs of the hospital may soon be provided by members of CIO.

Another year is in the offing, and it is the sincere hope of the writer that we will all work together toward our objectives with renewed vigor to the best interests of what CIO stands for to you and your families.

Happy New Year!

Two Unions Open Drive For Rise

TWO international CIO unions — the Auto and Packinghouse Workers—began formulating terms of their 1948 wage demands last week in line with the announced CIO policy of seeking increases to offset the rising costs of living.

In anticipation of reopening wage negotiations, the executive board of UAW Ford Local 600 and leaders of five key General Motors locals in the Flint, Mich. area have called for 25c hourly increases.

In addition to the across-the-board figure, the GM leaders also proposed a sliding scale cost-of-living bonus and revision of the collective bargaining procedure. Some 55,000 GM workers at the Buick, Fisher Body, Chevrolet and AC Sparkplug divisions were represented at the local union leaders' meeting which made the proposals to the union's GM Council.

The Ford local, composed of 68,000 employes, is the UAW's largest.

Presumably, the union's international policy committee will consider the proposals at its meeting Jan. 6. The GM contract can be reopened April 25 if notice is given in February, while the Ford contract permits reopening for wage talks in July.

PACKINGHOUSE Workers last week also called for wage reopenings with six major packing companies. Although the contracts do not expire until Aug. 11, the union may request a wage reopening at any time upon 30 days notice.

Companies given notice included the "Big Four"—Armour, Cudahy, Swift and Wilson—and John Morrell and Tobin Packing Co. Contracts with other independent companies will be opened at the discretion of the union's district directors, the union said.

Exact amount to be sought has not been announced, but the union stated that the figure will reflect rising living costs, possibly in the form of a cost-of-living bonus.

IN MAKING the announcement Intl. Union Pres. Ralph Helstein cited a recent Bureau of Labor Statistics survey indicating that a modest budget for a family of four would require an income of from $3,000 to $3,458 annually. The study did not include price rises since June 1947.

"These annual incomes are far above the yearly earning most of the packinghouse workers receive," Helstein said. "During the war years, the packinghouse workers were denied any wage increase under the program of wage stabilization administered by the War Labor Board. Whatever increases we received since that time have been lost in a saturnalia of high profits by Big Business."

THE CIO Public Workers at a recent legislative conference in Washington determined to seek increases of $750 a year for some 20,000 government employes. Since the raises must be provided by Congressional action, union attorneys are now drafting proposed legislation to include raises plus grievance procedures and arbitration of disputes.

T-H Makes NLRB's Life Busy

DURING the month of November, 1,382 cases were filed with the National Labor Relations Board. That represents an increase of 43 percent over cases filed during the previous month of October.

Of the November cases, 197 alleged unfair labor practices by employers, 60 charged unfair labor practices by labor organizations, and 1,125, or 81%, involved petitions for various types of elections.

Election cases filed: Of the 1,125 petitions filed, 488 were petitions for collective bargaining elections, 36 were petitions to decertify unions, 600 were petitions for union-shop authorization elections; 1, a petition for deauthorization of the union shop, was later withdrawn.

Of the 488 petitions for collective bargaining elections, 277 were filed by AFL affiliates, 88 were filed by CIO affiliates, 184 were filed by independent unions, 39 were filed by employers.

Of the 600 petitions for union-shop authorizations elections, 358 were filed by AFL affiliates, 101 were filed by CIO affiliates, 141 were filed by independent unions.

Collective bargaining election results: 153 collective bargaining elections were conducted, in which 31,747 employes were eligible to vote; 79% of eligible employees exercised their franchise by casting valid ballots.

Of the 24,983 valid votes, 32%, or 20,587, were cast in favor of representation for the purposes of collective bargaining.

Of the 78 elections in which AFL unions participated, they won at least a majority in 42 instances. They failed of a majority in 32 elections; in 4 elections the results were indeterminate.

CIO unions participated in 17 elections and won 6.

Of the 72 elections in which independent unions participated, they won 51 and lost 21.

Decertification Election Results: 6 Elections, each of them based upon the consent of all parties, were conducted upon petitions by employes asserting that a particular labor organization no longer represented a majority of the employes. 446 employes were eligible to vote in these elections. 437, or 93% of them cast valid ballots.

Of the 437 valid votes, 63%, or 275, were cast against unions. 4 elections resulted in decertification of the union; in two cases the union was continued.

Union-Shop Authorization Election Results: 112 union-shop authorization polls were conducted. Each was based upon the consent of the parties.

91% of those eligible to vote in the union-shop authorization elections cast valid ballots.

Of the 15,503 valid votes, 90%, or 13,803, were cast in favor of authorization of a union-shop provision.

The union shop received the support of the majority of employes in all 112 elections. 56 were won by AFL affiliates; 53 by independent unions; 3 by the CIO.

Charges Of Unfair Labor Practices: A total of 257 such charges was received.

Of the 197 charges brought against employers: 98 were filed by individuals. 56 were filed by AFL affiliates. 29 were filed by CIO affiliates. 14 were filed by independent unions.

Of the 60 charges brought against unions: 42 were filed by employers and employer associations. 16 were filed by individuals. 1 was filed by an independent union. 1 was filed by a CIO affiliate.

Some of the allegations made against unions in the 60 cases are: 19 charges of secondary boycotts, 13 by AFL affiliates, 6 by CIO affiliates, 6 charges of jurisdictional disputes among AFL unions.

Cumulative Figures: At the end of November, 5219 cases were pending disposition at various procedural levels.

Of these, 2791, or 53%, were filed before August 22, 1947, the effective date of the Taft-Hartley law.

Of the 2791 Wagner Act cases, 1,638 involved charges of unfair labor practice and 1,153 involved petitions for collective bargaining elections.

Of the 2,428 pending cases which were filed after August 22, 1947, charges of unfair labor practices accounted for 930 and petitions for various types of election 1,498 cases.

GOP Group Told Why T-H Disrupts

HOW the Taft-Hartley Act disrupts long-established industrial relations was shown to the House labor subcommittee which last week went to Chicago to find why AFL newspaper printers have been on strike since Nov. 24.

A photo-engraving process which eliminates the use of type is being used to publish the six struck Chicago dailies. Printers are striking in a number of other cities, and last week a local union requested its international for permission to take a strike vote against four Washington, D. C., daily newspapers. The vote was 412 to 22.

Pres. Woodruff Randolph of the Int'l Typographical Union summed up his union's position at the Chicago hearings: "the best way to get a law that will work is to take the entire law (T-H) off the books and start all over again. We want the closed shop (which is banned by T-H).

"We are not going to desert that philosophy. That is our life."

Agree 100 Years

Just before the committee hearings were recessed for Christmas weekend, Randolph said that printers and publishers had carried on collective bargaining for 100 years and that no one could "legislate the details of industrial management."

These words should be ringing in the ears of the Republican committee members, Reps. Owens (Ill.), Kersten (Wis.) and Busbey (Ill.). They all voted for the House T-H version, the conference T-H bill and to override President Truman's veto. The Democratic members of the committee, Rep. Kennedy (Mass.) voted all three times to keep the T-H law off the books.

Chairman Hartley (R., N. J.) of the House labor committee appointed the subcommittee.

Although they have not made their report to Hartley, observers were doubtful whether Republican members of the committee are convinced that the law will not work.

What Congress

Bert Owens said that Congress, in passing T-H, "never had in mind for a moment that unions which have been getting along for years with employers would have difficulty with the law."

Kersten said information obtained at the hearings "may result in modification of the union shop provisions of the Taft-Hartley law or perhaps legalizing the closed shop."

Under T-H an employer may grant a union shop provided that a majority of all employes, including those not in the union, vote for it.

In Washington, a NLRB hearing was postponed until Jan. 7 at Chicago by Trial Examiner Leff when the ITU refused to submit records under the T-H law case filed by the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

NLRB Attorney Sinsheimer, who appeared as representative of General Counsel Robert N. Denham, said he would apply to the U. S. District Court for a subpoena in order to get the union's books and records of its bargaining rules.

Truman Pardons Some C. O.'s, But Grants No General Amnesty

IN response to pleas from a number of clergymen, educators, writers, labor leaders and others, Pres. Truman last week granted a Christmas present of pardons to a number of conscientious objectors.

Included in the list were some American citizens of Japanese descent.

It was not what could be described as a general amnesty, since clemency was denied to a number of others, including criminals, men moved by fear, men who declared they were motivated by intellectual or political beliefs, men who wanted to hold on to high-paying jobs and some Jehovah's Witnesses.

Most of the 1523 granted pardons have already served their prison sentences, if any, and are at home. So, for them, the order will restore their "political, civil and other rights." The "rights" varied according to state statutes.

In general, the privileges would include the right to vote, and to hold office, and the right to practice professions, such as law or medicine. A total of 626—of 15,805 cases considered by the President's Amnesty Board—are still in custody.

The cases listed were broken down into two general categories which might be called C. O.'s and "draft dodgers." The latter group included those accused of wilful violations. Reasons for the wilful violations ranged far and wide, including ignorance, illiteracy, honest misunderstanding or carelessness not rising to the level of criminal negligence. Some actually attempted to enlist later.

The criminals included those with known records for murder, counterfeiting, desertion, black marketing, men who drank benzedrine to deceive the medical examiners and men who sought to escape detection for crimes committed. None of those was given a pardon.

The pardons for C. O.'s were made on a broad basis. The board pointed out that some draft boards did not consider membership in an historic peace church to be a condition of exception. The President's board granted amnesty to violators who were not a member of a specific sect, but who were motivated by "a sincere religious belief." It did likewise in the cases of those who acted upon an essentially religious belief, but who were not able to present their cases properly.

Jehovah's Witnesses were considered separately from C. O.'s of other beliefs. The board—former Justice Owen J. Roberts, chairman; Willis Smith, attorney, and James F. O'Neill, commander of the American Legion—said that the 4300 cases were difficult because of the sect's contention that "all of the members were ministers." The board recommended pardons only for those it considered had ministerial status.

Rev. A. J. Muste, chairman of the Committee for Amnesty, issued a statement deploring the President's failure to grant general amnesty. Pointing out that amnesty had been granted to millions of persons throughout the world since the war, he declared "it is a cause for shame that the U. S. Government should grant such a picayune clemency." He said his committee would continue to press for general amnesty.

NLRB Backs Steel Union

IN an important NLRB case, Chief Counsel Robert N. Denham, as had been predicted, ruled against an employer in a case involving the CIO Steelworkers. This was the Nashville Corp. (Consolidated-Vultee) case.

CIO Counsel Lee Pressman commented:

The decision dismisses the charges of the Nashville Corp., completely substantiates the position of the steel union that the machinists union is no longer the bargaining representative at the corporation's property.

"The company is clearly obligated to bargain with the steel union.

"The decision also exposes the company's position, and shows that the true issues in the strike are those involving a decent wage and improved working conditions. It is now time for the company to negotiate with the union for settlement of these issues."

New England Dyers Win Pay Increase

Some 3,000 workers in eight finishing plants in Rhode Island and Connecticut will get a 10½c hourly wage increase under an agreement reached last week by the CIO Federation of Dyers and counsel for the companies. The increase goes into effect Jan. 5.

The pay boost will amount to a nine per-cent increase and will bring the average wage rate to $1.24½ an hour, according to Federation Pres. Joseph W. Knapik. Also provided in the agreement is a 10½c increase in both minimum and job rates, and hospitalization insurance covering workers' dependents paid for by the employers.

THIS IS THE LAST TIME I'M ASKIN' YA... WHERE'D YOU HIDE THE FIGURES THAT SHOW UP HAMKER'S PLAN?

IN A SAFE.... PLACE.... YOU'LL NEVER.... GET YOUR.... DIRTY HANDS.... ON THE STUFF....

"I THOUGHT I'D PUT A REAL SCARE INTO THE GUY...."

THIS STUFF IS CEMENT... AND IT'S GONNA BE PLENTY HARD.... AND HEAVY.... IN ANOTHER TEN MINUTES! IF YOU DON'T GIVE ME WHAT I WANT BY THEN.... I'M GONNA DUMP YOU IN THE RIVER!

OKAY, SO YOU'LL DUMP ME IN THE RIVER.... BUT YOU WON'T GET ME TO DOUBLE-CROSS MY UNION BROTHERS!

"WE TOOK BENTLEY OUT ON THE DOCK... DIDN'T MEAN TO HURT HIM, HONEST WE DIDN'T.... ONLY TA SCARE HIM...."

OKAY, WISE-GUY! THIS IS GONNA BE THE LAST TIME I'M ASKING YA....

SAVE YOUR BREATH, RAT!

HONEST.... IT WAS AN ACCIDENT THAT HE FELL INTA THE RIVER.... WE DIDN'T MEAN TA KILL HIM! WE DIDN'T! IT WAS THAT SKUNK HAMKER'S DOING! HE'S THE GUY YOU WANT!

AND I THINK WE'VE GOT HAMKER, TOO! HE CAN'T SQUIRM OUT OF THIS.... NOT AFTER CONK BARTON'S CONFESSION!

IF THIS CONFESSION IS TRUE... AND I'LL CHECK IT.... YOU CAN BE SURE THAT THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE IS NOT GOING TO REST UNTIL HAMKER IS BEHIND BARS!

HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL!!

CIO INFORMS WFTU OF ERP PLANS

By HENRY G. FLEISHER

LEADERS of European labor movements received a point-by-point briefing on CIO's position in support of a non-political foreign aid program during the recent meeting of the World Federation of Trade Unions at Paris.

Further discussion of the Marshall Plan and its effects on the European economy will be carried on when the WFTU's nine-man executive bureau holds its next quarterly meeting in Paris in February.

CIO's intention to place the foreign aid program squarely before the world-wide labor organization attracted much attention in the nation's press when the CIO group left for Paris early in November. Some papers speculated that the WFTU would fall apart at the very mention of the words "Marshall Plan"—but they were wrong.

While there was considerable talk about the problem—and some of it was heated—the WFTU has shown an ability to weather discussion and debate over basic questions affecting unions in every section of the globe.

ATTENDING the meeting for the CIO were Sec.-Treas. Carey; Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who is a vice-president of the WFTU; Michael Ross, director of international affairs for CIO; and John Abt, general counsel of the Amalgamated. They were joined at the Paris meetings by Elmer Cope, former steel union official who serves as a CIO-nominated assistant general secretary of WFTU at the organization's headquarters in the French capital.

But the CIO delegation argued that the question of economic help and recovery has been continuously before the world labor group since its formation in October 1945, and that discussion of the U.S. foreign aid program fits completely into that aspect of WFTU work.

After considerable discussion of procedure, the CIO won the right to present its case.

Arguing that the matter should be on the agenda were Leon Jouhaux, the French labor official who news reports say is helping lead a break with Communist leaders in the French Confederation of Labor; Rosenblum; Arthur Deakin of the British Trades Union Congress; Kupers of Holland; and Chu Fan, exiled leader of the Chinese Association of Labor. Opposed were the Russian and Italian members of the bureau.

MUCH of Carey's speech was devoted to a review of past the CIO and the World Federation. He reminded the bureau that the CIO's 1946 convention at Atlantic City and the 1947 convention at Boston had both urged help to the war-scarred countries of the world.

Carey quoted from Pres. Murray's speech to the convention at Boston explaining CIO policy.

He went on to quote from speeches by leaders of the CIO, the French and the Russian unions at the London and Paris world trade union confabs in 1945—all of them expressing need for economic cooperation to bring stability and peace.

PRES. MURRAY'S 10-point program on foreign aid—which calls for generous help to Europe through a capable administrative agency and without political pressures—was cited as part of CIO's program of developing the help-Europe plans in the most democratic way possible.

A principal point in the CIO speech was addressed to the fears expressed by the Russians and by some labor officials from western European countries that the Marshall Plan would be used as an instrument of Wall Street imperialism.

But, Carey said, a CIO survey of attitudes on the Marshall Plan by public organizations shows "wide support among farm organizations, labor, veterans, religious bodies, the general public and civic organizations."

And the chief opposition is from "conservative business organizations such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the Wall Street Journal, the National Industrial Conference Board, which all reveal cautious hesitation."

With the exception of the Progressive Citizens of America, which opposes the government aid program, Carey noted that "the more liberal groups are, the more they support it; and the more conservative groups are, the more they oppose it.

"On this analysis, any claim that the Marshall Plan is a Wall Street creation is opposite to the truth. Wall Street aims at saving money for tax reduction instead of foreign spending."

"Was it Wall Street that fought, made the sacrifices and paid for the war?" Carey asked.

"The amount of U. S. lend-lease aid to the USSR through June 30, 1947, has been $10,982,089,000. The amount of UNRRA aid, with U. S. participation, has been $150 million. Is this the language of Wall Street? Has it been Wall Street that has provided relief to the world since the end of the war?"

"I am here to talk to you not about ideologies, because we have no American ideologies to export," Carey concluded, "but to talk about food, and coal, and fertilizers, and agricultural machinery, and power plants and steel.

"These are the things you want, these are the things the people of America want to provide . . ."

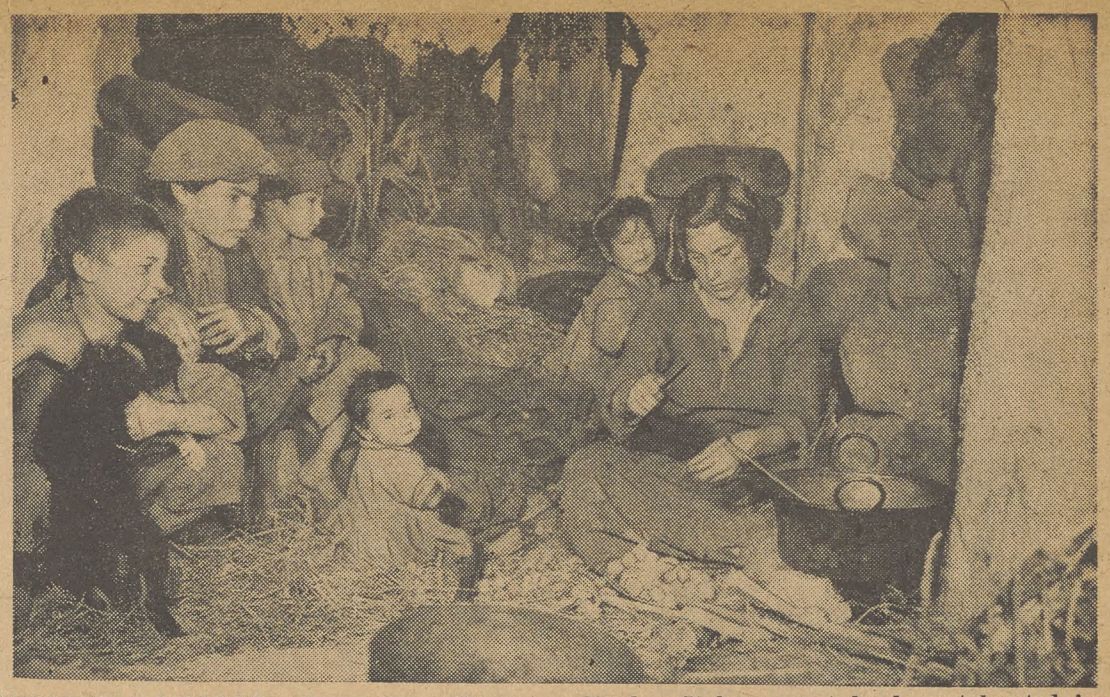
If there are objections to such a program, he added, the unions which belong to the World Federation should consult among themselves, bring up points of difference or difficulty, and seek to get improvement.

ROSENBLUM, a WFTU vice-president since the death of Sidney Hillman, told reporters on his return to the U.S. from the Paris meeting that the CIO had called for acceptance of the Marshall Plan by European unions as "the sole means of aiding and rehabilitating their economy.'

The Amalgamated official was sharply critical of John Foster Dulles, advisor to Sec. of State Marshall, for coming to France to confer with Gen. De Gaulle. De Gaulle has no position in the French government, and his party —which scored heavy victories in recent French city elections—has been accused by many democratic groups of favoring some form of fascism.

MOST disturbing, Rosenblum said, was the war talk heard all over Europe.

"I was aghast," he declared upon his return to New York, "to find highly-placed persons talk in terms of inevitability of atomic warfare by the United States, or bacteriological warfare by the Soviet Union.



WORLD CRISIS: Starvation, disease, chaos are problems which the world must quickly meet. Conditions like those shown in this picture from Naples, Italy, cannot be long tolerated in a civilized world. British Union Congress Has Policy Like CIO's

A program patterned closely after that of the CIO in calling for democratic aid to Europe without political pressure has been developed by the powerful British Trades Union Congress.

The TUC's General Council

WFTU Work

EUROPEAN aid was not the only problem discussed by the World Federation of Trade Union executive meeting in Paris.

One important resolution voiced solidarity with labor organizations in "Brazil, Cuba, Chile and all other countries of Latin America in which trade union liberties are passing through a crisis."

That sort of situation "gravely endangers" democratic regimes, the WFTU said, in urging all its affiliates "to lend their moral support to Latin American organizations" whose rights are in danger.

"The WFTU will continue to consider as affiliated all those Latin American organizations which have so far belonged to it, regardless of the legal standing they may be given in their respective countries as a result of the repression to which they are at present subjected," the statement said.

The question of unity of German labor unions also came up for study at the meeting, in which CIO was represented.

The WFTU asked the four-power allied control council in Berlin to authorize establishment of a liaison bureau between the WFTU and the German unions; that the occupying powers give "every facility" in each zone to allow the unions to carry on their business; that the four powers permit the German unions to form a national trade union federation when the unions wish to do so.

After a report by Gen. Secy. Louis Saillant, the WFTU voiced its strong support for "the Indonesian people in their struggle for national indepenrence" and called upon the UN to take immediate steps "to maintain for the Indonesian people their republican regime and (to) assure their national independence."

praised the "statesmanlike" approach voiced by Sec. of State George Marshall in his speech at Harvard last summer, when he indicated the U. S. would help a cooperative program by the European nations for rebuilding the Continent.

The TUC leaders said they are "confident that Britain will make every contribution called for in the Paris conference report." They "cordially congratulated" American labor for its work on the Harriman Committee, of which CIO Sec. Treas. Carey was a leading member.

U. S. unions made a contribution "not only to an understanding of the European position, but in the effort made to find a satisfactory method by which the necessary relief can be afforded by the U. S.", the TUC declared.

At the same time, the TUC warned that democratic rights of the countries receiving help must be respected.

The TUC said it "appreciates that while the American people will require assurances that relief under the general plan will be effectively administered, they consider it essential that conditions will not be imposed which will infringe the sovereignty of the States concerned.

French and CIO Swap Views

LEADERS of the CIO and of the French General Confederation of Labor (CGT) swapped views and ideas on the aid-to-Europe program at a meeting of the French-American trade union committee, held in Paris late last month.

The meeting followed executive sessions of the World Federation of Trade Unions. The French-American confab had originally been scheduled for New York, but were held in Paris when the State Dept. refused to allow two of the French union leaders into this country for more than two days, on grounds that they are Communists.

At the Paris meeting, the French union officials pointed out that the CGT's executive board had voted earlier to condemn the Marshall Plan. Nevertheless, they agreed to a full discussion of the entire problem with the CIO officials.

An official statement issued after the meeting noted that a "regular exchange of information" had been agreed by the French and American labor groups so "that each of them will be up to date on the other's activities."

The committee noted the "strong solidarity which links the two organizations for the carrying out of principles of the WFTU, and for the carrying out of the decisions" taken by the world labor group.

Two Cuban Sugar Workers Visit

Two officials of a newly established leadership of the Cuban sugar workers' union last week visited Washington CIO headquarters to explain the island's need for sizeable sugar exports to the United States.

The two men, Rafael Gonzalez and Honorio Herrero, described the Cuban economic situation to Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and to Sec.-Treas. David McDonald of the United Steelworkers. They are in Washington to appear at Agriculture Dept. hearings where changes in the sugar import quotas are being held.

Cuba has been gripped by a strong inflation process, and if the country's exports of sugar to the United States are cut, it will be faced with a serious economic crisis.
